"DIRECT MAIL" COSTS

HIP-DEEP in June and the greenery of Central Park is dotted with shirt-sleeved clerks taking their midday ease off in the dizzy distances below the HERALD's windows. Only two things at the moment are keeping us, too, off the grass. One is a desk piled considerably with too much to read, and the other is a waste basket along side already filled to the spilling point before noon with the too-much-to-read that has already been glanced at and tossed past.

We've been reading a deal this day about waste and efficiency and things like that concerned with salvation of business, written to us in form of tract and circular and imitation-hand-made typewriting and broadsides. And, what with the wordy plethora of it, and the humidity and the loafing in the park, we are bored, bored by what the advertising gentry call "direct mail literature."

In the main we have always known that, with the possible exception of cancer cure sucker lists, direct mail is very costly advertising. Now that the postal rates on first and third class are going up fifty percent the wastes in this particular sector of merchandising are going to pile up to extraordinary sums unless some brave reform sets in. It being that kind of weather, we have paused to make a neat calculation on the corner of an otherwise immaculate desk blotter and discover, just by way of comparison, that if, for instance, one had something to say to motion picture exhibitors, about, let us suppose, a picture, or a machine, or a new stair carpet, he could do it with a full page display in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for quite a fraction less than 2 cents per exhibitor, or about half the cost of the postage stamp, under the new rate, that would be required to carry a circular or broadside.

Furthermore, we will bet our old editorial panama, that the page in the HERALD will stay out of the waste basket longer than any piece of "direct mail" copy that these learned eyes have seen in the motion picture industry in the current decade.

SALES CONVENTIONS

THE announced decision of Mr. Al Lichtman of United Artists not to hold a sales convention this year is an interesting departure from motion picture merchandising tradition. There has been among motion picture salesmen, in all ranks and capacities, a growing and silently accumulative conviction that the sales convention as an institution has tended all too often to more hurrah than to substantial results. The sales convention became an institution of the motion picture in an era when it was pridefully deciding that it was a great industry, and, it may be observed, in a period when the product and selling methods were more susceptible of convention influences. Today, as evidenced in many directions, the motion picture industry, as to output and salesmanship, cannot be programmed for a complete year or a complete season. More and more, selling is a per picture job, and convention methods cannot do so much about that.

KEYSTONE ECONOMICS

MR. CHARLES SPENCER CHAPLIN, who has grown famous and wealthy by his pantomimic representations of the "triumph of the boob," the survival of the under dog and the greatness of the little and the weak, has returned to his golden Hollywood from a world tour scattering up and down the Pacific coast utterances on a doctrine of economic salvation for the worried world. In substance Mr. Chaplin, declaring against the gold standard, asks for fiat money. His utterances are reminiscent of those ringing words of the late William Jennings Bryan in 1896, who was then observed to think that "the government can spit on a chip and call it money." Mr. Chaplin would never accept in a poker game the kind of international I.O.U.'s he advocates for world finance.

THE FIFTH BIG "W"

MR. KEN LONG, writing about advertising for showmen in Motion Picture Herald's Round Table Club section, remarks that there are four basic elements which should appear in every theatre advertisement: "Who, What, When and Where." Just for the moment one is to be entertained that the formula does not require the fifth and final demand that good editors make on reporters expressed as "Why?" Advertising fortunately does not have to ever say why.

HINTERLAND BACK TO NORMAL

"THE moving picture is the most damnable and hellish influence in Canada," the Reverend Mr. Anton Cedarholm "of California" thundered at a lecture audience at the Ambassador Baptist Church in Windsor, Ontario, the other evening. "A woman who smokes a cigarette indicates by such conduct that she will do anything," was another of his pearls of thought. The press records that the Reverend Mr. Cedarholm "was assisted by his brother, Hilmore E. Cedarholm, who performed on the piano, mandolin and a novel instrument called the musical glasses, a collection of cut glass goblets giving forth a musical sound when rubbed with the fingers." Someway this item soothingly assures us that the world is getting back to normal.

A PICTURE OF GOVERNMENT COSTS

The two charts on this page are based on comparative statistics of government costs. That above shows the growth of the cost of government between the years 1890 (along about the time the motion picture came into being) and the present; while the other graph compares the costs of Federal, State and local governments.

¶ The Increase in the Price Paid to Be Governed as Traced Through Statistics Vital to an Industry Now a Major Subject of Further Taxation

By TERRY RAMSAYE

WHAT with its recent concerns about taxation, and the inevitable new tax problems which are to come, the motion picture industry, itself so much twitted on the subject of efficiencies and economies, is just now entitled, as one of the greatest of American industries, to become somewhat "government conscious."

An acid observer might remark, after surveying the figures, that the great mass business of the motion picture appears to be quite as solvent, quite as soundly conducted as the great mass business of government —to state the comparison with great generosity to government.

In behalf of this eye-minded industry of the motion picture, we here present some altogether exciting facts about the business of government and its trends in these United States in a simple graphiological form, so that "he who runs may read," or maybe we should say, "so that he who reads may run." From 1890 to date, which is roughly the period of the origin and rise of the motion picture, the cost of government per capita has increased from about $13.50 to $124. In spite of the vast increase in population, it costs us about ten times as much per person per annum. One may ask if it is ten times as much fun to live in this country now as it was in 1890?

But before we get overheated and put all the responsibility on Washington, it will be advisable to give consideration to some slight analysis of that crescendo of totals. The National Industrial Conference Board, the statistics of which enjoy a substantial repute, has (as charted below on this page) the precise figures for the Federal, State and the City governments per capita for—it just chances—from 1913 to 1929, or the precise era in which the motion picture rose with the dawn of the future to its grand climax of prosperity.

There, it will be observed, that what goes on at Washington, occupying so vast a proportion of the publicity limelight, is relatively less when measured up against the astonishing figures for City and local governments in general, which after all take up a half of the total cost of all government.

It is perhaps just as well that the motion picture as a medium of expression should become aware of government. Just now there is a gleam of possible significance in the MGM production, "Washington Show," which is given preliminary attention in this issue by Mr. Leo Meehan, Hollywood representative of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Paramount has scheduled two productions for the new season, "The Phantom President" and "The Mirrors of Washington." Just all in good fun, it is possible such pictures make our statesmen a trifle more aware of the motion picture as the great vital medium serving the world's greatest audience.

WARNERS ASK COURTS TO DROP ERPI'S COMPULSORY SERVICE FEES

Suit Against A. T. & T., Western Electric and ERPI Also Seeks Decree That Reproducers Are Sold, Not Leased, to Theatres

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., through the Stanley Company of America, a theatre subsidiary, on Monday asked the United States District Court at Wilmington to abolish compulsory weekly charges for servicing sound reproducers made by Electrical Research Products, Inc., and to obtain a decree that the equipments supplied by Erpi are actually sold and are not leased as stipulated in contracts.

The suit was filed against American Telephone & Telegraph Company. Western Electric Company, Inc., an affiliate of A. T. & T., and Electrical Research, which is a subsidiary of Western. Immediately following announcement of the action, H. G. Knox, vice-president of Erpi issued the following statement:

> "The charges made in this complant are not new but are merely part of the series of charges developed by Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and various of its subsidiaries during the past four years. In our view the complaint has no merit. We shall be glad to have it decided."

Warners claim that the conspiracy charged in the action had its inception in wartime when the patent pooling agreement was entered into between General Electric Company, Radio Corporation of America, A. T. & T., Western Electric, Westinghouse and others.

Warners Make Announcement

First announcement of the suit came from Warner Brothers in a statement issued from the home office in New York on Monday night. According to this statement: "The complaint alleges that the transaction between Erpi and the theatre is put in the form of a lease by Erpi for the purpose of enabling the latter to exert greater control over the use of the equipments by reserving the right to restrict the use of the equipments whenever it chooses to do so to the reproduction of its licensees, talking motion pictures and also for the number of exacting service charges of an exorbitant amount and compelling the exhibitor to purchase repair parts at excessive prices. The complaint further alleges that the engineers who inspect the equipments condemn parts and require the replacement of those parts, for which replacement the exhibitor is charged at unreasonable prices and that in many instances the parts so condemned by the inspectors have been resold to other theatres."

It was said by Warners that "the relief sought by the Stanley Company is based upon allegations of conspiracy of the A. T. & T. Company, Western Electric and Electrical Research Products in violation of the Sherman law as a result of which it is claimed that the defendants have established a monopoly in the business of supplying recording and reproducing equipments and further that the requirements that repair and replacement parts be purchased exclusively from them, is a violation of the Clayton law. Treble damages are claimed for the difference between the amounts paid to Erpi and the amounts for which the repair part items in question could be purchased in the open market."

George Quigley, attorney and president of Vitaphone, said: "This is a test case for all theatres to determine the status of service charges, which no theatre wants."

The lines of battle between Warner Brothers and Western Electric were drawn soon after the beginning of sound, in July, 1926. After some five years of secret conflict the war broke out into the open last year when Warners charged that $50,000,000 was due the corporation from Erpi on unpaid royalties on sales of disc recording by Electrical Research, in accordance with the agreement entered into when the Warner corporation undertook the commercialization of Western Electric's talking picture device in 1926-27.

The royalty claim is now in the hands of a special arbitration committee composed of Nathan Miller, former governor of New York; Frank Hogan, of Washington, D. C., and Judge Hiscock, of the New York Court of Appeals. Arbitration proceedings on the royalty demands commenced in New York on September 14, 1931. Secret sessions have been held behind locked doors. Neither Warners nor Erpi have indicated at any time the nature of testimony or the progress made by the arbitration board. Some few weeks ago the arbitrators decided to take a summer recess, voting to resume their work in the fall.

At the beginning of the sessions it was generally believed that the proceedings would eventually find their way into the courts. Specifically, Warner Brothers demanded that the seven per cent rate of royalty payments on disc recording should be raised to 10 per cent. Last year Electrical Research paid Warners $900,000 in royalties.

Mr. Quigley denied reports which followed announcement of the Wilmington suit indicating that the current action against A. T. & T. and its affiliates has a bearing on the royalty arbitration. He also vigorously denied that the suit is intended as a means of strengthening the company's $50,000,000 royalty claim.

"Has No Merit," W. E. Subsidiary Declares of Complaint Citing Conspiracy and Monopoly in Talking Picture Field

Withhold Intentions

Erpi's sound contracts with theatres are for a ten-year period, during which time the equipments are leased. Executives of that company would not discuss what the company intends doing at the expiration of the life of these contracts, which will begin to terminate in four years.

Since early in 1932, Erpi has had published in the motion picture trade press a series of institutional advertisements through which it endeavored to educate theatre owners in the policy of compulsory servicing and of the economic phases involved. On March 5th the company explained to exhibitors in an advertisement that out of every dollar spent by a theatre on servicing, 54.1 per cent is spent "for the inspection service that prevents trouble—rendered by 600 men traveling 5,720,000 miles a year;" 13 per cent is spent "for emergency and appointment calls, which would be greater except for the preventive inspection service;" 13 per cent for "maintenance of 35 branch offices, 173 service points and $750,000 stock of spare parts which make possible immediate emergency repairs, quick replacements;" 4.6 per cent "for replacements, repairs and improvements made at Erpi cost and for maintenance of a Bureau which reduced repair costs 46 per cent in 1931—saving exhibitors $750,000;" 4.3 per cent "for general administration and engineering which make possible efficient nationwide service and uniform quality protection;" 11 per cent "for protection against fire loss—assuring complete replacement immediately without cost to exhibitor."

"FEE VOLUNTARILY REDUCED": ERPI

At that time the company said: "Five years of Erpi service experience made this economic dollar division possible. Experience with more than 8,000 theatres proved to us that further reducing the number of preventive calls means increased emergency and appointment calls. To reduce branch points and stocks would endanger maintenance of service—which would prove costly to the exhibitor. Erpi's protection against fire loss by immediate replacement without loss of time is an economy of Erpi service. All economies made possible by five years of developing the present efficiency of Erpi service have been reflected in repeated and voluntary adjustments of the service charge," it was said.

The rate of Erpi service charge reductions from 1928 to 1931, which it was said resulted in savings of more than $7,000,000 yearly to exhibitors, was outlined in March as follows:

When Electrical Research Products took over merchandising of Western Electric reproducers, in 1928, the average weekly charges for servicing totaled $60. By a series of reductions the company has lowered that figure to the present weekly average of $20.

Warner Brothers contend in the bill that the Stanley Company, which operates theatres principally in Pennsylvania, has been damaged to the extent of $1,500,000 by reason of acts of the defendants and ask the court to decree the sound contracts to be illegal, to enjoin the defendants from enforcing it, and to decree that the reproducing equipment now in possession of the complainant is the property of the Stanley Company.

The official Warner statement said, in part:

"It appears from the complaint that the conspiracy charged against the defendants in violation against the anti-trust laws had its inception as far back as 1919, when the patent pooling agreement between the General Electric Company, the Radio Corporation of America, American Telephone & Telegraph Company, Western Electric Company, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., and other corporations was entered into. Under the terms of the patent pooling agreement as stated in the complaint filed today, the various patentees who were parties to the agreement allocated as between themselves various fields and activities with the intent of monopolizing or attempting to monopolize the business of those fields. The complaint alleges that on April 20, 1926, the Western Electric Company entered into the original agreement with the Vitaphone Corporation, under which the first talking motion pictures were produced. It is alleged that the agreement in question contains various provisions of a restrictive nature which require the Vitaphone Corporation to produce talking motion pictures exclusively with the use of Western Electric apparatus, to purchase apparatus only from Western Electric and to limit the distribution of its talking motion pictures produced under the license to those theatres only which had installed or later installed Western Electric apparatus. It is charged that similar restrictive clauses were inserted in the agreement with Fox Case Corporation, which was the second licensee of Western Electric to produce talking motion pictures, and that the effect of the provisions was to close the market to other manufacturers of reproducing equipment, as during the years 1926 and 1927 exhibitors who installed other than Western Electric apparatus could not obtain the only talking motion pictures then available for reproduction by reason of the restrictive clauses in the contracts referred to.

Exclusive License Ended

"It is also charged," according to the Warner statement, "that further to fortify their position in building up the business of manufacturing and supplying recording and reproducing equipments, ERPI was organized by the defendants and after its organization, by means of duress and coercion, compelled the Vitaphone Corporation to relinquish its original exclusive license to produce talking motion pictures and to accept a non-exclusive license. It is charged that such surrender by Vitaphone was in pursuance of a conspiracy between A. T. & T. and Western Electric Company and ERPI to further monopolize the business of furnishing recording and reproducing equipments. That thereafter, an effort was made which was subsequently successful to compel substantially all of the producers of motion pictures to become licensees of the defendants.

"As a preliminary to the further efforts to effect a monopoly of the business of supplying recording and reproducing equipments it is charged that, after the Vitaphone Corporation had been compelled to relinquish its original exclusive license and accept a non-exclusive license, ERPI entered into an agreement with E. C. Mills as agent and trustee for various music publishers under the terms of which ERPI secured a license covering the recording of copyrighted music. It is alleged that ERPI required the insertion of a clause in its contract with Mills by which the right to record music was limited to recording upon ERPI'S recording apparatus and that the various producers who became sub-licensees of ERPI under the Music Copyright Agreement were limited by this clause to the distribution of their talking motion pictures containing copyrighted music to those theatres which would reproduce the same on Western Electric equipment.

"The complaint states," continues Warners, "that the situation described existed during the years 1926 and 1927 and continued during the year 1928 so far as the restrictive provisions of the license agreement to producers of talking motion pictures were concerned, but that in 1928 the agreements were modified so as to permit the distribution of talking motion pictures produced under Western Electric license and with the use of Western Electric apparatus to theatres other than those which were equipped with Western Electric apparatus, provided the volume and quality obtainable were equal to the volume and quality obtainable by the use of Western Electric equipment. The complaint alleges further that notwithstanding this modification, the defendants have retained the right to require that the licensees desist from continuing to supply their product to theatres not equipped with Western Electric machines. As a result of the facts referred to, the complaint charges that exhibitors who desired to install reproducing equipments in their theatres had no option except to install Western Electric machines, and distributors were limited by their license agreements to supplying their product only to theatres equipped with Western Electric apparatus, and by the copyright music contract the exhibitor would receive no right to reproduce music nor would the producer have any right to distribute talking motion pictures containing music unless Western Electric reproducing equipment were used in the reproduction of the music.

"It appears from the complaint that as a condition to the granting of licenses to Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, United Artists, Universal and the various other producers who became licensees of Erpi, they were required to agree to equip their theatres exclusively with Western Electric equipment. It is charged that this condition, which it is alleged was exacted by Erpi as a prerequisite to granting licenses, was in violation of the Clayton Law and effected a restraint of trade in the business of manufacturing and supplying reproducing equipments to theatres.

"The complaint charges further that by reason of the position of monopoly which has been built up by the A. T. & T., Western Electric and Erpi as a result of the various contracts referred to in the complaint, the defendants were in a position to impose whatever conditions they saw fit upon producers and exhibitors."

The Stanley Company is represented in the suit by former Federal Judge Hugh M. Morris, Samuel E. Darby, Jr., and George E. Quigley, of Warner.

Electrical Research Wins Awards

In announcing court awards to Erpi against three theatres for back indebtedness and damages, Electrical Research Products stated on Tuesday that the company had no intention of wholesale legal action against exhibitors in arrears but that it would protect its interests by legal actions in cases where it was felt that a sincere effort was not being made to fulfill contractual obligations.

The three theatres against which judgment was obtained, the amount of the judgments and the courts are as follows: Washington theatre, Pittsburgh, $1,925; Court of Common Pleas, Alleghany County; Embassy, St. Louis, $6,749, U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Missouri; Crescent, Chicago, $2,641, Circuit Court.

"A significant feature of the awards is the allowance made for liquidation damages, as provided for in the ERPI contract," according to the company.

ALLIED ANALYZES FILM CONTRACTS; ANOTHER CONVENTION AT ALBANY

Action on Proposed Plan of Cooperative Buying Delayed After Initial Discussions At Atlantic City Meeting

By SHERWIN KANE

Analysis of the new contracts of Paramount, RKO, Fox and Universal was the highlight of the "Eastern Conference of Independent Exhibitors," sponsored by Allied States Association last week at Atlantic City. In a contest with the city's beach and boardwalk for exhibitor attention, the previously announced discussion of so-called industry "evils" and "ills" finished second best, two out of three days running, from Wednesday to Friday.

While the majority of visiting exhibitors were showing a marked preference for ocean-front diversions, others yet chose the calmer and cooler interior of the meeting hall and succeeded in carrying to a finish some of the meetings' announced objectives. These sessions, in fact, gave an appreciably better accounting than that finally given by the Allied board of directors, which met concurrently behind closed doors in another part of the St. Charles hotel. The directors disbanded without reporting any appreciable progress on the three subjects which, it had been announced, would command most of their attention. Those subjects were:

Withhold Action on Buying Plan

The cooperative buying of independent product by independent exhibitors.

Formation of plans for the participation of certain Allied units in the fall political campaigns, in the way of lending their screens to the support of certain approved candidates for public office.

The organization of "vigilance committees" to forestall what Allied fears will be a new attempt to reduce admission tax exemptions to ten cents at the next session of congress.

Some discussion of the plan for cooperative independent buying of independent product found its way into the general meeting at Atlantic City and appeared to receive the favorable reaction of exhibitors present. Leon Lee and Louis King, representing a group of Hollywood independent producers, came from the West Coast to confer with Allied directors on the subject. The only comment on the results of these discussions came from Abram F. Myers, general counsel of Allied.

"The cooperative buying plan," Mr. Myers said, "is too big a project to be completed here. It will require the canvassing of independent exhibitors nationally."

Opinion at the Atlantic City meetings was that in the event a successful buying plan could be evolved, not only would independent exhibitors avoid a possible product shortage next season and realize certain contract advantages, but Allied's national treasury, too, would be materially benefited.

In the meantime, an announcement from the offices in New York of Sidney E. Samuelson, president of Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey, and vice president of the national Allied unit, indicates that a second meeting will be held at Albany on July 12 to follow-up discussions held at Atlantic City and "to consider further problems of extreme and vital importance to the welfare of all exhibitors wherever located." The conference is being arranged by a committee of the recently formed Allied Theatre Owners of New York, Inc., consisting of A. Stone, H. H. Frieder, M. S. Silverman and Frank Walsh, ex officio.

Samuelson said that, "By the time the Albany convention is held, Allied leaders confidently expect to be able to make an announcement of great importance to all independent exhibitors on a subject which is at present in negotiation between Allied and an unnamed group. The seemingly unsolvable riddle of how the exhibitor is going to be able to stay in business with steadily decreasing box office receipts in the face of the forecasted demands by the distributors for film rentals as great as or greater than those obtained last year will be thoroughly gone into by the group of Allied leaders and the exhibitors attending at Albany. Allied leaders feel that were it not for the revenue received from independent houses throughout the country major distributors would be in a far worse situation than they find themselves in today. And it is the purpose of Allied to arm its members with facts and figures enabling each individual to resist to the utmost any unfair attempts to extort rentals beyond the capacity of the exhibitor to pay," he said.

Yamins to Resume Analysis

Nathan Yamins of Massachusetts will continue his analysis of contracts at Albany, covering those companies whose contract forms were not available at Atlantic City. Allied hopes that by the time the Albany conference is held more definite information will be avaiable on what is to be expected in the way of product from all distributors, and a forecast of what the exhibitor will have delivered to him will be given by P. S. Harrison, of New York.

The report of the conference committee on the exclusive run situation in Wilmington, Delaware, will be submitted at Albany, if the committee has concluded its investigation by that time.

Positive acceptances from Allied leaders to attend at Albany are said to have been received from Abram F. Myers, chairman of the national board of directors of Allied; and Sidney E. Samuelson. Others expected to attend include ranking officers of the New Jersey, New England, Western Pennsylvania, and other neighboring Allied units. "All independent exhibitors from New York and neighboring states are invited to attend on the same basis as at Atlantic City," according to Mr. Samuelson.

Commenting on the proposed buying plan before one of the open sessions, Abram Myers said: "In 1929 fully 3,800 contracts were mobilized among independent theatres for two producing companies. Although both companies were later prevented from fulfilling their contracts, that cooperative buying plan was a conspicuous success in that it succeeded in completely breaking the high film prices in existence then."

New Jersey Meetings Concurrent

In attendance at the directors' meetings, in addition to Mr. Myers, were Al Steffes, president of Allied States; H. M. Richey, general manager; Aaron Saperstein, Herman Blum, Sidney Samuelson, Nathan Yamins and Fred Herrington.

Meetings of the New Jersey Allied unit and of eastern independents were held concurrently, presided over by Mr. Samuelson. These joint meetings opened on Wednesday with about 50 exhibitors in attendance. The rest, Tom Goldberg, Baltimore exhibitor, remarked, had been obliged to delay their decision to attend the convention until they had counted Wednesday night's receipts.

About double the number of exhibitors was in attendance at the following day's sessions, which, both in point of numbers and accomplishments, made them the most businesslike of the convention. Attendance and interest dwindled again on Friday to the point where the convention was forced to adjourn an entire session ahead of schedule.

Analysis of the new contracts of four major companies by Nathan Yamins, and a subsequent address by Abram Myers marked Thursday's brisk sessions. Several objections to the contracts of Paramount, RKO Radio, Fox and Universal were cited.

Minor criticism of the new Paramount contract stated it failed to specify titles, directors and stories comprising the new schedule. It was also declared that under the contract Paramount is obligated to deliver only a minimum number of pictures, and these pictures need not all be produced by Paramount but could be pictures made by any other producer. Mr. Yamins warned exhibitors that if they filled in the admission price schedules provided in the Para-

A NEW IDEA FOR ECONOMY

An economy plan, at least original in concept, has been evolved by A. G. Constant and William Tallman, who between them, own the three East Liverpool, Ohio, first runs, the State, Ceramic and American. Under the agreement, formulated as a result, it is said, of poor box office return recently, operation will be alternated every third week, two of the houses remaining dark, while the third remains open. The plan, the showmen say, will be continued through the summer. The Columbia, a subsequent run house, continues its seven-day operation.

Second Sessions on July 12 Called to Consider Issues Further; Arranged by New Allied Group in New York

BROWN TO LEAVE RKO AUGUST 1: AYLESWORTH

NBC and RKO President Backs Franklin in Plunkett Case; Expresses Satisfaction With Selznick on Production Affairs

Hiram S. Brown, who was succeeded in the presidency of RKO by Merlin H. Aylesworth, will leave the company on August 1, having promised to remain until that date, it was indicated by Mr. Aylesworth at an interview last Saturday in the offices of the National Broadcasting Company, at which members of the press plied the NBC and RKO executive with questions.

Mr. Aylesworth decisively cleared the air relative to the status of Joseph Plunkett, theatre division vice president, when he said he regarded as final the letter which Harold B. Franklin recently addressed to Mr. Plunkett informing him that he was to sever his connections with RKO on July 9. Though expressing regret that Mr. Plunkett refused to take up duties in Chicago, apparently at the request of Mr. Franklin, Mr. Aylesworth said, "Mr. Franklin is the president of the theatre companies and Joe Plunkett is one of his vice presidents."

The executive expressed approval of the plan for maintaining a home office executive at the production center, and indicated that B. B. Kahane, president of Radio Pictures, will remain on the Coast until the fall.

Satisfied With Selznick

Complete satisfaction on the part of Mr. Aylesworth toward the manner of David O. Selznick's conduct of production affairs as vice president of Radio, was indicated when he told the group with reference to Mr. Selznick, "I found him very reasonable. He is understanding and he is pliable on what we want done. I don't know the length of Selznick's contract," continued Mr. Aylesworth, "but I am going to make every effort to have him stay on the job."

The possibility of maintaining the average of negative costs at $225,000 was stressed by Mr. Aylesworth, dependent upon the continuance of the present rate of progress and the completion of all pictures planned. The executive scouted the possibility of Jesse Lasky joining RKO production and said he had heard nothing of RKO planning to acquire a 50 per cent interest in Fanchon and Marco, vaudeville unit producers on the Coast.

Offers NBC Facilities

A major problem which the industry as a whole must work out is the present condition wherein there are too many theatres in the country, Mr. Aylesworth pointed out. Thereby he repeated a remark from his recent address on the Coast, which brought forth a storm of comment from film circles on both edges of the continent. He refused to comment on that address or its reaction.

Mr. Aylesworth indicated that he has offered the radio broadcasting facilities of the National Broadcasting Company to the executives of Hollywood, which is in line with his expressed belief that radio can do considerable good in advancing the status of the industry with the public, "in exploiting new product, provided that product is good." Such cooperation is vastly important, Mr. Aylesworth declared. Provided film company radio programs possess a proportion of merit, Mr. Aylesworth indicated his willingness to give them time on the air.

Envisioning a hand-in-hand cooperation between the motion picture and television, when it becomes practical, the executive sees the development at least five years in the future, with no public demand for it at the moment, even if it were ready to market. There will be no slump in theatre attendance when television takes its place beside radio, in the belief of Mr. Aylesworth. On the contrary, television will be a stimulant to the motion picture industry. Sponsored television programs patterned after the present radio presentations, will be the order of the day of television's commercial and practical introduction to the public, Mr. Aylesworth indicated as his belief.

Allied Analyzes New Contracts

mount contract, so doing might give rise to complications in the event the exhibitor later saw fit to reduce his admission schedule. Exhibitors were also warned that Paramount's contract now specifies that the final showing of a picture must be completed by midnight of the last day of the exhibition contract and that if a show runs over the specified time limit the exhibitor could be construed to have violated the copyright.

RKO's Substitution Clause Discussed

In discussing the new RKO Radio contract, Mr. Yamins placed particular emphasis on that company's substitution clause, which, he said, appears to be new and may be copied by other companies. It provides, he said, that in the event a starring vehicle is substituted for another picture, or a star added to the cast of a scheduled picture, the exhibitor automatically loses all rights to the picture involved. No definition of a "star" is given in the contract, Mr. Yamins asserted. Further objections to the Radio contract involved availability and non-release clauses. In the new contract, he said, the availability clause provides that the exhibitor who has not played a picture within 60 days after its availability date cancels his contract and must pay for, but cannot play, the picture thereafter.

Objections to the Fox contract centered about cancellation, previewing and "miss-out" clauses. With this year's contract, Mr. Yamins said, Fox no longer authorizes any cancellations whatever, even though a picture might be deemed unsuitable for any particular audience. In addition, he asserted that the previewing of pictures the night before release is banned, and that under its new contract Fox is released from responsibility for the most frequent causes of "miss-out."

Two provisions of the Universal contract, both of which were objected to, were described by Mr. Yamins as "new to the industry." The company's new substitution clause, he said, permits the distributor to substitute any picture it chooses for any scheduled picture and obligates the exhibitor to pay the contract price of the original picture for the one substituted. The clause provides that as a result of an exhibitor grievance arising from a substitution, the complaint may be submitted to arbitration with the sole point to be arbitrated, that of the box office value of the submitted picture.

Cochrane Replies to Criticism

The convention criticism of the Universal contract was in direct contrast with the friendly and cooperative attitude in evidence at earlier Allied meetings, and which led, on several occasions in the past, to direct recommendations from the floor that independent exhibitors favor Universal on their buying schedules wherever possible.

R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, advised of the meeting's criticism of his company's contract, expressed amazement and said that he considered "a great injustice" had been done.

"We believed the contract to be exceptionally fair to both sides," he said. "Either it has been completely misinterpreted and misunderstood, or else it has been confused with some other contract." He indicated his willingness to meet with Allied leaders to discuss possible misinterpretations of the contract's provisions.

In addressing the convention immediately following the contract analyses, Abram Myers said: "These contract analyses show the deplorable state of the industry and its shameful disregard for the welfare of its outposts, the small theatres.

"Contract demands have been pushed so far that the independents are more closely welded together than ever before. I am not sure," he said, "but that some companies are not going so far as to make their contracts unilateral in law as they already are in fact. There may come a time when they will have no enforceable contracts whatever."

Mr. Myers added later that Allied's position on the 5-5-5 contract is unchanged since the company's Detroit convention, at which time it was declared that the uniform contract in its present form was no longer acceptable to Allied, due to far-reaching changes which have occurred within the industry during the two years which have elapsed since the contract was drawn.

The convention was also authorized after a lengthy discussion of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's exclusive-run policy in effect at Wilmington, Delaware, to make a thorough investigation of the effects of the policy and, if found inimical to independent interests, to sponsor a fund to combat it through advertising and publicity channels.

Double-featuring received the exclusive attention of an entire session of the convention, but neither resolutions nor recommendations materialized, due to an established policy of the New Jersey exhibitors' organization to refrain from instructing exhibitors on matters of theatre operation. The attitude of the convention, however, was overwhelmingly opposed to continuation of double-featuring.

37 OF 48 FEATURES ON MGM'S NEW LINEUP WILL BE STARRING VEHICLES

11 Other Features and 89 One and Two Reel Subjects Are Included on Program; Roach Scheduled for a New Series

The production and merchandising policies of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation will continue to be based on the principle of "the star's the thing." Thirty-seven of 48 feature productions to be released in 1932-33 will be starring or co-starring vehicles, supplemented by 11 other features and 89 short subjects. Hearst Metrotone News, issued twice weekly, is also on the program which was announced this week from the home office in New York.

"Grand Hotel" and "The Strange Interlude" are the highlights of the program.

Definite production data and titles of only three features are outlined by Metro, although the company listed titles and details of 17 story properties, books and plays from which that number of vehicles will be produced. "In accordance with its announced policy," the company said, "Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will make no conjectural advance announcement of the stars who will appear in these and other screen properties, but will obtain leading stellar talent available for each story as detailed plans are worked out." It is pointed out that "in many cases the potentialities of a story change as it has been prepared for the screen," and because of this, the company believes "it is wiser to defer casting plans a bit, rather than 'pigeonhole' a story to a certain star a year in advance."

Eighteen Stars Listed

Eighteen names appear on the company's new roster of stars. Many have been on the Metro lot for several years, but others, such as Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery, Jackie Cooper, Helen Hayes, and Jimmie Durante reached top screen ranking during the past year.

The list of stars, each of whom will appear in at least two vehicles during the coming season, includes Marion Davies, Joan Crawford, Norma Shearer, Marie Dressler, Clark Gable, Helen Hayes, Ramon Novarro, William Haines, Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper and Robert Montgomery.

John Gilbert, John Barrymore and Lionel Barrymore will make at least one starring production apiece. In addition, John and Lionel Barrymore will appear together in a picture, as will Marie Dressler and Wallace Beery. Buster Keaton and Jimmie Durante will be co-starred in two comedies, and Laurel and Hardy will make two full-length co-starring comedies.

"Grand Hotel," now entering its fourth month at the Astor theatre in New York, and "Strange Interlude," adapted from Eugene O'Neill's play with Norma Shearer and Clark Gable in the leads, are special releases included in the new season lineup. There will be four Cosmopolitan productions and one foreign film, "The Outsider."

"The Good Earth," which was awarded the Pulitzer prize as the best of fiction of the past year, and which Owen Davis has dramatized for the Theatre Guild, and "Reunion in Vienna," which was given the Megrue prize as the best comedy produced on the New York stage during the past season, are included in the list of story properties assembled for the new year.

Other literary works which will be transferred to the screen on the new schedule are W. Somerset Maugham's "The Painted Veil," a story with a background of modern China; "The Bugle Sounds," an adaptation of Major Zinovi Pechkoff's melodramatic story of foreign legion adventure; Peter Freuchen's "Eskimo," a drama of the Northland, now being produced by a company on location in the Arctic; "The Education of a Princess," adapted from the Literary Guild book by Grand Duchess Marie of Russia; "Rasputin," from the story about Russia's "Black Monk" by Alfred Henschke Klabund; and "The Sun of St. Moritz," from Paul Oskar Hocker's German novel in which a physician finds himself an accomplice to a murder.

Several Stage Plays Set

Dramatic properties which will reach the screen as part of the new MGM program include "La Tendresse," an adaptation of Henry Bataille's play presented in New York by Henry Miller some seasons ago; "Candlelight," adaptation of the Siegfried Geyer-P. G. Wodehouse comedy in which Margaret Lawrence and Leslie Howard appeared on the New York stage; "Felix," from the play by Henry Bernstein which ran for more than 400 performances at the Gymnas Theatre, Paris; "The Devil Passes," the Benn W. Levy play presented on Broadway during the past season; and "Turn to the Right," based on the comedy of several seasons ago by Winchell Smith and J. E. Hazzard.

Other stories which are on the new lineup are "The Marines Have Landed," "Mexico," an original story by Laurence Stallings; "Salute," an original scenario by Frederick Lonsdale; and "Tarzan and His Mate," a new Edgar Rice Burroughs story which will furnish Johnny Weissmuller with a follow-up to "Tarzan, the Ape Man."

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's short subject line-up for the season will comprise 89 releases, in addition to Hearst Metrotone News.

Schedule Many Shorts

Bracketed in the short feature schedule are 46 two-reel subjects and 43 one-reel films. These include the Hal Roach "Our Gang," Laurel-Hardy, Pitts-Todd, and Charley Chase comedies; Flip the Frog cartoons, FitzPatrick Traveltalks, and Sport Champions.

The new series of releases in the short subject division next year will be a new Hal Roach series, the Taxi Boys, a group of two-reel musical revues, several of which will be filmed in Technicolor, and a group of releases to be known as M-G-M Oddities.

In addition to their designated feature-length comedy, Laurel and Hardy will make four two-reel comedies. Charley Chase will be represented with eight comedy vehicles. "Our Gang" will make its customary eight releases, and Zasu Pitts and Thelma Todd, teamed by Hal Roach last season, will contribute eight new co-starring comedies. There will be 12 releases in the new Hal Roach Taxi Boys series, a venture which is described as running along the lines of out-and-out slapstick comedy.

Thirteen releases are announced in the new group of FitzPatrick Traveltalks, including a number of one-reel travel films dealing with Mexico, South America and the West Indies. Wrestling, hockey, polo and aquatic subjects are included in the new group of 12 Sport Champions, presenting champions and unusual backgrounds in the realm of sport.

Six M-G-M two-reel musical revues, which are described as condensed musical entertainment, will be released next season, four of the group being filmed in Technicolor. Twelve single reel Flip the Frog cartoon subjects are on the schedule, and six M-G-M Oddities. The latter group of novelty subjects will deal with unusual aspects of wild animal life.

In the meantime, Felix F. Feist, general manager of Metro sales, this week concluded the fourth and final of a series of four regional sales conventions, attended by district and branch managers from Philadelphia, Kansas City, Memphis and Los Angeles territories, respectively.

Players To Be Chosen in Many Cases at Production Time; Company Lists 18 as Stars; Several Novels on Schedule

PLAYING UPON HUMAN NATURE

Oddly interesting, particularly in these days of summer decline in box office receipts, is the apparently highly successful experiment in human psychology conducted by one A. McCarty, small town showman operating the Idle Hour theatre, in Mooresville, Ind.

Make certain first, Mr. McCarty advises, that the picture of the moment is a good film. On the program, slides and lobby sign is this legend: "This is not a Free Show. Come in and see the show, pay what you think its worth when you leave." Prior to the last reel of the picture, Mr. McCarty says he interrupts to inform the patrons that the cashier will be at the door prepared to make change, and again emphasizes that the show is not free. The Mooresville showman adds this note to the audience: "If there is anyone here that cannot give a dime or more, take the show on me."

DECISION PERILS FILM CONTRACTS IN KANSAS

Justice Burch of the Kansas Supreme Court Invalidates Distributors' Contracts with Theatre Owners in That State

All contracts between distributors and exhibitors in the state of Kansas may be invalidated as a result of a recent state supreme court decision sustaining a demurrer to a suit filed by United Artists against R. E. Mills, a former exhibitor of Chanute, Kansas, charging breach of contract. In sustaining the defendant's demurrer to the United Artists' suit, the Kansas court ruled that the distributors' contract was invalidated by a clause prescribing a minimum admission price at which the pictures sold might be exhibited and because the pictures were not first submitted to the Kansas censor board for approval.

All the larger distributing companies indicated they would join in a motion for a rehearing before the state supreme court. Wallace Sutherland, attorney for the Kansas City Film Board, said the decision affects every other distributor of pictures in Kansas.

The United Artists' suit involved the old form of standard contract, and attorneys for the defendant sought to invoke the Thacher decree, which invalidated arbitration as provided for in the old contract, as the basis of the defense. The court, however, passed over the arbitration clause with the single comment that its "provision for arbitration was held to be void as in restraint of trade by the United States supreme court. Plaintiff contends the paragraph in the contract is severable, and the lawful provision of the contract may be enforced."

The court went on to declare, however, that the contract was made unlawful by the stipulation of a minimum exhibition price which, it held, violates the laws relating to combinations in restraint of trade and also violates Kansas state laws. This minimum admission stipulation is a part of existing contracts of all major companies, it was said, and opinion holds that the court's ruling applies to existing contracts as well.

Kansas exhibitors are most disturbed, however, over the ruling that approval of pictures by the censors is "a condition precedent to the existence of a lawful contract." Under this ruling, a distributor could not legally enter into a contract with an exhibitor, or sell pictures in Kansas, until the pictures in question, with the exception of newsreels, had been approved by the state censors.

The court ruled that this law had not been complied with and that therefore, the contract was invalid and illegal. The censorship statute cited is a Kansas police regulation.

Three main grounds for a rehearing were set out by attorneys for United Artists and other major distributing companies in filing a motion last Saturday for a new hearing in the case in which the Kansas supreme court held film contracts illegal.

The film companies have the unquestioned right to fix the admission price under the copyright laws, attorneys for the distributors contend. Further, they claim that by ruling the price fixing provision of film contracts violates the Kansas statutes, the court deprives distributors of their constitutional rights.

The third and what is considered the most important point brings up the question of censorship. The supreme court ruled United Artists failed to show the films contracted for by R. E. Mills were approved by the censors, as required by the statutes. Attorneys for the distributors contend this pertains only to contracts made in Kansas, but that the contract with Mills was accepted in New York and therefore the contract was made in New York and not governed by Kansas laws.

A decision on the motion is expected in about three weeks.

A copy of the original petition included with the abstract reveals that United Artists sued Mills for payment for nine pictures bought in January and June, 1929. The company sought to recover a total of $479.36, including interest up to the time the suit was filed.

Newcastle Receiver Suit is Withdrawn

M. P. Newcastle has withdrawn his receivership suit against Warner in chancery court at Wilmington, Del., in the form of a motion of dismissal by Clarence A. Southerland, Wilmington counsel for Mr. Newcastle. Counsel for Warner had consented to the motion.

Mr. Southerland indicated that his client is content to prosecute his claims against Warner as co-complainant in the suit recently filed by Harry Koplar. Mr. Newcastle has intervened in the Koplar bill. The withdrawal leaves only one pending receivership suit against the company.

Selig Succeeds Lewis As Paramount Ad Chief

Cliff Lewis, Paramount director of advertising, has resigned after many years with the company, and has been replaced by Al Selig, former publicity and advertising director for Columbia, and prior to that, in a similar post with Tiffany.

Mr. Lewis as yet has completed no plans for the future, though he is understood to be negotiating.

Morris Sails; Brower in East

Sam E. Morris, vice president of Warner Brothers Pictures, sailed for Europe on Wednesday aboard the Europa.

N. H. Brower, Warner's district manager in Los Angeles, arrived in New York this week for conferences with home office executives.

Roxy Closing to Reorganize House

The Roxy theatre in New York closes Thursday, June 29, for a period of four weeks, re-opening July 29, according to an announcement from Harry G. Kosch, receiver, on Tuesday. Pictures from various companies will be presented at the house, when it re-opens, the statement indicates. Several innovations in lighting, sets and presentations are to be prepared during the closed period. The stage shows will continue under the direction of Clark Robinson and Russell E. Market, while Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld will recruit an entirely new symphony orchestra.

The decision to close pending reorganization is understood to have been reached during conferences participated in by R. A. Newman, representing the Continental Bank & Trust Company, mortgage trustee; Carlos L. Israels, attorney for the bondholders' committee and Nicholas Roberts, chairman; Alfred L. Rose, attorney for Mr. Kosch, as receiver, and Herbert Lubin, at present managing director of the theatre. United States district judge Francis J. Caffey last week had refused to approve a new receivership plan submitted and the conferences of attorneys followed. The court had threatened to throw the theatre into bankruptcy unless an agreement was reached at an early date. Mr. Kosch on Tuesday was named receiver in foreclosure by Judge Caffey, which is believed to settle the problem of selling receiver's certificates to permit the theatre to remain open indefinitely after the four-week period.

Alliance Agent Is Guilty

Cornelius McNerny, Lord's Day Alliance agent arrested recently on a charge of extortion in the office of Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the TOCC, New York, was found guilty in general sessions court this week. Sentence was to be pronounced on Thursday.

Private Screening of "Madness"

A private screening of "American Madness" was given by Columbia Pictures in the Waldorf Astoria on Wednesday for exhibitors of the New York district. A buffet luncheon followed.

Plans New Frank Buck Film

Amedee J. Van Beuren plans a second jungle film to be produced in the Far East by Frank Buck, producer of "Bring 'Em Back Alive." Release of the film on RKO Radio's 1933-34 schedule is anticipated, under the title, "Wild Cargo."

Court Denies Review

The supreme court at Columbus, Ohio, has denied a review in the case of Afifa Abowd, Fostoria, Ohio, against the Minister Fire Insurance Company, seeking to recover $25,000 on a "binder" of insurance dated November 4, 1930, covering the Marvin theatre, Findlay, Ohio, which was destroyed by fire November 5, 1930.

CONTINGENT PACTS WITH WRITERS OUT

Academy Interprets Code of Practice in Decision on a Case Brought by a Writer Against a Coast Producer

An important interpretation of paragraph two of the Writer-Producer Code of Practice was announced during the week by the Conciliation Committee of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, in the course of a decision on a case brought by a writer against a producing company.

The case involved a contract in which the company was to make a flat payment of $10 to the writer for a treatment, plus a "bonus" of $190 upon acceptance of the treatment; $10 for the first draft of continuity, $10 for the second draft, and a bonus of $330 upon acceptance of the entire continuity.

The particular points at issue were said to have been adjudicated by the committee to the satisfaction of both parties; and the committee also issued the following statement for the guidance of other writers and producers:

> "It was the clear intent of the writers and producers, when they formulated and adopted paragraph two of the Code of Practice, to prohibit any arrangement which makes payment for a writer's work contingent upon the acceptance or approval of the producer. It is equally clear that the force and effect of any such contract as the company made with Mr. ——, is to make the writer's compensation dependent, in a large measure, upon the company's approval.
> "Such an arrangement, therefore, is not ethically compatible with the intention of the Writer-Producer Code, and tends to undermine and nullify the respect in which the whole Code is held by the motion picture community generally.
> "We feel sure that, as one of the signatories of the Code, the company will abide by the interpretation of Paragraph Two, we have given on behalf of the Academy, and will refrain in future from entering into any form of contingency contract with a writer."

The writers and producers of Hollywood adopted the Code of Practice on April 14, 1932, the Academy ratifying the code on April 21 by action of the board of directors. It became effective on May 1, having been drafted by Irving Thalberg and B. P. Schulberg, for the producers, and Waldemar Young, Ralph Block, Martin Flavin, Oliver H. P. Garrett, Benjamin Glazer and Al Cohn, for the writers. George Cohen was counsel for the committee.

The code was accepted by the Academy as "a valid instrument in the motion picture industry to be administered" by the Academy. At the time of ratification, the executive secretary of the Academy was designated to act as special representative in the installation and maintenance of the code.

Columbia, Fox, Feature Productions, Metro, Paramount, RKO, Tiffany Studios, Universal and Warners signed the agreement, which writers accepted through a special committee headed by Waldemar Young, chairman, and Ralph Block, Clara Beranger, Al Cohn, Bartlett McCormack, Martin Flavin, Oliver H. P. Garrett, Benjamin Glazer, Howard J. Green and Percy Heath, Gerrit Lloyd and John Meehan, Herman Mankiewicz, Jane Murfin, J. K. McGuinness, Richard Schayer, James Seymour, Frank Woods and Carey Wilson.

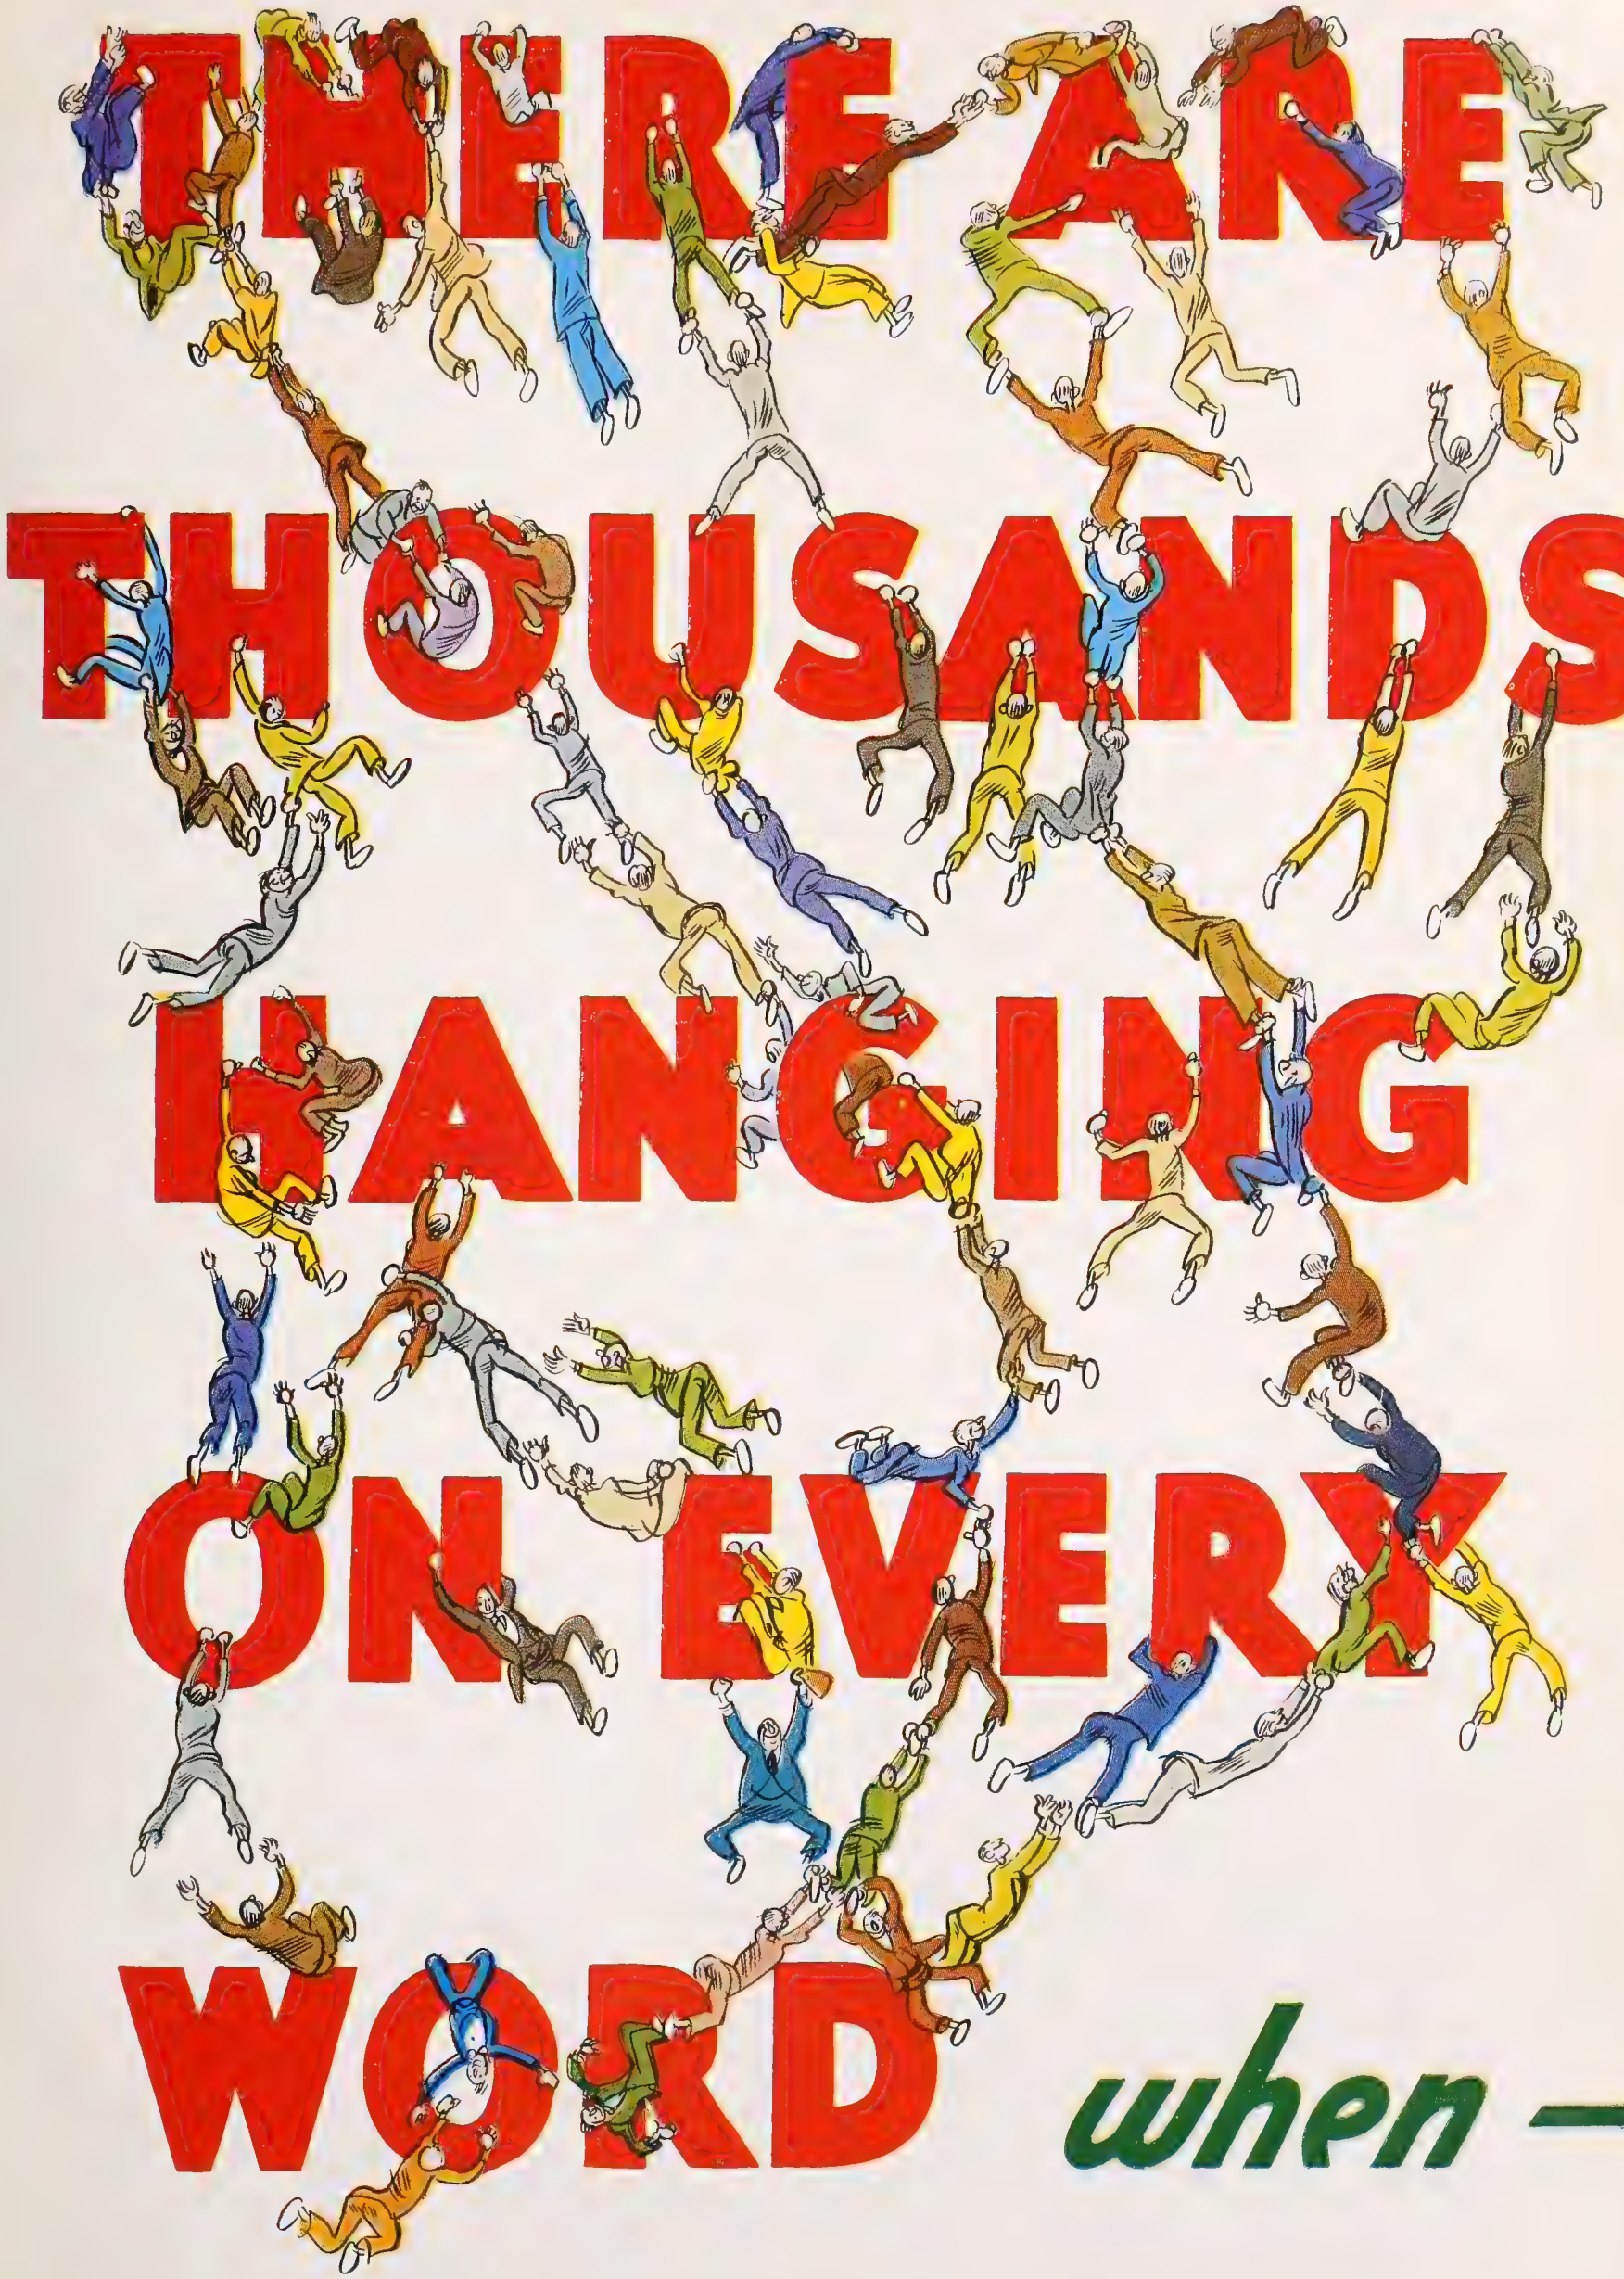
Paramount Publix Reports $2,450,911 Quarter Loss

Paramount-Publix Corporation, in its consolidated statement just issued, which includes profit and losses of subsidiary companies, reports a combined net loss of $2,450,911.59 for the three months to April 2, 1932. This loss is after deducting interest, depreciation and all other charges and reserves.

During the year a reserve was provided for depreciation of fixed assets amounting to $3,556,283.04, of which $3,033,467.15 was charged off, and the balance of $522,815.89 was capitalized to the film production cost. For the three months to March 28, 1931 the corporation reported consolidated net income of $3,515,652.22.

Eberhardt to Introduce Writers at AMPA Meeting

Walter Eberhardt, of Western Electric, who turned literary with publication recently of "Dagger in the Dark," will act as master of ceremonies at the weekly luncheon and meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, at Sardi's on Thursday. Mr. Eberhardt, taking the gavel from Ed Finney, president, will introduce Thayer Hobson, president of the William Morrow Publishing Company; Jacob Wilk, scenario editor for Warner Brothers; Florence Strauss, scenario editor of Fox Films, and Harriet Henry, author of "The Rakish Halo."



New Stanley Corporation Plans 70 Films for Year

The Stanley Distributing Corporation, just organized by Ira H. Simmons, who is president and general manager, will have a 1932-33 program of 70 films, including six features, 12 novelty features and 52 short subjects.

The company will operate in the independent field as a producing and distributing organization, with headquarters at 729 Seventh avenue, New York. The first feature will be ready for release shortly.

Educational in Coast Meet

Educational opened its Western sales convention at Hollywood on Monday, with Joe Brandt, Joe Skirboll and Sol Edwards as principal speakers. Mr. Brandt will remain on the Coast for about one month organizing the staff and initiating production on World Wide product.

37 STAR PICTURES

2- JOAN CRAWFORD—In "Possessed" and "Letty Lynton" she reached a point where she ranks with the top money-makers of the screen. She's in "Grand Hotel" too.

2- NORMA SHEARER—As in the past, this great star appears in Big Productions worthy of her box-office importance. She is in "Strange Interlude."

2- MARION DAVIES—No expense spared in the purchase of her vehicles, their production and national promotion.

2- CLARK GABLE—His work in "Strange Interlude" climaxes the public demand for his stardom. Another star created by M-G-M!

1 JOHN GILBERT—It is the sincere belief of M-G-M that his new powerful vehicle will reveal John Gilbert in the full blaze of his greatest glory!

2- HELEN HAYES—The motion picture public, retaining in its heart the memory of "The Sin of Madelon Claudet," awaits the return of this great actress!

2- WILLIAM HAINES—The sincerity of his performances in his last two releases forecasts a great future for the new Bill Haines!

2- RAMON NOVARRO—The undiminished drawing power of this handsome star is based on his unfailing charm in fine stories. "Huddle" for instance!

2- MARIE DRESSLER—It would be difficult to estimate the amount of joy, laughter and soul thrill that she has given the world. God bless Marie Dressler!

2- WALLACE BEERY—In the past season his enormous following has been tremendously multiplied by his unforgettable "Hell Divers" and "The Champ."

1- JOHN BARRYMORE—From exhibitors, from critics, from the public, M-G-M is proud to hear that John Barrymore as an M-G-M star is a new star!

1- LIONEL BARRYMORE—No matter what the role may be, this great actor breathes life into it, makes it memorable, builds ever greater his following!

1- JOHN & LIONEL BARRYMORE—The successful strategy of co-starring them in "Arsene Lupin" assures an eager audience for their next one together.

1- DRESSLER & BEERY—By exhibitor command! We yield to the request that they act together again as they did so well in "Min & Bill!"

2- BUSTER KEATON-JIMMY DURANTE—The growing receipts of their co-starring comedies is proof that M-G-M has a new, smash comedy team!

2- LAUREL-HARDY—Ever since "Pardon Us" theaters have inquired "When will they give us more Laurel-Hardy feature length comedies." Here they are!

4- COSMOPOLITAN PRODUCTIONS—These nationally advertised All-Star subjects have consistently been real money-makers!

2- JACKIE COOPER—M-G-M has a brand new idea for this glorious boy star that will be a sensation of the season to come!

2- ROBERT MONTGOMERY—A personality who has done much in the past year to further build his well grounded popularity with the public!

HAVE YOU EVER APPLAUDED AN ANNOUNCEMENT IN A TRADE AD ?

Here is News that will win exhibitor cheers!

12 MARQUEE Productions from M-G-M next season—

WHEN M-G-M announces 12 Marquee Pictures it is an assurance backed by previous experience that you will get Big Productions, destined to be among the new season's important money pictures. That assurance is not guess work. It is borne out by the fact that when we made our first announcement of a similar group of pictures known as "The Lucky Seven" exhibitors received such attractions as "SHIPMATES", the picture that clinched stardom for Robert Montgomery; "SIN OF MADELON CLAUDET" the picture that brought Helen Hayes to box-office prominence; "THE EASIEST WAY", starring Constance Bennett; and other pictures.

THE ASSURANCE that M-G-M gives you Big Pictures in the Marquee group is borne out again by the fact that in the current season's Marquee line-up exhibitors received the year's outstanding picture, "TARZAN, THE APE MAN" creating the new star personality, Johnny Weissmuller, a production worthy of being Road-Shown. Star personalities featured in other Marquee pictures still to come in the current season are Lionel Barrymore and Helen Twelvetrees.

THE ORIGINAL purpose of M-G-M's Marquee Pictures was to allow a latitude in production that would not confine aggressive picture-making to ideas that in the course of 12 months might become sterile and out-dated. M-G-M refuses to be hampered by convention or hide-bound by tradition. Marquee Pictures are an expression of the forward-looking ideals of M-G-M.

BY EXTENDING its Marquee group to 12 pictures for the season 1932-33, M-G-M follows the logical development of a policy that has proven a real success. It will unquestionably be great news to the trade that in the coming season there will be a greater number than ever of these specialized productions, which in the past have been justifiedly the pride of the M-G-M studios.

"THE OUTSIDER" for M-G-M

By special arrangement with its producer, we have obtained "The Outsider", the widely heralded talkie of the play. "The Outsider" was a sensational hit during its long Broadway run. It was made in England and directed by Harry Lachman, who in association with Rex Ingram, produced many of the latter's greatest successes.

Typical METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER BOOK and PLAY PROPERTIES

TO state that the production plans of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer are of intense interest to every other studio is to state a truth which we are not first to express. We feel keenly the obligation which rests upon us as an outcome of our production policies of the past, our willingness to get off the beaten track, to create new trends, new ideas. We sincerely believe therefore that it is to the best interests of our customers to withhold, where it is necessary, a full exposition of our plans. Suffice it to say that the M-G-M standard of previous years in story selection and production daring—a high standard it has been—will be scrupulously maintained. For the time being we call your attention to these vehicles of importance among others owned by M-G-M and contemplated for production.

THE PAINTED VEIL—This novel by Somerset Maugham is rated high alongside of his thrilling narratives "Rain" and "The Letter". It ran as a serial in Cosmopolitan Magazine and thereafter enjoyed a wide book sale. It tells of a badly arranged marriage that leads the unhappy wife to seek the attention of another married man and follows her exciting adventures during an epidemic of cholera in China.

REUNION IN VIENNA—Robert E. Sherwood's robust, romantic, laugh-filled Broadway hit! Everybody wanted it, M-G-M got it! A reunion of the last remnants of Viennese nobility is to be held. Beautiful Elena, wife of the prominent Doctor, is invited. She hesitates to come, knowing that the dashing Archduke, her first lover will be there. Finally she goes and the consequences are thrilling!

THE GOOD EARTH—Even as we go to press this novel by Pearl S. Buck, the Year's Pulitzer Prize Novel, which appears on every best-seller list. Hundreds of thousands of copies have already been sold and the end is not in sight. Dramatic indeed is its story of a Chinese family, their trials through drought, famine, flood and revolution and their victory in the end by their love of the good earth to which they cling.

MEXICO—For months Laurence Stallings, co-author of "The Big Parade" and creator of many glorious tales, has worked on his giant drama of Old Mexico. In his narrative he has crammed romance of that tropic land, adventure, color and thrill. This fascinating locale has never been truly dramatized for the screen until now!

LA TENDRESSE—Typical of the intense emotional power which Henry Bataille builds into his stage successes is the love drama revealed in this story of a playwright and the actress for whom he writes his plays. The Henry Miller Theatre where "La Tendresse" played has been the scene of many outstanding Broadway hits, but few to compare in sheer, human thrill with this one!

RASPUTIN—A perfect subject for the M-G-M studios! A picture that requires Bigness in conception and casting. The story of the Mad Monk, so well known to the world, will come alive on the screen under the magic of M-G-M creation, with its pageantry of Russia's exotic court life before the revolution, the power of this hypnotist of passions among the noblest and most beautiful of women! Box-office indeed!

THE SUN OF ST. MORITZ—Clever story-sleuthing has uncovered this dramatic and romantic novel, the rage of the Continent. It takes place amidst the loves and luxuries of the Swiss Alps. A doctor through an unfortunate association comes under suspicion of murder. At St. Moritz circumstances which include a love affair, skiing adventures and a bob-sled accident clear his name. What a setting for a thriller!

THE EDUCATION OF A PRINCESS—The reason you see this book by Grand Duchess Marie of Russia on every best-seller list, selling by the thousands, is the same reason its screen version will pack theatres. Intensely genuine, it reveals how a princess in the course of two marriages, child-birth, war and revolution learns that human nature is the same in high places and low.

ESKIMO—Peter Freuchen's book has given M-G-M a great opportunity. First of all, it has a wonderful story based on the awakening of the Eskimo to the white man's moral code. Secondly, it permits M-G-M to develop that story with all the thrill, background and natural beauty of the North. M-G-M sent W. S. Van Dyke and a company to darkest Africa and brought back "Trader Horn". M-G-M has sent director Van Dyke and one of the largest film expeditions of history to the frozen North and the result will be another M-G-M milestone in screen Epics!

THE BUGLE SOUNDS—We might literally say about this picture that it is Four Years in Production! To adequately present Major Zinovi Pechkoff's celebrated novel of the Foreign Legion required tremendous research, patience in securing the right footage of Riff warfare, and a willingness to wait so that when this romance appears on the screen it will be something to marvel at!

CANDLELIGHT—New York will never forget the Gilbert Miller presentation of this daring, exquisite love drama as it was enacted with Gertrude Lawrence and Leslie Howard for a full season on Broadway. Translated from the German of Siegfried Geyer by P. G. Wodehouse it cleverly recounts the switch in positions of a Baron and his Valet. Briefly, the Baron's Lady and the Maid each find that love and passion survive even the most difficult social complexities!

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES—We cannot refrain from making mention here, among M-G-M story gems, of the perfect vehicle for one of Laurel-Hardy's feature-length comedies. The creation of original stories for screen comedians is a matter of careful thought. It was successfully managed in Laurel-Hardy's first long comedy "Pardon Us" but we may conservatively state that "Pack Up Your Troubles" now being produced by Hal Roach and M-G-M is one of the most ingenious, fast-moving, screamingly funny narratives ever written.

THE DEVIL PASSES — An outstanding S. R. O. play of the current Broadway season by Benn W. Levy. This young English dramatist whose succession of hits during the past three years has focussed the attention of the entire theatre world upon him, has truly reached the height of his dramatic genius in this amazingly unusual story, involving a sophisticated author, his young sweetheart and a company of "distinguished blackguards" he gathers around him. A new and refreshing idea for pictures!

SALUTE—Frederick Lonsdale has delivered to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios an original screen story that is destined to add further laurels to the name of this brilliant playwright and to the production sagacity of M-G-M. Watch for this one!

TARZAN AND HIS MATE — To state that the public is eagerly awaiting the further thrilling adventures of Johnny (Tarzan) Weissmuller is putting it mildly! What a title for the new Tarzan box-office smash! Edgar Rice Burroughs, inspired by the reception of his "Tarzan, the Ape Man" rises to greater heights of romantic thrill than ever in his new love adventure!

FELIX—Just to give you an idea! This play by Henry Bernstein ran 400 performances in Paris! That's quite a run—and it's some play! The story is of modern Paris, with all its sparkling trimmings. The central character is a self-made man, ruthless and contented with his lack of soul. A girl comes into his life who changes his whole outlook. Through her, and through her humbling of his ego he finds the true meaning of happiness.

THE MARINES HAVE LANDED—When you recall with happy memory how M-G-M puts stories of this type on the screen you'll cheer our statement that we've got another rip-snorting, dramatic romance for you. It's going to top M-G-M's previous highs in this field "Tell It To The Marines", "Hell Divers" and "Shipmates"!

"WHO'S THE BIG SHOT?"

"That's Jones. He plays the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures in this town!"

Fritz Duquesne, Once Mr. Craven, Freed of Charges

Fritz Joubert Duquesne, beau sabreur extraordinary and a figure of international fame in the high stakes game of espionage and counter espionage against the Allies in general and Great Britain in particular in the World War, was this week cleared of the last of the once considerable array of charges against him.

Under the discreet pseudonym of Major Frederick deTrafford Craven, the redoubtable Mr. Duquesne, has in the last ten years been variously concerned with motion picture and other amusement enterprises and for the last year has been a member of the staff of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

He was to this office still just Mr. Craven, a blithe but reserved and crisply aggressive co-worker, that day now a month past, when an array of New York City detectives, armed from hip to teeth, swarmed in and took him into custody under drawn pistols after the best story book manner.

The charge appeared to be that this Mr. Craven was indeed Fritz Joubert Duquesne, wanted it was alleged, on a British warrant charging him with "murder on the high seas." This referred to a wartime episode and the sinking of a munition laden vessel, bound for Allied ports, off the coast of South America. From newspaper reference rooms and war files emerged the makings of much spectacular copy, with tales of a career of vivid drama all the way from Duquesne's native Boer land in South Africa through the war capitals of the world, with interludes of planter life, romance in high places and sundry cinema expeditions including the Roosevelt excursion to the River of Doubt. On top of this was much publicity attendant upon the fact that Clement Wood's book entitled "The Man Who Killed Kitchener" had been published only a few weeks before by Faro, Inc., of New York. This work attributes the sinking of Kitchener's ship, H.M.S. Hampshire, to Duquesne.

Meanwhile Duquesne was delivered to the Federal authorities to be held for Great Britain. Arthur Garfield Hays of the Civil Liberties Union became interested as attorney for Duquesne. Presently in Federal Court he was discharged, substantially on the ground that the British authorities held that the World War was over. He was however, immediately rearrested by the New York detective who made the original arrest, this time on a charge of having escaped as a prisoner from Bellevue Hospital while being held as a prisoner in one of his encounters with the authorities, on the same charge of murder on the high seas, years ago.

Tuesday Magistrate Benjamin Greenstan in New York's Yorkville Court held that Mr. Duquesne could not be detained as he had by his escape from Bellevue committed no crime, in that he had not then been convicted on any charge and that subsequent action by the British authorities had erased the charge which led to that prior arrest.

Duquesne is by birth a Boer, a son of the Boer officer Fritz Duquense of fame in the war of the colonists against Great Britain and a nephew of the noted Piet Joubert, Boer patriot and foe of Britain. He was reared in the Transvaal and educated in England and France. He is, incidentally, a descendant of the historically important Marquis Duquesne of France, one of the forebears of the French Hugenot stock which was blended with the Dutch in the making of Boer South Africa, and of the same Duquesne family which gave colonial America several place names.

After that escape from Bellevue, Mr. Craven appeared in Boston where he became engaged in the conduct of an amusement publication. A year ago he came to New York, scene of many of his war time adventures, and entered the service of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. He has since become, once again, as a journalist, a well known figure up and down Broadway, being the while variously incidentally engaged in a number of dramatic and literary projects.

Dear Mr. Quigley:

We have always felt that we had the wholehearted support of you personally, and of your valued publications.

The announcement of an Independent Number of the Motion Picture Herald for the issue of July 16th, is further proof of your good will and assistance.

Permit me to express my appreciation, on behalf of the Independent Motion Picture Producers Association, as well as my personal appreciation and gratitude.

At our next meeting a resolution will be proposed, and I am sure will be passed, spreading on the minutes a vote of thanks to you and your publications, wherein. I hope it will also be resolved that the association as a whole reciprocate your support. So far I have had occasion to discuss your splendid gesture with a number of our members, and each and every one of them felt the same as I do in the matter.

I am writing all our members, calling attention to your splendid support and pointing out to them the world of good the Independent Number of the Motion Picture Herald will do them in bringing before the exhibitors the forthcoming program and general activities among the independents. They will undoubtedly realize, the same as I do, that announcements through the Motion Picture Herald mean reaching every exhibitor in the country.

Again I thank you, and hoping to have the opportunity to reciprocate, I am, with kind personal regards

Very truly yours,

Owners to Seek Protection Aid

Exhibitor members of the Southern California Independent Theatre Owners decided at a meeting in Los Angeles on Tuesday to carry their fight against zoning in their territory to the federal courts. Papers will be filed in Washington next week, it was said. The association demanded Fox West Coast "open" southern California territory.

Samuelson Denies Tax Quote

Sidney E. Samuelson, president of Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey, stated this week that he did not tell delegates to last week's Allied convention at Atlantic City, that "we are glad the Federal tax bill has been passed, even though it hit some of us," as had been reported. What he did say, stated Mr. Samuelson, was that "exhibitors were glad uncertainty was past and that now we could pay attention to business."

STARS LOANED TO CUT STUDIO WEEKLY BILLS

Doubt Formal Blanket Agreement of Producers; Each Sees Player's Value Enhanced Provided Rival Film is Good

By LEO MEEHAN, Hollywood

Necessity continues to breed radical changes in production policies. In the "good old days" any promising head that bobbed up, looking like feature or starring talent, was grabbed up under "long term contract" by one company or another. Everyone from an 18-month-old child prodigy to a septuagenarian character actor had a chance. And once "in stock" with a given company, let any other organization try and get the player's services on loan! Nothing doing. He's exclusive on our program, was the reply.

There were a few instances, of course, of players being loaned, a few instances of directors, or writers, being loaned. But more often than not, if talent was loaned it was because the company to which it was under contract believed it had a lemon, and was eager to get it off the payroll, or palm it off on another producer.

Not so today. Stars of the first magnitude are being loaned, or exchanged for equally stellar lights from another studio. And the reason is primarily to cut down the weekly overhead. When things were going good, it was all very well to carry a player along twenty or thirty weeks of a year, just to have him, or her, available for the program the balance of the time. Untold millions have been paid for players' inactive time. It was considered good business to keep box office names under a single brand name as long as they pulled.

Doubts Blanket Agreement

While there have been reports of a concerted agreement among the major producers for exchange or loan of contract names, it does not appear that any such formal agreement exists. It is just a practice which has commenced to grow through the necessity of cutting down the payroll. And it seems unlikely, even in such stressful times, that any blanket agreement will be made. Each producer, according to his lights, and the condition of his pocketbook, is more likely to loan or swap players or other talent according to what he may get in return.

But the exhibitor, and the public, who have been accustomed to seeing Clark Gable, or Lionel Barrymore, or Norma Shearer, or Joan Crawford, for example, exclusively under the brand of the Roaring Lion, will find such players as these in United Artists, or Paramount, or Radio, or perhaps other, trademarks. They will see Paramount's Nancy Carroll at Warners, Radio's Helen Twelvetrees at MGM, Warner's Warren William at MGM, Paramount's Fredric March in exchange for Metro's Clark Gable, and so on, no one can venture to what extent.

To record just a few recent exchanges agreed upon, or already taking place.

Frederic March (Paramount to MGM) for "Smilin' Through," opposite Norma Shearer.

Norma Shearer (MGM) to United Artists for "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," currently presented on the stage by Katherine Cornell, who refuses to go before a camera.

Clark Gable (MGM) to Paramount for "No Bed of Her Own."

Ralph Bellamy (Fox) to Universal for "The Air Mail Mystery."

Joan Crawford (MGM) to United Artists for "Rain."

Warren William (Warners) to MGM for "Skyscraper Souls."

Conrad Nagel (MGM) to Tiffany for "Man Called Back."

Helen Twelvetrees (Radio) to MGM for "Without Shame."

Zita Johann (Radio) to Warners for "Tiger Shark."

Neil Hamilton (MGM) to Warners for "One Way Passage."

Eric Linden (Radio) to Warners.

Lionel Barrymore (MGM) to Radio.

Jack Oakie and Wynne Gibson (Paramount) may go to Universal for "Once in a Lifetime." A deal is being discussed.

These are a few samples of the interchange of talent. Obviously, one of the most important items which blocks the signing of any general agreement for an interchange of players is the desire of each producing company to control the character of pictures in which its players may appear on another program. It should be obvious that some of the players aforementioned are altogether too valuable to their employers to be farmed out for productions which might be of an inferior grade. At the same time, it should be observed that producers are now convinced of the fact that a real hit picture, no matter who releases it, increases the popularity of a player. So if one company has a story which is ideally suited to the talents of a star belonging to a neighbor, the neighbor figures not only the cash returns from the loan of the star, but also the build-up value of having his talent appear in something which improves his standing with exhibitor and public.

Improved Sales Value

It just seems like a piece of good, common sense, brought about through diminishing box office receipts and the necessity of "all hanging together, or all hanging separately." As Martin Quigley observed in this publication recently, stars are made by good pictures—and they are kept in the stardom class by more good pictures. So there appears to be no good reason for any company trying to corner the star market. Things just won't work out that way. Better, far, to use valuable talent in product that will enhance its value, and forget who sticks his trademark on the main title.

But naturally, self-preservation still being the first law of nature, the men who do the loaning will try very hard to see that the ultimate effect will be the improved sales value of the talent to their own programs, in addition to the matter of reducing the weekly overhead.

And don't forget that "there's gold in them thar stars!"

Pettijohn Opposes Exclusive Dating For Class A Films

Exclusive runs of class A product in class A houses is not approved by Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

Speaking before the members of the Cleveland Cinema Club last week, Mr. Pettijohn said the "greatest part of this business is the fact that the humblest theatre in the land can show the same production with the same 40-piece symphony orchestra accompaniment that is shown at the Roxy theatre in New York. Pictures will die when they can't be shown at the littlest as well as the biggest motion picture theatres of the country." Believing that motion pictures make for mass entertainment, that their function is to reach the most remote village, Mr. Pettijohn expressed the opinion that exclusive runs, as proposed by several leading distributors, will never work. "Anyhow, the batable," said Pettijohn.

"Fair protection for first run houses—by fair I do not mean six months' protection—is necessary in order to permit sale of the same picture to the smallest theatres," continued Pettijohn. "It's the big revenue received from first runs that makes possible the ultimate sale of those same pictures for $10. Protection after the first-run is debatable, said Pettijohn..

Block booking was defended as being the only intelligent way for an exhibitor to run his theatre. He said Paramount once tried to have theatre owners look at all their pictures before buying, and they refused to do it.

Mr. Pettijohn suggested that the club can exert a lot of influence in behalf of the industry by seriously opposing non-theatrical competition.

"Let the churches show religious pictures, let schools show educational pictures, and leave the amusement films for the theatres," Pettijohn stated. "And when the demand for religious and educational pictures is great enough, we'll make them," he said.

Two-For-One Admissions Illegal, Film Board Rules

Two-for-one admissions for less than 20 cents are illegal and are a breach of contract, the New York Film Board of Trade has ruled in settling a dispute between two competitive houses in New Jersey.

One advertised two-for-one admissions for children for 10 cents while the other theatre threatened to cut its scale to five cents for children if the opposition was permitted to continue the policy.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

A MESSAGE, marked "Important," was sent out to all RKO theatre managers the other day, advising them that, "Effective immediately," they "are NOT permitted to pay any bills without the approval of division managers." It is explained that "This has to do with all current bills, as well as all items to be accrued in the future." Furthermore, RKO house operators are warned of the imperativeness of following the ruling "to the letter—this being one rule without the exception!"

In the same communication, the company's men in the field are told to "Please discontinue purchasing tickets to check opposition houses." The reason advanced centers around the admitted fact that "the opposition is doing well or you wouldn't want to check them," and working on this premise, RKO executives point out to managers that "what we are interested in is how are we doing in our own theatres!"

The Red Mill, Toronto, one of Canada's first nickelodeons and the subject of a colorful career during the growth of the business, has closed its doors forever after being in operation for 27 years. The wreckers have already taken hold of the property, and strangely, the last picture on the Red Mill screen was "High Pressure."

The Red Mill was opened in 1905 by Peter Griffin, who died only a few months ago. It was the forerunner of 30 Griffin theatres throughout Ontario, all of which have passed into other hands or have long since ceased operation. The Red Mill, seating only 214, although perhaps the first nickle show in the Dominion, was the second last to be wired, sound having been installed only last winter. Since then the house has operated at a loss.

We wonder what was in Glen Allvine's mind when he was called upon by Toastmaster Al Lichtman to advance to the rostrum during the awarding of cups and prizes at the 20th annual Eastern Film Golf Tournament the other night? Did Glen expect one of the beautiful trophies, only to receive a 26-pound Wisconsin cheese, presented to the strains of a funeral march by Head Cheese Cunningham and an official committee of six Little Cheeses? It appears that Glen—always with a sense of honesty-is-the-best-policy—counted up and duly reported to Jack Alicoate's handicappers 164 strokes for playing ONCE around the 18 holes on the Fenimore course, which has a par of 70. Glen's only excuse was that his score certainly gave the lie to the so-called slump in stock market prices. Furthermore, said Mr. Allvine, "I promise to do better in the future." Within four years, he declared, his score should be down to a neat 150. Mr. Allvine bases this belief on the improvement shown since he turned in a score of 178 while playing with Adolph Zukor four years ago at New City. Glen advised Mr. Lichtman that he plays golf only in presidential years.

Congressmen," suggests Postal Telegraph, "often appreciate a direct expression of the wishes of their constituents."

"Better ask Senator Brookhart about that," advises Advertising Age.

AN insight into the mental complexion of some of the solons at Washington who voted for federal admission taxes may be gleaned from a statement made by a Wisconsin congressman at Washington who had been requested and pleaded with by his constituents back home to oppose the amusement levy. In his reply, which was at least frank if undiplomatic, he said that "here in Washington, the theatres are always crowded. Surely, there can be no valid objection to a small tax."

Apparently the senator from Wisconsin knows little or nothing of conditions back home of the voters who sent him to Capitol Hill. Nor did it ever occur to him that the situation as he saw it in Washington —a thriving town of civil workers—might be somewhat different from that of Appleton, Beaver Dam, Menasha, Racine and West Allis in his own senatorial district in Wisconsin.

GERMAN EXHIBITORS FIGHT MOVE TO BAR FOREIGN SCREEN PLAYERS

Actors Propose Picture Be Not Ranked as Quota Films Unless at Least 75 Per Cent of Talent Is of German Nationality

By HANS TINTNER

In order that the reduced employment possibilities within the German film industry may be used for Germans only, various groups are making efforts to increase the severity of the respective regulations.

According to the suggestions submitted to the Government by the "Dacho" (this is the central organization of the German film actors), in future films shall be considered as German films according to the quota law only if at least 75 per cent of the actors are Germans, instead of 50 per cent as heretofore. While up to now no difference has been made in general between the Austro-Germans and the German artists—one of the most important arguments in Germany's foreign policy during the past years has been that the Austrians as a people of the same race shall be treated like Germans—it is now demanded that the artists employed in German pictures shall be of German nationality. Contrary to the practice followed heretofore, even the production managers shall be Germans.

Strong Objections Raised

Although it seems only natural that every effort is made to reserve in general the domestic labor market for the Germans, there are strong objections to such a rigorous nationalizing of an artistic industry. Unrestricted exchange of artistic forces is an absolute necessity for the German film; otherwise it will suffer heavy failures. The employment and selection of the artists can be made only according to their suitability, not according to their passport.

This anti-alien tendency will soon be felt by the large percentage of artists in Berlin who are foreigners though of German race. Some larger concerns had already adopted a private policy in this direction for which there has been no legal basis up to now. For instance, during the past year the Ufa has made no contracts for a long period with any authors, directors or actors who are not German citizens. It will hardly be possible to fully carry out this anti-alien tendency, if we take into consideration how many eminent personages of the German art-life are not German citizens; for instance, Max Reinhardt, Alexander Moissi, Richard Tauber, Elisabeth Bergner, Max Pallenberg and many others.

Part of the German press demands emphatically that the German film be cleared of all alien elements, and the Ufa is blamed for employing the Russian actress Anna Sten as feminine lead in the last Jannings picture. Demand has been made for dismissal of the composer, Werner H. Heymann, who composed the music for the German super-film, "Congress Dances," and notice shall be given also to Charell, who directed this picture.

The aforementioned examples will give an idea of how much the ranks of the best film artists in Germany would be reduced, if the passport actually were made proof of ability.

Exhibitors Urge Free Imports

That all these efforts have nothing to do with the general interests of the German film industry is clearly proven by the fact that the German exhibitors assembled at the meeting of the German Exhibitors' Association at Frankfort-on-the-Main declared officially and emphatically that they are against any strangling of the free exchange of films and against any restriction of free import. The German exhibitor realizes clearly that any restriction on free film trade will only have an unfavorable effect on his business. He pleaded in Frankfort for cancellation of all quota laws and for absolutely free film import. "We want to see the best films of the whole world," cried Councillor of Commerce Ludwig Scheer, president of the German Exhibitors' Association, at this remarkable meeting. "Therefore, away with the Kontingent!"

In the sensible circles of the German film industry, which are convinced of the internationality of art in general and of the internationality of the film in particular, in these circles which look more after the general interests of the German film industry than after certain individual interests, it is hoped that those in authority will be impressed with the viewpoints clearly expressed at Frankfort by the German exhibitors before many representatives of the government and the German press. The fate of the German film industry is indissolubly connected with the fate of the German exhibitor. And the German exhibitor is against any kontingent regulation and against any narrow-minded restriction of the right to work on and in German pictures.

Maj. Warner Promotes Hummel, Schwalberg, Sachson, Tietjen

Erpi Wide Range Recording Ready

Governed by producer demand, Western Electric stands ready to proceed with all necessary alterations in present studio equipment to accommodate its newly developed wide range recording, a production equipment refinement.

The first use of the new method is in the production of "Rain," at Catalina Island on the Coast, by United Artists. The advantages of the system in extending the frequency range of sounds that can be recorded and reproduced are specially evident in the exterior scenes, Western Electric indicates.

The essential changes in wide range recording consist in the use of moving coil microphones to the exclusion of all other types and in the introduction of three simple electrical networks which result in flattening the overall frequency characteristics from the output of the microphone to the input of the scanning slit in reproducing. The highest order of fidelity is obtained up to approximately 8,000 cycles, an increase at the high end of more than half an octave over previous recording limits, according to the Western Electric statement. The company also is prepared to make the necessary adjustments in existing reproducing equipment to match pace with wide range recording. In theatres, the change principally concerns loud speaker replacements.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Washington Show

(MGM)

Drama

A timely picture! Telling the story that will headline every paper in the land, be on the tip of everyone's tongue, from now until the fourth of March, 1933—Politics!

A semi-inside story, laying bare the trials and temptations that beset the paths of our Congressional representatives in Washington. Set against a fascinating background of intrigue, deception, romance, patriotism, the menace of invisible government; colorful and interesting as the characters and the capitol it portrays. Withal, packed with that element of human interest that is so necessary in every picture.

Graphically picturing the rise of a "man of the people," who shatters the powerful political machine of a great Midwestern state—who goes to Washington as a senator. Who fights on the floor of the Senate that the rights and properties of the people may be torn from the grasp of invisible government. The story of a man who succumbs to the temptations of the "power trust," falls victim to the charms of a voluptuous feminine lure. Deserting the cause of the people to crumble himself and their hopes and aspirations in ruin. Picturing his fall, with startling realism and in a way that is all too familiar to the body politic of every town, city and state in the union.

You will have no difficulty selling this one to your patrons. Everything is in your favor. The theme is more than adequate. The personalities are great. No one needs to tell you what to do with Lionel Barrymore. More dramatic, more real than he was in "A Free Soul." Nor is it necessary to pass out any suggestions in regard to Karen Morely, who plays the sexy lobbyist, eventually marrying and double crossing Barrymore as part of the game of super-politics.

Out of the headlines of the papers, from the time of the Teapot Dome scandals, right down to all the sensational developments of the current presidential campaign, you'll get all the catchlines you want to whip up interest. The story of "Washington Show" is today's news. You can approach your campaign from a crusader angle. Of what happens to the most sincere and high minded congressmen who become enmeshed in the glittering whirlpool of Washington social life. Who forget the "folks back home" when there's prestige to be built, careers to be carved out. The story of the grip that "big business" has on the government of this country. Of the ways in which it makes its power work to insure the accomplishment of its own purposes and the defeat of the will of the people.

Inside pictures of the Senate at work—vividly portraying machine politics on the floor. Dramatic speeches. Tense excitement of packed galleries. The deals, the trading, the bargaining for votes. The button-holing in the cloak rooms. The hectic hulabaloo of the news services and the special writers, all fighting for exclusive sensational inside stories. The drama of the investigating committee, where the super-lobbyist asks the nation "what are you going to do about it?" All these are dynamic catchlines.

Here is plenty of everything that intrigues the interest of the people. A picture that tells the story of their power and their weakness. You can stir your town with interest if you play this picture up to the limit as a stark revelation of what's wrong in Washington and why. You don't have to worry about treading on anybody's toes. You can make this picture a part of every campaign speech that every candidate makes. Get them to talk about it. Get the newspapers to talk about it. Get the civic leaders in your town to endorse and recommend it. Get all the furore and excitement of the current political campaign into your film campaign. Use the same stunts that the politicians are using, with banners, trucks, meetings. If you can tie up with a radio station for a broadcast of Barrymore's speech on the floor of the Senate direct from your projection room—or shoot it out on the streets over a loud-speaker system, you'll be turning loose the best political speech of the year.

Get behind this one with every ounce of showmanship you possess and you should need the S.R.O. sign every time you show it.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by M-G-M. Directed by Charles Brabin. From the play "The Claw," by Henry Bernstein. Continuity and dialogue by John Meehan in collaboration with Samuel Blythe. Photographed by Gregg Toland. Film editor, Ben Lewis. Release date, July 9, 1932. Running time, 74 minutes.

Lucky Girl

(British International)

Musical Comedy

If Hollywood had given this to Lubitsch he might have enjoyed himself, for it is a story of the kind dear to his democratic heart. Stephan Gregorovitch suddenly finds himself the crowned king of Karaslavia, a territory of small dimensions and smaller exchequer. What can he do but call in his efficiency expert and right-hand pal, Mr. Hudson Greener of Boston, U. S. A., who, having an eye for the money's worth of the crown jewels, arranges forthwith a visit to London there to realize.

Once in London, our king assumes incognito as "Mr. Abdulla," and with his friend Greener mixes with the best company in order to sell the jewels. At one house party, the two are mistaken for a couple of crooks known to be planning a raid on the jewel cases of several well placed ladies there. Complications further overtake "Mr. Abdulla" when he falls heavily for a Lady Moira Somebody-or-other. The whole party sings, dances and complicates its way through the usual string of adventures, and finally the real identity of "Mr. Abdulla" is revealed and a hint of personal happiness and greater financial stability for the king of Karaslavia is conveyed via a match between the rich Lady Moira and her modest "Mr. Abdulla."

It is all good fun, and moves with fair speed. There is more comedy than real music, but the acting of Gene Gerrard as the king and Molly Lamont as the Lady Moira make up for musical shortcomings. Gus MacNaughton as Greener gives a performance very suggestive of Woolsey of the Wheeler and Woolsey duo. Direction is smooth enough, and the motif provides a change from the long run of domestic farces which have lately come from British studios. Gene Gerrard shows well not only as the star, but as the director, and with his assistant, Frank Miller, takes credit for a nice little job—MOORING, London.

Produced by British International. Distributed in U. S. A. by Powers. Adapted from the musical comedy by Douglas Furber, R. P. Weston and Bert Lee, and from the play "Mr. Abdulla" by Reginald Berkeley. Running time, 75 minutes.

New Morals for Old

(MGM)

Drama

Here is a picture almost completely lacking in money names for your marquee and newspaper ads, yet, by reason of the very humanness of its characters it deserves a niche in the gallery of fine pictures.

There may be nothing new in a plot where a doting mother and father are so fond of their children that they become absolutely selfish, but there is something decidedly different when that mother, father and children are played by Laura Hope Crewes, Lewis Stone, Margaret Perry and Robert Young.

Without attempting a synopsis of the story we need only point out that the children disagree with the old fashioned ideas of their parents, yet, before the final fadeout, are thinking and talking exactly as did their parents before them.

The title can be played around with quite a bit. In some spots it may be immediately taken as another "sex" proposition, which is not entirely so. True, the daughter does go to live with a married man, but this seems to fade out of the audience's mind by reason of the other important factors and situations in the story. However, you are supposed to know your own patronage and how they should be sold. If you must play that slant up, do it with extreme caution and diplomacy. If, on the other hand, your community takes exception to such stuff, you can very easily forget about it in your selling campaign.

Remember, you must build up interest by injecting good ad copy. The title must shift for itself without the aid of strong names. To inject the necessary interest use the background of the story. Every character in the cast is understandable and can probably be found in many average American homes.

The audience value is the picture's best asset. No question about most of the customers going out and talking about it. The word-of-mouth advertising should insure a well-patronized engagement, but to get a lot of people talking you must get a pretty good opening day crowd. So better buckle down and use your head. If you can screen the picture at your nearest exchange before you start selling it, all the better, because it will open up many fine slants that ought to appeal to you for your particular community. Lacking such a screening you can find out plenty in advance by getting the press book.

Not suitable for children or for Sunday showings in smaller towns, but nevertheless charged with plenty of ticket-selling ammunition for any theatre with a manager who knows how to sell something worthwhile to his patrons. We predict 'way above average receipts for this picture and we'll be disappointed if this prediction fails to come true.—Lewis.

Produced and distributed by MGM. Directed by Charles F. Brabin. Author: John Van Druten of the play "After All." Additional dialogue by Zelda Sears and Wanda Tuchock. Photography by John Mescal. Film editor, William S. Gray. Release date, June 4, 1932. Running time, 76 minutes.

Bachelor's Folly

(World Wide)

Comedy-Drama

Here is an able piece of comedy-drama, which, to the American exhibitor, especially in the smaller situation, will perhaps present an obstacle to ready audience appreciation, the British English production and consequent dialogue accent. Gainsborough, British producer, made the film, distributed in this country by World Wide.

Herbert Marshall and Edna Best, who share the lead, are acknowledged as two of the most capable performers on the English stage. They execute their work here with a smoothness and finish expected of them, but it is unfortunately true that their names are considerably unknown to the great body of the American motion picture audience. The supporting cast is, with few exceptions, effective, but the lack of name value in the film is even further emphasized in this regard. You may well pay some little attention, however, to Gordon Harker, who as Marshall's pugnacious and ill-mannered butler, and one-time burglar, supplies the comedy with an impertinent assurance which is vastly amusing.

The bachelor who was double crossed by a married woman in whom he had put his faith, and who finally turns to the other girl who quietly put her faith in him, conveys an idea of the plot theme. That is perhaps the best line to tie in with the title. One name which should have a certain amount of selling value is that of the late Edgar Wallace, from whose play, "The Calendar," the film was adapted. Be careful, however, that your advertising does not imply a mystery, thriller angle, because of the Wallace origination. This is not one of the author's melodramas. It is straight comedy drama, withal carrying a reasonable amount of suspense and interest of the stage play variety.

The film technique has permitted an excellent and rather effective broadening of the background. The story concerns the complications in which Marshall involves himself on the race track, and the opportunity has not been neglected to picture, panoramically and in detail, the race itself, and the fashionable English society crowds at England's famed track, Ascot. The women in your audience should appreciate the style show thus afforded. It would perhaps be better to emphasize the racing element and the romantic-dramatic angle in the copy and steer away from the British side for the best results.

This is an entertaining, well-turned film, ably adapted, ably performed, and should give satisfaction where the British element is not a great obstacle, but it would be well not to oversell the picture.—Aaronson.

The Office Girl

(RKO-Gainsborough)

Comedy with Music

A thoroughly enjoyable, light, musical and generally pleasing offering which seemed to tickle the fancy of everyone in the audience where it was caught. Its chief drawback consists of portions of dialogue which are not clear and some accents which at times are particularly jarring. But gauged strictly in accordance with entertainment standards we unhesitatingly recommend this as a decidedly pleasant diversion from many of the present-day American pictures.

The story, briefly, deals with a girl who comes to Vienna to get a position as a typist. She gets the job in one of the larger banks and "fate" throws her with the bank's director for an evening in a beer (lovely word that) garden. Of course, she does not know he is a bank director until the following day. Then the action maintains a good rapid pace until the final kissing fadeout.

Excellent performances by the four main characters do much to make this a good picture. Miss Renate Muller, as Susie, is good to look at and can sing to any audience's satisfaction. The song, "I Don't Know Why I'm Happy" is a typical Viennese number which has the entire audience humming as they leave the theatre.

The title can hardly be classed as strong box office material except where you build up your campaign to support it. Then it can become very much magnetic. The theme back of the picture has an appeal for any American audience which should make the selling of this attraction quite simple. Of course, you have no names to play around with, but you can still make much of it as entertainment by merchandising it the right way. Sell it for what it is. That would be my suggestion regardless of your community's likes or dislikes for foreign-made pictures. We can almost assure you that they will get as much enjoyment out of it as we did.

Audience value is O.K. In spite of its slow start your patrons will wonder how this impetuous girl will get along in her quest for a job. As previously mentioned, it gathers momentum and takes a stronger hold until it completely captures you. The songs come in at good spots, tying right in with the story. One scene in particular was novel and certainly well handled. It showed a large room lined with typewriters which beat out a tune to the tempo of the music. It was very effective and must have taken plenty of time to work out.

For theatres where something really different is appreciated we heartily recommend "The Office Girl." Play it where you please but keep in mind that there is little of interest for children.—Lewis.

Produced by Gainsborough. Distributed by RKO Radio. Directed by Victor Saville. Story by Frank Schulz. Music by Paul Abraham. Lyrics by Desmond Carter. Release date, April 8, 1932. Running time, 83 minutes.

Million Dollar Legs

(Paramount)

Comedy

Don't let the critical reviews on this picture affect you too much. Some of them are not likely to be very complimentary. But from a showman's point of view, Paramount has tried an experiment with "Million Dollar Legs" that may set a new note in the production of talking pictures.

Here's what they've done: They have gone back into the dark ages of motion picture production and adapted in this picture all those great laugh-creating ideas that made motion pictures the fourth greatest industry in the country. Slapstick, belly-laughs, damnfool nonsense, chases; they're all there, plus a load of gags that can't fail to provoke howls of laughter. They make a monkey of the hero and Jack Oakie does one sweet job in a part that many another star would be afraid to tackle for fear of injuring his reputation. In short, Paramount lifted a whole book-full of pages from the "Triangle-Keystone Cop" days, when nobody knew what a script was—when they made pictures as they went along and where everyone's craziest ideas were incorporated in the film, if it looked as though they had any possible chance of bringing a laugh.

Paramount has worked out its experiment in highly successful fashion. It has given you just what you've been clamoring for during the past few months—something from the "good old days."

Take a look at the cast. Oakie, Lyda Roberti and little Dickie Moore are about the only moderns listed. All the rest, W. C. Fields, Andy Clyde, Ben Turpin, et al, are veterans of hilariously glorious days.

As an excuse for its experiment, Paramount has used an Olympic Games atmosphere. But don't get too enthusiastic about that. Don't play it up too strongly in your advertising and exploitation as anything like a preview of this year's Olympic Games, although at the climax of the picture you get a maze of shots of keen athletic competition. The background is a little European country where everyone is a born athlete. Where infants can leap 30 feet; boys run the 100 yards in about six seconds and old men run the mile in nothing flat.

Never for one minute is it serious. In fact its absurdity is really so fine that we warned you in the beginning not to pay too much attention to critics, who in their enthusiasm to review the picture in line with the present day trend, may miss the real point of the whole nonsensical farce.

Don't try to be serious in selling this one. Shout about those comedy stars. Shout about the old idea that made pictures great. About the nonsense, the foolishness. Tell your patrons that it's all in fun. Concoct the most fantastically funny advance campaign you can. Get as big a crowd as possible in for the first showing and you can be reasonably certain the word-of-mouth advertising will go a long way towards packing them in at every succeeding show. You don't have to worry about selling this to anyone at any time. It will be a great treat for the youngsters, and if you have prepared your audiences for what to expect you should get plenty of compliments on "Million Dollar Legs."—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Western

A somewhat different twist to the yarn swings this out of the regular run of hard-fighting, gun-popping western films, but nevertheless, it must be played in that category. Where there are western fans, and apparently they are in abundance, this one will be found entertaining. There will be no complaint from your regular western patrons.

Sell this as a slightly unusual story in a western setting, with all the impressive scenic features which add to the effectiveness. You have a good workable title, which has draw possibilities, particularly when it is tied up with Ken Maynard, who should have his quota of followers among the picture-going populace. It suggests the fire and dash of Maynard as a brilliant horseman. The first word should not present any difficulty. It is a more or less conventional use of the word with its action implication. It is well not to overlook Tarzan, Maynard's talented horse. He takes a fair share of the honors.

In addition to Maynard, who with Tarzan is your selling ace, plus the title, you have a group of "standbys" including Nat Pendleton, Alan Roscoe, Jack Perrin, Lafe McKee, in support. Western fans will recognize them.

The twist has Maynard and pugilistic Pendleton, discharged from the army, going west and becoming involved with the machinations of Roscoe, in an effort to acquire Tarzan from Irvy Merton, its owner, before the big cross-country race. Maynard rides for her, of course wins, but provides thereby several action-scenic shots which are fast and effective, and should register well with the fans, especially of the younger generation.

Pendleton supplies the comedy as a city "pug" in a western outfit and a derby. A bit of novelty is provided when Maynard hides Tarzan in a hotel room, and rides down stairs in escaping from Roscoe's gang.

School is out, and the youngsters should devour Maynard, Tarzan and the big race.—Aaronson.

Down Our Street

(Paramount British)

Drama

The slums of London have formed the setting of many British films before this, and the naive characterization of the proverbial cockney has appealed to the theatrical as something to enrich stage and screen entertainment of the sentimental "old dutch" type. But never before has any film director succeeded so nearly in evading the pitfall of caricature. Harry Lachman has made his players into real London slum folk, and their "lingo," not of the variety so often used for theatrical effect, will be easy for the people of the English-speaking world.

Maisie (Elizabeth Allan) is a slum child of highly respectable slum parents (Nancy Price and Morris Harvey) whose high moral sense engenders in them the protective suspicion of parents who know low life. Maisie falls in love with Charlie Stubbs (Hugh Williams), a youth with a close acquaintance with the local police, but a good boy. The two get into police trouble and a scene with mother sends the girl out into the world on her own. Charlie disappears simultaneously.

Later the girl returns to see her mother, who has suffered in her absence—all rather tenuously registered in the picture—and her fine clothes confirm her mother's thought that fine feathers sometimes grace fine "birds." There is an even more terrible scene, and the girl, her pride outraged, starts to leave for good. Outside she meets her lover, Charlie, who is making good as a cab driver-owner. Hearing Maisie's story, he steps in to tell mother where she gets off. But his immaculate appearance reassures mother and father, and the fadeout brings the lovers to the paternal board.

Nancy Price as the cockney mother gives a remarkable study, though Lachman appears to have liked her part too well to allow the other players their full share of the time. Elizabeth Allan is not an easy slum girl, but Hugh Williams as her friend is to the life. Settings and touches make for a realism not often achieved in similar pictures, and although quite unambitious as regards outlay, this will add more prestige to the Paramount British unit, whose final unaffiliated production it is.—Mooring, London.

Schubert's Dream of Spring

(Capital Film)

Drama with Music

A German dramatic effort, centering about the life of the famed composer, Franz Schubert, and, naturally, carrying a running background of certain of his most noted compositions, featuring others.

The picture, of course, is most readily adapted to the type of metropolitan house which plays foreign films, and which caters to a German population. For that patronage, the film is excellent, recounting the romantic tragedy in the life of Schubert, poor schoolmaster, whose love for a countess is not returned. He dramatically turns in a moment from the brink of a great happiness, induced by a brilliantly successful concert which establishes his fame, and a declaration of love to the countess which shall establish his future contentment, to the depths of despondency.

In the regular run situation, particularly where there is a certain percentage of German population to draw upon for a potential audience, there is no reason why this film cannot be played profitably on a specially designated night, or two nights. The patrons should be well prepared for the event, and the showman should conduct a real effort to make it "an event" in his theatre. Special mailing, which can be done at a reasonable cost, may well prove effective.

In the leading roles are Gretl Theimer, leading fenimine player in the strikingly successful "Zwei Herzen,' and Carl Joeken, listed as a star tenor of the Berlin State Opera. The support is decidedly capable, with more than a little clever comedy inserted to compensate the dramatic element of the picture. Despite the German dialogue, the story is completely intelligible to the patron without a knowledge of German, which is an important selling factor. English subtitles, superimposed on the film at crucial points, still further clarify the plot development. This is said to be an authentic life of Schubert, and as such there are definite opportunities for school tieups.

Among the melodies, a few of them sung by Joeken, are the famous "Serenade," which forms the theme song; "Erl-King," "Unfinished Symphony," "Impatience," "Ave Maria," "March Militaire,' "Hedge Roses.'

This is an opportunity to show something different, which should not fail of appreciation from the intelligent audience.—Aaronson.

SHORTS

Blondes by Proxy

(RKO Pathe)

Likable

This harem story with a harum-scarum role for Louis John Bartels has its moments, in fact two of them, one new and the other not so new but apparently relished by many in the audience. Bartels sells Kalla Pasha so thoroughly on his preparation for making blondes out of all girls that he's invited to revamp the entire harem. Kalla Pasha sees that the salesman is forgetting the prefix and has him blindfolded. He picks the wrong bottle and the grotesque effects on the tresses bring the whole palace retinue into action. The dancing girl (Joyzelle) helps him escape. The second incident that drew laughs, though scarcely a new handle for fun-making, came when Bartels got behind his pursuers and assisted the last of them through the window.—Running time, 17 minutes.

A Few Laughs

There are scattered laughs in this comedy effort featuring Harry Gribbon, as the cowboy film hero, whose horse-pal is stolen by the Arabian siren, Dorothy Granger. He goes in search of the animal, is lured to the siren's castle, is arrested as a deserter from the Foreign Legion, but the horseshoe in his shirt saves him from death when the firing squad is finished. His sweetheart, "Babe" Kane, arrives via a slapstick fall or two and they ride off together. Rates only fair.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Novel Cartoon

Lively, musical and humorous is this number of the Merry Melodies cartoon series. The farmer-animals dance in the old cow barn, the villain walks in, and the hot stove, with its amusing antics, proves the hero of the clever animated bit.—Running time, 7 minutes.

THE NEWEST PICTURES

First of Political Background Pictures Features Hollywood Week; New Vogue in Westerns

By LEO MEEHAN, Hollywood

Rather a light week for previews in the Hollywood sector. But it did bring forth the first of the scheduled batch of pictures with a political background. Except for the usual superb work of Lionel Barrymore, the MGM production called "Washington Show" would be pretty dull fare. And since even Lionel goes haywire under the baneful influence of Washington blondes and bribers, he isn't altogether satisfying.

Astute political chronicler Sam Blythe and veteran dramatist John Meehan (no relation, but a nice fellow, too) are credited with concocting the screen play. Lionel licks the predatory interests and goes to the Senate. But instead of sticking there and orating to empty seats, as new senators do, he goes out to teas. Hah, a blonde, who is the very personable Karen Morley. In the background, pulling the strings, C. Henry Gordon, head of the power lobbyists. Pretty soon the blonde vamps Widower Lionel into marriage. Then the gay social whirl, debts and the play-girl wife persuades him to resign from the Senate for a half million dollar fee. Senate investigation. Lionel "tells all" as he did in the trial scene of "A Free Soul," and then his heart gets him. Weak hearts are a big help to plots.

Newcomer Promising

The first performance of an MGM newcomer, Diane Sinclair, in the role of daughter to Barrymore, is very good. She looks like a real comer.

Some of the glamour and majesty of the national capital is cleverly brought into the background, but I have a hunch there is better dramatic material in Washington life than appears in this one. Still, it has one of the reigning favorites, the best actor in the Barrymore group.

Warners came through with what should set a new vogue in Westerns. Mind you, this is no "horse opera" by a long shot. It is just that the setting is on a wheat farm in North Dakota, most of it. And instead of a lot of outlandish battles and cattle thieves, knife-hurling Mexicans and hurdles over cliffs, there is believable drama, a beautiful romance between lovely Barbara Stanwyck and handsome George Brent, and plenty of natural comedy on the part of the hardy natives. It goes to prove there is plenty of good melodrama, romance and exciting life west of the Missouri which is fit material for outdoor screenplays, without resorting to the hackneyed plots of most stories with a Western locale. Robert Lord did this very good scenario from an Arthur Springer story, and William Wellman's direction puts it on celluloid with pleasing results. A swell family show, I should say.

Undecided on Period

"Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" would have been much stronger had those concerned with its production decided with much more definiteness whether they were making it in the "period" when Kate Douglas Wiggin wrote it, about 1903, or whether it was to be brought up to date. In the case of "Daddy Long Legs," also written a generation back, the same company, Fox, brought its backgrounds, dialogue and costuming up to date, with excellent effect, and certainly while still retaining all the strength and emotional values of the original. Not so in this case. Sometimes its rural characters and action border closely upon the burlesque, and it just doesn't belong. Marian Nixon does a very neat job as Rebecca, and it is pleasing to see Ralph Bellamy in something less than a heavy role. Louise Closser Hale takes major honors as Aunt Miranda. "Rebecca" undoubtedly will please a lot of people who are looking for simple, refreshing stories on the screen. But if the material had been more smartly handled it might have been another "Daddy Long Legs."

Harold Lloyd is polishing up his new opus, quietly previewing it far out in the suburbs away from designing critics. Reports are it is one of his funniest, which is good news. M. H. (Mike) Hoffman and his staff at Allied are wearing broad grins over results achieved with "Madame Bovary," which will not be called "Indecent," I hear. Perhaps the reason why M. H. changed the original title is explained by what I heard a cluck on the Boulevard call it the other day. He referred to it, and just casually, as "Madame Bovine."

As the Chatterers say, "See you some more, I'm afraid."

Mrs. William Bolitho Signed By RKO as Material Scout

Mrs. William Bolitho, widow of the late journalist and playwright, has been given a roving commission by RKO Radio as story representative and material scout in the European field.

Katherine Brown, Eastern story editor, will sail for Europe in July to meet Mrs. Bolitho in London for conferences regarding writers and story material. Miss Brown, while in Paris will negotiate with a fashion expert, with a view to bringing him back for studio work.

Shutdown at Warner Plant

Warner is closing the Coast studio this week for a period of from four to six weeks. The company is ahead of schedule on production.

Stock Accounting Sought by Holder In B&K Action

Paramount Publix Corporation, Publix Great States Theatres, Inc., Great States Theatres, Inc., and Balaban and Katz Corporation of Chicago were named defendants in an accounting suit filed in chancery court in Wilmington, Delaware, this week by Max Kirchheimer of Chicago, who says he is a stockholder.

The bill of complaint charges that officers and directors of Paramount Publix last December, acting in collusion and conspiracy with officers and directors of Balaban and Katz Corporation allegedly devised a scheme claimed to be calculated to unlawfully, and in fraud of rights of B. & K. stockholders, to relieve Paramount of obligations to repurchase 30,000 shares of Paramount common stock at $85 a share from stockholders of Great States Theatres, Inc., and to unlawfully place the obligation on Balaban and Katz.

The bill alleges that when Paramount purchased 70 per cent of the stock of Great States in July, 1929, in exchange for 30,000 shares of Paramount common stock, Paramount agreed to repurchase the 30,000 shares at $85 a share between January 1 and 10, 1932, if the owners wished to resell. It alleges that in December, 1931, the owners notified Paramount that they wished to resell at $85 a share. It was also charged that the control of Great States had been transferred to a new corporation known as Publix Great States Theatres, Inc.

Plaintiff further alleges that Balaban and Katz paid to Paramount $516,000 and gave notes for $2,034,000. The bill says the cash and notes were turned over to the owners of the 30,000 shares of Paramount stock by Paramount which it then received.

The complaint declares the consideration for Balaban and Katz' payment of the money and notes to Paramount was the transfer to it by Paramount of 7,000 shares of common of Publix Great States Theatres, and Paramount Publix's rights to $337,586 dividends from Publix Great States, but it is alleged the 7,000 shares of stock were worthless. It then charges that "the sole purpose of the transaction was to relieve Paramount Publix of its obligation to rebuy its stock."

Assets and property of Balaban and Katz Corporation are being dissipated and wasted. it is alleged.

The complainant asks the court to appoint a receiver for Balakan and Katz Corporation pending the litigation to stop alleged waste of its assets and to enjoin the payment by Balaban and Katz of any further money in connection with the said transaction and to order the return to the corporation of the $516,000 cash and all over money it might have paid on the notes which fall due one each month for 18 months.

The bill states that Paramount Publix owns 90 per cent of Balaban and Katz Corporation and controls Great States Theatres, Inc., and Publix Great States Theatres, Inc. Great States Theatres, Inc., operate a chain of theatres in Illinois. Balaban and Katz operates over 35 theatres in Chicago.

THE CHALLENGE and OUR ANSWER

DEPRESSION is a challenge to our industry, as to all others. The double feature menace this year has brought a double challenge to the short subject branch of our business. Educational's answer to this double challenge is a program of short subjects offering more big box-office names and a greater variety of subject matter than ever before in its history.

We invite you to compare Educational's short subject program for 1932-1933 with any ever put on the market by this or any other company.

This brilliant list of short subject entertainment tells a story of courage and confidence. Educational and the producers associated with its new program believe the public has shown clearly its preference for variety entertainment, and that the diversified program must again be the rule for successful picture theatres. And with the public so manifestly demanding the utmost value for its money, the highest quality of entertainment must be provided in every unit of these diversified programs.

All our plans for 1932-1933 are based on meeting these conditions. We believe the box-office merit of this line-up of pictures will be apparent to every exhibitor. And in variety they run the whole gamut of short subject entertainment from slapstick comedy to opera.

Variety entertainment was never more welcome to the public. Fine quality short subjects were never more necessary to the exhibitor. Here is a program that we are confident meets the requirements of both showman and theatre patron.

A FOUNDATION PROGRAM

OF RED-BLOODED ENTERTAINMENT

TWENTY-ONE feature pictures. Each from a story by a famous writer known to the millions of picture fans and fiction readers. A schedule of features offering a safe and sure foundation of entertainment for any theatre. Plus a great series of action pictures starring the most popular of all western heroes, Ken Maynard. Such is World Wide's ambitious program for 1932-1933.

With comparatively few exceptions the great stars today are on a free lance basis. More than ever before the basic structure of any good plan of picture production must be good stories by good authors. World Wide offers you Eugene O'Neill, Edna Ferber, Vina Delmar, and a long list of equally popular authors. No company can offer you more.

From the pens of the world's best sellers come the stories that are being transferred to the screen by several of the industry's most experienced producers for this virile line of red-blooded entertainment.

The star value will be equal to the author value of these pictures. From the films' outstanding players will be selected the great star casts which best fit these best seller stories.

Read them over carefully. Analyze them one by one. And you will know that you have here a basic program of proven entertainment value second to none that you can secure anywhere.

Attack on Twin Bills Is Pressed In Key Locations

While extension of the movement to eliminate the double feature policy in Greater New York to subsequent run situations awaits the successful outcome of pending negotiations among affiliated and independent first and second run circuits, according to Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the TOCC, and initiator of the action, Cleveland and New Jersey reports indicate a fight on the double bill based on a possible product shortage if it is continued.

Zone meetings in New York are being held during this week, each zone to work out its own plan. Following agreement, the plan will be submitted to subsequents, with a view to simultaneous elimination by all parties. Mr. O'Reilly expects definite action within a week.

Exhibitors in New Jersey believe the situation has resolved itself into a matter of closing down three days each week or eliminating the second feature. Circuits are willing to discuss the matter, it is understood, and negotiations with independents are expected shortly. Independents in the state are closely watching the New York discussions, and it is anticipated that, if negotiations there are fruitful, Sidney Samuelson, president of the Allied state unit, will arrange a meeting on the situation. Triple features have already been eliminated in the theatres operated by affiliated circuits in Hackensack, N. J., although no meeting has been arranged between Leon Rosenblatt and Skouras and Warner circuit heads. However, sessions shortly are expected to bring about complete elimination of the triple feature policy in remaining situations.

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, at its last general meeting, advocated that the double feature practice be cut to the minimum in order to conserve on picture product. It was pointed out that there threatens to be no product for the subsequent run houses in September and October if the present double feature policy is maintained. The situation is created locally by the closing of two downtown first run houses, Loew's State and RKO Hippodrome, and the slowing up of national releases.

Negotiating for Settlement Of Cleveland Monopoly Case

The suit of the independent exhibitors of Cleveland against the producers, distributors and the Film Board of Trade of Cleveland, charging monopoly, is not yet closed, according to Samuel Horwitz, attorney for the exhibitors.

Depositions will be resumed on July 11, though negotiations for a settlement are still being conducted. Luther Day of Cleveland is attorney for the distributors in the case.

C. A. Buckley in New York

C. A. Buckley, Fox West Coast treasurer, arrived in New York this week from Los Angeles to confer with Spyros Skouras.

Honor Exhibitor On Anniversary

The twentieth anniversary of the opening of the Peerless theatre, San Francisco, first of a group of six small downtown houses operated by Goldberg Theatres, was celebrated on the evening of June 22 with a banquet at the St. Francis Hotel, tendered by employees. Aaron Goldberg, founder of the circuit, was the guest of honor.

Thomas D. Van Osten, secretary-manager of California Theatre Industries, acted as toastmaster and read telegrams of congratulations from leaders in the amusement industry throughout the country. Among those who made short talks were several employees who have served without a break since the opening of the Peerless. Employees presented Mr. Goldberg with an invitation to the affair engraved on sterling silver. From the Motion Picture Projectionists' Local No. 162 came an honorary membership in the organization engraved on gold. Various other gifts were presented.

In response, Mr. Goldberg presented interesting figures which disclosed the fact that although he operated but one house for years and that although all his theatres are small, entertainment has been furnished more than 44,000,000 patrons in 20 years. During this time $1,643,000 has been paid in film rentals, $1,300,000 in house rentals and $1,667,000 in salaries.

Other theatres in the group are the Silver Palace, Unique, Circle, Pompeii, Egyptian.

DRAMA FIRST CHOICE OF STORY TYPES, VOTE ON STARS INDICATES

Study of 50 Leading Players Shows Majority Appear in Drama; Comedy-Drama, Comedy, Outdoor Themes Next

Straightforward drama is the choice of the greater number of the country's exhibitors purveying motion picture product to the public, it is indicated as the result of a check up of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S poll of exhibitors, seeking to determine "The Ten Biggest Money Making Stars of 1931-32." Drama takes its place, according to this study, including returns of this week, far above that of three other major categories of story type: comedy-drama, comedy and outdoor melodrama, of which the perennial Western has come to be the chief example.

In the computation, the 50 leaders in the poll to date were classed in accordance with the type of story particularly associated with their appearances on the screen—for example, Marie Dressler and comedy; Greta Garbo and drama are practically synonomous—and ratings were given the story types. The result shows drama with 29, comedy-drama with nine, comedy also with nine and the outdoor melodrama with three of the 50 votes.

It must be borne in mind in this connection, of course, that the classing of the stars in the poll is a matter of judgment. However, the classifications have been arbitrarily noted on the basis of the type of story in which each player has appeared in the great majority of instances, and the type of role in which he customarily performs.

Oddly interesting among the returns from exhibitors over the country is that from the Owl theatre in Grand Rapids, Mich., unique in motion picture exhibition. The theatre, housed in a garage, is owned and operated by four young, but extremely enterprising high school boys, Albert Hefferman, who is manager; Irving Folger, secretary; Donald Blietz, noted as stage manager on the neat stationery of the company, and Jerome Hartger. Somehow coming upon one of MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S star poll questionnaires (regrettably the Owl was overlooked in the original mailing) Mr. Hefferman, in his capacity as president of the company, has communicated the picture preferences of himself, associates and patrons, in the order of profitable return at the box office. The Owl paid $10 each in rental for its selected 10 features. The films, stars and profit obtained from each are listed herewith in the order of greatest profit:

Film and Star	Profit
"Connecticut Yankee"—Will Rogers	$5.60
"Finn and Hattie"—Mitzi Green	5.20
"Dracula"—Helen Chandler	3.75
"Son of India"—Ramon Novarro	3.00
"Sky Raiders"—Lloyd Hughes	2.75
"Follow Thru"—Nancy Carroll	2.75
"Good News"—Bessie Love	2.60
"King of Jazz"—Paul Whiteman	2.50
"Local Boy Makes Good"—Joe E. Brown	2.50
"Animal Crackers"—Marx Brothers	2.40

The list, declares Mr. Hefferman, covers the period at the Owl from September 1, 1931 to June 4, 1932.

The Leaders—thus far

Marie Dressler	74%	Robert Montgomery	14%
Janet Gaynor	68%	Barbara Stanwyck	14%
Joan Crawford	63%	James Cagney	11.6%
Charles Farrell	53%	Fredric March	11%
Greta Garbo	52%	Buck Jones	7%
Norma Shearer	52%	Jack Holt	6.5%
Clark Gable	50%	Buster Keaton	6.5%
Wallace Beery	46%	Ruth Chatterton	6%
Will Rogers	41%	Richard Barthelmess	5.8%
Eddie Cantor	31%	Polly Moran	5.8%
Marx Brothers	30%	Johnny Weissmuller	5.6%
Constance Bennett	29.8%	Tom Mix	5.1%
Joe E. Brown	29.3%	John Barrymore	4.4%
Wheeler and Woolsey	29%	Ramon Novarro	4.4%
George Arliss	28%	Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.	4.2%
Maurice Chevalier	27.8%	Ann Harding	4.2%
James Dunn	22%	Sylvia Sidney	4%
Sally Eilers	21.4%	Lew Ayres	3.7%
Marlene Dietrich	18%	Boris Karloff	3.7%
Jackie Cooper	17.4%	Winnie Lightner	3.5%
Edward G. Robinson	17%	Jeannette McDonald	3%
Lionel Barrymore	16%	Seth Parker	3%
Warner Baxter	15%	Ralph Graves	2.8%
George O'Brien	14.4%	Walter Huston	2.8%
Richard Dix	14%	Laurel and Hardy	2.8%

The week's returns have developed several changes in the listing of the first 10 in the star ranking. Marie Dressler, Janet Gaynor and Joan Crawford have retained their respective first, second and third positions. Charles Farrell has moved up from sixth place last week to the fourth position; Greta Garbo has climbed from seventh to fifth; Clark Gable from eighth to seventh; Norma Shearer from ninth to sixth. Wallace Beery slipped in the new rating from fourth to eighth place; Will Rogers from fifth to ninth. Joe E. Brown has dropped entirely out of the first 10, but still comedy suffers no loss, since the wide-mouthed comedian is supplanted by the wide-eyed comedian, Eddie Cantor.

Freeman Named to Contact Radio Studio Home Office

Charles Freeman has been named contact man between the RKO Radio studio and the home office. He was formerly head of the RKO vaudeville booking department. Mr. Freeman will spend most of his time traveling between New York and Hollywood. He may scout for acting material.

Warner Club Opens Restaurant

Members of the Warner Club, who have club rooms in the New York executive building, now have their own restaurant in the building. The restaurant was opened Monday and over 350 luncheons were served at a cost of 25 cents each.

Motion Picture Club and AMPA Hold Spring Party

The Motion Picture Club and the AMPA, New York, on Thursday will combine forces in a spring party at the quarters of the Club. The affair will feature dancing, dinner, a cabaret floor show and a preview of Earl Rossman's "Dangers of the Arctic," opening on Friday at the Cameo. Erpi equipment has been installed for the showing.

Releases Listed Inaccurately in Ad

Due to an engraver's error, Warner Bros.-First National's advertisement, which appeared in this paper June 23rd, showing the releases of the company from July 2nd to December 31st, contained three inaccuracies. The July 23rd release should have read, "Barbara Stanwyck in 'The Purchase Price;'" the October 15th release should read, "Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Nancy Carroll and Lilyan Tashman in 'Son of Russia;'" and the October 27th release "Barbara Stanwyck in 'Betrayed'."

Otterson in Europe

John E. Otterson, president of Electrical Research Products, is in Europe for a business trip of six weeks.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts from 172 theatres in 31 major cities of the country for the calendar week ended June 25, 1932 reached $1,853,520, a decrease of $13,116 from the previous calendar week, ended June 18, when 172 theatres in 31 cities recorded a total gross of $1,840,404. One new high individual theatre figure was established during the more recent week, at Keith's in Cincinnati, with "The Blonde Captive," while 14 new low individual house records were noted. This compares with one new "high" and 16 new "lows" during the previous seven-day period.

"DIRTY VILLAINS!"
"RESCUE!"
"HOKUM!"
"GOOD OLD DAYS ARE BACK!"

Photoplay Magazine gives you the low-down on Tom Mix and his tony pony Tony in its July issue. It's worth reading. Look:

REMEMBER the good old days? They're back—with Tom Mix racing with death to rescue a pretty girl (Lois Wilson), swaggering fearlessly after dirty villains, lost on the desert with only Tony, his horse, to save him. Who can do that grand old hokum better than Tom and Tony? No one, we'll say! The kids will eat this up and Dad will be glad of the excuse to take Junior.

TOM MIX and TONY in
THE RIDER OF DEATH VALLEY

With Lois Wilson, Fred Kohler, Forrest Stanley, Edith Fellows. Story by Jack Cunningham and Stanley Bergerman. Directed by Al Rogell. Produced by Stanley Bergerman. Presented by Carl Laemmle.

Film Import Quota Directed at U. S. Is Proposed in France

Drastic limitation on the import of American dialogue films into France is seen as the result of a proposed new film quota, approved by the French Superior Cinema Council and forwarded to the Minister of Public Instruction at Paris this week, according to cable advices from Paris.

The proposed quota would nullify the reciprocal film relationship now existing between the two countries. American films have been admitted into France for the past three years without limitation as to number. American film interests in Paris have declared the imposition of quota regulation would create an untenable situation, amounting to discrimination in favor of German motion pictures. According to the proposed restriction, importation of foreign film would be limited to 200, of which only 50 could come from the United States, the rest importing from Germany.

Harold Smith, MPPDA representative abroad, is reported to have declared the restrictions "would conflict with the recent Franco-American commercial treaty giving the United States most-favored-nation treatment." Mr. Smith pointed out that France could produce only about 100 features a year, whereas the theatres of the country need 500. "French cinema owners," Mr. Smith said, "have protested against any sort of restrictions on foreign films and demanded importation of 500 a year."

Carl Laemmle, Recovered, Returns to Hollywood Home

Carl Laemmle, completely recovered from a recent operation at Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, left last Saturday for his home in Hollywood. In order to be on the Coast for the Olympic Games, Mr. Laemmle cancelled his annual trip to Europe.

Prior to his departure he held conferences on the foreign situation with Charles B. Paine, treasurer of Universal, who had gone to Europe in his stead, and Al Szekler, European general manager, who had been summoned to this country.

Si Fabian Named Co-Receiver For Fox Metropolitan Group

Si Fabian has been named co-receiver with the Irving Trust Company, for Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, operating 150 theatres in Greater New York.

All of the group have been turned over to independents, with Skouras and the Frisch and Rinzler circuit operating the greater number of theatres.

Radio City Work Resumed

Approximately 3,000 workers returned to work at Radio City in New York last week following settlement of a building trades strike. Construction, delayed since May 1, was resumed on the RKO theatre, International Music Hall and the RCA building.

A BRITISH RESPONSE

¶ In Motion Picture Herald for June 4, Mr. Martin Quigley presented a discussion of "Reserved for Ladies," produced by London Film Productions, Ltd., and released in the United States by Paramount, terming it "the best picture we have had out of an English studio," and setting forth that this production was evidence enough that the British technique had advanced to a point where it could compete "advantageously with the product of any other studio." In response to this expression, the following letter has been received from Mr. Alexander Korda, a managing director of the London concern:

My dear Mr. Quigley:

I just received the last number of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and I want to thank you for the flattering remarks about my picture, "Reserved for Ladies." It's so encouraging, every word you say about this picture, not only for those producing in England, but for every one making pictures in Europe. I thought that the idea which prevailed here and in Europe some time ago was that the American companies did not want European pictures, is nothing but a silly invention of those who either do not know the business or who are not able to produce pictures of a standard recognized throughout the world.

Your article created a sensation here in London, coming as it does from a publication of the importance of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD. All my English friends are commenting on it and regard it as the greatest encouragement this industry has yet had from America.

Frankly speaking, I am amazed to see so many flattering criticisms about this picture, which, after all, was not intended to be anything more than a program picture. You state "that this film more nearly resembles Hollywood products than anything previously done over here and that this fact should not be despised because Hollywood has without question established a standard to which the public the world over looks."

I don't think that there is a motion picture director in the world who does not recognize the truth of your statement. There is not a motion picture director in the world who did not learn from Hollywood, either through working there or through seeing the pictures from there. Hollywood may have its bad times, economically or intellectually, but it's certain that with all the talent, and in many cases genius, gathered between Culver City and Burbank, Hollywood will come out on top again. And the British motion picture industry is not a rival, but a partner. All my colleagues here work with exactly the same zeal and enthusiasm as they do over there. If there is to be a rivalry, the motion picture theatres at large will derive the profit from it.

You are certainly right when you say that "good pictures," wherever they may be produced, "reflect benefits upon the whole industry of the motion picture."

Although the aim of my letter is nothing else but to express my thanks and appreciation to you for the splendid article, I feel that with your interest in English motion picture production, I can tell you that I just finished a picture for this new company, of which I am the managing director. The title of this film is "Wedding Rehearsal," and it features, besides Roland Young, also George Grossmith, Lady Tree and other great actors of the English stage.

We will soon begin a second production under the direction of Miss Leontine Sagan, who directed "Maedchen in Uniform," the German picture which is most successful at present in Berlin, Paris and London, running everywhere from 15 to 30 weeks. When you see this picture you will agree with me that it is one of the finest pictures produced since the advent of talking pictures.

The new picture will depict the life of Oxford and Cambridge students, and I am sure that it will interest American audiences.

Yours,

ALEXANDER KORDA.

¶ London Film Productions, Ltd., as a company, has quite as much international flavor as Mr. Korda's letter would indicate. Its directors include: Mr. George Grossmith, chairman; Rt. Hon. Lord Lurgan, K.C.V.O.; Lajos Biro, Hungarian; J. S. Cerf, French; J. R. Sutro, Mr. Korda, Hungarian; and A. C. N. Dixey, M.P.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Robinson, Ill.

DEAR HERALD:

Joe Hewlett of the Strand theatre here in Robinson, has never been very strong for the women, but there was one who took him into camp the day before we got there just like nobody's business. A woman called on him and represented herself to be the authorized agent for the MOTION PICTURE HERALD. She told Joe that his subscription to the HERALD had expired and she wanted to renew it. He took it for granted and told her to renew his subscription and also write a subscription for Mr. Dalrimple of Oblong. She told him she would write both subscriptions for $4 for one year. Joe thought this sounded rather fishy, but he told her to write them up. She told him to make the check in her name because she wouldn't get credit for it unless he did, but Joe refused to make the check in this way but made it payable to the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, but added her name on the check at her request.

She took the check to a filling station and told the man she would bring her car down there and get some gas and asked him to cash the check, which he did. He is still waiting for her to bring the car. He took the check to the bank and it was turned down for want of proper endorsement, so the filling station man is out four dollars but is in four dollars' worth of experience. Joe's subscription does not expire until April, 1933, but when he called up the next day he gave us a subscription for Mr. Dalrimple which he hopes will hold water. We hope so, too. Joe says he is through with women for life, but you never can tell about these Robinson boys.

The HERALD advises us that there is no female woman on earth who has authority to write subscriptions for the HERALD, and we are calling this incident to the attention of you boys so you will not be hooked by any blonde or brunette who may call on you claiming to represent the HERALD.

Joe's theatre has the reputation of having the best sound of any theatre in the Middlewest, and many exhibitors from all over the country go there to hear it. We have heard a great many different sound installations but never any as good as there is in the Strand.

Joe reports that his business since the first of May has gradually sagged off until it is only about 60 per cent of what it was a year ago. We have found this to be true wherever we have gone throughout the rural communities. Also that the Saturday night business has declined to, in most cases, 50 per cent of what it has formerly been. This would indicate that the farmers are hit by this depression even more than the town folks, if that could be possible, since the Saturday night business comes mainly from the farming communities. If you ever get near Robinson go and call on Joe, it will be worth your while.

This being Sunday, and having the alternative of going to church or driving down to Oblong and calling on our good friends, Mr. Mrs. Dalrimple and Mr. and Mrs. Price, who operate the theatre there, we chose the latter, since we were leaving Robinson next day. If you want four hours to slip away so fast that you won't notice it, go and call on these delightful folks. We lost four hours of time but we gained a whole day of delightful experience. Then we drove back to Robinson and played two rounds of golf with Joe, and how that Joe can play golf. Oh Boy!

Mr. E. H. Hayes of the Grand theatre at Sullivan, and Mr. M. O. Musser of the Lyric of Casey and the Old Trails theatre at Greenup report business very bad with no prospect of improvement until the present crop is harvested and prices advance to above cost of production. This is the same condition we find throughout the Middlewest, and there is no use trying to make ourselves believe differently.

Ralph Endicott of the Pythian theatre at Marshall is the present owner and operator. When we called there two years ago a man by the name of Cox operated the house. Mr. Endicott was out billing his show when we called and if there is a chance to get business in Marshall we believe Ralph will get it, for his slogan is: "The Old Guard Dies But Never Surrenders."

Champaign, Ill.

L. J. Kranzfelder of the Star at Villa Grove also operates the theatres at Crissman and Newman. He thinks, however, that he will have to close the Crisman and Newman houses because of poor business. His Villa Grove house is a very good one and the town looks like a snappy place and well able to support a good house. We had a very delightful visit with Mr. Kranzfelder.

Gene Russell, who operates the Rialto at Champaign, has the largest house we have seen for a considerable time. He was playing to almost capacity at the first show and a considerable number waiting for the second show. When a popular manager and a house like the Rialto can't do business then there "haint no such animal." Gene expects business to fall off during vacation. This is where the state university is located and the usual enrollment is around 12,000, which means a lot to the theatre business when the school is open. If you have never met Gene you've missed a whole lot, for he's a prince without the court regalia.

J. A. Weece of the Galva theatre at Galva is also connected with the theatre at Farmer City. He is a swell fellow to meet and he showed us more courtesy than we were enittled to. He says both of his houses are getting by and then he knocked wood. We did, too. His main complaint is poor pictures. He says good ones get business and poor ones ruin it.

We met Mr. Alger for the first time at Peru. Mr. Alger owns a string of eight theatres and is now remodeling a theatre at Mendota at an expense of around $10,000. That takes nerve at this time, but Mr. Alger has it. He believes that business is going to come out of this slump. We do, too, but neither of us can prophesy just when. There are a lot of theatre men who hope it will be soon. Mr. Alger is a regular fellow and we judge is a hustler. In Mr. Alger's office we met our old friend Mr. Olson, whom we met for the first time in Richmond, Indiana, two years ago. He was managing a theatre for Fitzpatrick & Mackelroy at that time but is now assisting Mr. Alger in the management of his theatres. Olson knew us the minute we stuck our mug inside the door, which proves that he has a good memory.

When we were in Morris two years ago Fred Anderson was starting to build a new theatre. This theatre has been in operation for about 18 months and it is a dandy, and from what we can learn it is the pride of Morris, and considering the present depression, the theatre is doing good business, which would be expected with such a house and such a manager.

Morris is a town of about 6,000, located in an excellent farming community, and we judge that the depression is not felt as keenly as in other localities we have visited, especially in the coal mining districts of southern Illinois where the mines have been shut down for a year or more. Conditions there are terrible.

Bernhard Makes Managerial Changes in Warner Theatres

Joseph Bernhard, general manager of Warner Theatres, has made the following new assignments in the Chicago district: E. M. Lewy, assistant manager of the Jeffery, to the Shore as manager; Donald Malloy, formerly of the Shore, to the Shakespeare; L. S. Stein, former manager of the Shakespeare, to the Parthenon, Hammond, Ind., succeeding R. L. Cain, who is awaiting a new assignment.

Changes in the New England district are as follows: Mr. LaValley, former manager of the Garde, New London, to the Philadelphia zone; Tom Brown, manager of the Roger Sherman, New Haven, returns to the Garde; Mr. Sanson, manager of the Strand, New Britain, will manage the Roger Sherman; Louis LaBine, manager of the Embassy, New Britain, will manage the Strand in New Britain.

Operation of Fox Atlanta Theatre Dropped by Loew's

Loew's discontinued operation of the Fox theatre in Atlanta on June 24, with the termination of a two-year agreement. The house is at present dark, pending decision by Fox Theatres Corporation with regard to future operation.

Loew's Grand in Atlanta is closed for alterations, present plans calling for no official outlet of MGM product in the city until the re-opening of the Grand. "As You Desire Me," Greta Garbo vehicle, scheduled for the Fox, has been leased to the Paramount, strongest local competitor of the Fox.

RKO Establishes Cost Control Department for All Theatres

RKO has established a cost control department for its theatre division, under the supervision of Herschel Stuart, in charge of field operations.

Paramount Signs Goldburg

Jesse J. Goldburg, for years an independent producer, has been signed as a writer by Paramount. Irving Lande and Manny Wolf has also been added to the writing staff. Mr. Lande was a New York stage producer, while Mr. Wolf was First National story editor at one time.

Rockett Sheehan's Assistant

Al Rockett was appointed assistant to Winfield Sheehan, in charge of production at the Fox Coast studio, by Sidney R. Kent, president, before Mr. Kent left the Coast last week.

WHY SAUCER SHAPED CRATERS?

By F. H. RICHARDSON

In commenting upon the answer of G. E. Doe to Section A, Question 114, in the Blue-book School, I remarked I did not know of any satisfactory reason yet advanced in explanation of crater formation. I invited engineers of the National Carbon Company and others to tell us just exactly why a saucer-shaped crater formed on the tip of the positive carbon. The first answer came from our old friend, John Griffith, who says:

"You say you would appreciate some logical explanation of just why a saucer-shaped crater forms on the positive carbon tip. So would I! The cause of the concave (cup-shaped) crater with an a.c. arc is obvious, but it is not so obvious with one using d.c.

"By studying the action of a d.c. arc we are led to the conclusion that direct current is not an even stream of electrons, but that it is periodic. By periodic I mean that the stream flows in detached groups, which build up from zero to a maximum and then return again to zero. These groups will be separated from one another by a space equal to the length of each group.

"Wave length and frequency can be applied to such a stream of electrons, whereas it cannot be applied to a steady stream. The wave length would be the distance from the front tip of one group to the front tip of the next group. It would include the length of one space plus the length of one group. The frequency of such a stream would be the number of groups which pass a stationary point in one second.

"To the layman this simple fact may not seem important. To the physicist it is very important because he knows he must use the factors of wave length and frequency when he considers a problem involving a stream of particles, although the physicist has never been able to explain why that is so.

"Returning to the obvious reasons why an a.c. arc crater forms concave (cup-shaped), we all know that an alternating current flows first in one direction and then in another. In this matter, however, we will ignore one half the cycle and consider only the action while the current is flowing in one direction.

"The current starts at zero, builds up to a maximum and again diminishes to zero. This action represents one half-cycle which corresponds to one whole period. During the other period the carbon is negative, and the crater which formed during the positive period disintegrates and tends to become pointed, which accounts for the reduced area of a.c. craters. [Which amounts, as I see it, to saying that the crater diminishes because of the fact that only one-half the power is used in crater formation that would be used were the current an equal amperage of d.c.—F.H.R.]

"During the positive period the crater is bombarded first by a few electrons, which start at the crater area and continue to strike there during the entire period. The crater therefore begins to form at its center, and as the period progresses the area of bombardment is gradually increased as the electron stream grows in volume during the first half of the period. At the end of the period the entire crater area is under bombardment. Then when the current begins to drop towards zero again, the area of activity decreases, until finally only the center remains active and at the end of the period that too is dead.

"Examining this again we see that the center of the crater is bombarded with electrons for a much longer period than are its outer zones, hence it is not difficult to understand that the center of the crater disintegrates or burns to a greater depth than do the outer zones, which action is to some extent aided by the soft core material in the carbon's center. This action continues until the maximum crater depth has been attained.

"The failure of the rim of the crater to burn as deeply as does its center, of course, alters the resistance between the point of the negative carbon and all points of the crater floor. It operates finally to set up a condition in which there is less resistance between the point of the negative carbon and the rim of the crater than between the negative carbon tip and the center of the crater. When this occurs the central stream will in the very nature of things be directed in greater proportion to the rim of the crater, and in this way a maximum of depth of crater floor, viewed as a whole is maintained.

"From the foregoing it is seen that it is entirely natural for a periodic current to form a concave crater, but up to this time no one seems to have suspected that direct current is periodic. Sometimes much may be learned from such simple things as the shape of the crater of an electric arc.

"Astronomers measure the velocity of stars from a slight shift in the spectrum. To me the shape of the crater offers confirmation of the theory I set forth in my answer to section C of Question 114 of the Blue-book School, wherein I showed that the flow of electrons across the arc was due to the excitement or oscillation of the cathode atoms, and not to the hot gas stream; that the action across an arc presents no real difference in principle as compared with the flow of electrons between the cathode and anode of a p.e. cell. Physicists know that all radiation is periodic, though they have thus far been unable to determine the cause of it because of their preconceived ideas of the atom, which will not permit them to do so."

As to the foregoing, I do not quite know what to say, except that I know that John Griffith has made a very intensive study of atomic action. He has in fact, prepared a treatise on this subject which has received very serious consideration from scientists. Incidentally, I might add that any one of you men who might be interested in one of the most amazing works ever put out by a working projectionist, may secure a copy of this treatise, at absolute cost, by forwarding the sum of 50 cents to John Griffith, 13 Holbrook Street, Ansonia, Conn. Whether you can understand John's arguments or not I do not know, but he certainly has gone down to the very foundation of things.

At any rate I have invited the arc department of the National Carbon Company to set forth its views, which its manager, Dr. E. R. Geib, does as follows:

"As to the question raised with regard to why the cup-shaped depression forms on the positive carbon of an electric arc, the explanation will probably be somewhat different for the two types of arc; that is, the plain arc and the high intensity arc.

"In the case of the plain carbon arc used in projection, there is always a core, but nevertheless with a plain uncored carbon the crater of the positive is always cup shaped, due we know, to the slightly more rapid volatilization of the carbon which occurs at the center of the electrode, because at the center is the hottest part.

"In the case of the high intensity arc, it seems to us that the simplest explanation available is that at any given current a certain amount of flame materials, cerium and other rare earths is volatilized in a given time, while a certain amount of the carbon is also consumed. As the current is increased, for a time the volatilization of the flame materials is more rapid than is the increase in carbon consumption, therefore a cup-shaped crater forms. As the current is still further increased, a balance is struck between the increase in rate of the volatilization of the core flame materials and the rate of consumption of carbon, and in addition to these the superimposing upon these two effects of the blast of ions and electrons from the negative electrode. The final result of the three is the formation of a cup-shaped crater of a depth which is, practically speaking, constant for any given current on a given sized carbon."

Wise exhibitors have found it pays to replace outmoded equipment . . . and so Photophone's business has DOUBLED!

IMAGINE that! More unsatisfactory sound-reproducing equipment replaced in the past six months by RCA Photophone than was replaced in any entire year since sound swept its way through the industry!

Why are exhibitors so willing to spend money in these times? There's only one answer . . . IT PAYS! It sends up the admissions and brings down your cost. Nothing tags a theatre "old-fashioned" quicker than break-downs in equipment or poor reproduction!

Photophone is the only AC equipment available for theatres of all sizes. It eliminates the troublesome battery and motor generator.

Photophone has materially lowered lease prices and contract service charges. If you want to make more money out of your theatre, get in touch right away with the Photophone Division, of the RCA Victor Company, Camden, N. J., or with any of the several branch offices.

Fox to Produce 17 Spanish Features During New Season

Fox has reopened the Western avenue studio in Hollywood for the production of approximately 17 Spanish dialogue features. The company thereby returns to Spanish productions after they were dropped six months ago. John Stone will head the department, assisted by Gene Forde, Sam Wurtzel, business manager; Sam Schneider, assistant business manager; Louis Moore, scenario and research head; Louis Loeffler, technical department head. The first feature, a musical, will be started in about two weeks, with Jose Mojica starring. Mr. Sheehan, while in New York recently, signed Catalina Barcena, Spanish actress who starred in a Fox Spanish film last year; Rubio Lopez, Martinez Sierra, scenarists; Raul Roulien, actor.

Ufa Plans Shorts Series

Ufa, large German producing company, plans the production of from 15 to 20 two-reel short subjects to be made in three days each. Novices will direct and players will be chiefly young legitimate stage actors who have had no previous stage experience, according to George R. Canty, American trade commissioner at Berlin.

Mexican President Appoints Official as Nation's Censor

President Rubio of Mexico has appointed a committee of one to act as national censor. Rafael Perez Taylor, chief clerk of the state department, will act in that capacity, since local censorship boards in Mexico City and the provinces are apparently unable to bar films deemed offensive.

Mr. Taylor will review all pictures which are suspected of being objectionable to the country or any friendly nation. His decision will be final with respect to the showing of pictures throughout the country.

Exhibitors To Honor Schnitzer

New York exhibitors on July 6 will tender a testimonial luncheon to Eddie Schnitzer, recently resigned from Fox to become New York exchange manager for Educational and World Wide. The affair will be held at the Hotel Astor, with 600 expected to attend.

Named District Manager

Percy A. Bloch, manager of the Philadelphia Paramount exchange, has been appointed district manager, with supervision over Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

THE PRESS BOOK PROGRESSES!

THE small group theatre manager and the little independents used to alibi their poor show-selling activity by saying that the circuit manager was in a better position to do things because the circuit home office furnished him with elaborate merchandising manuals. To a certain extent this was true. The larger organizations always had a sizable force of experienced showmen working out individual campaign books as the pictures were released. This information, including a large assortment of attractive newspaper ad suggestions, was sent out to the circuit manager and gave him the benefit of some mighty good brain-power back at the home office.

Press books have improved tremendously in the past year or two and—if we may be pardoned—we claim a measure of credit for the improvement. We have long maintained that grinding out a lot of hooey and dishing it to exhibitors as supposedly sensible advice on how to sell the picture to the public, could never survive indefinitely. After seeing an endless flow of such material, the manager and exhibitor —yes, even the circuit men—used the old-style press book just to get a synopsis of the story, cast and credits; and then threw it into the waste paper basket where it belonged.

No one but a rattle-brained sap would even have attempted to make use of the exploitation suggestions, and as for the newspaper ads—it is not proper for us to use the language necessary to describe some of them.

Press books today have a definite and important mission and should fit into the general scheme of things for every theatre in the land. The advance publicity stories are being written, as a general rule, by men who know what to write and how to write it. They can be rewritten for local use with local color added according to the judgment of the house manager.

The mats available for ads are made up with the idea in mind that they must be cut apart for use in many forms. For this reason you cannot help but create good-looking newspaper ads in working out attractive advertising. Smart showmen are quite able to compete with theatres having ad artists on the payroll. All of which we are more than delighted to talk about on these pages.

How much further the distributing companies will go in the matter of press book improvements we cannot predict, but Arthur Mayer of Paramount now takes the lead by combining all the good ideas of their former press book together with the best parts of their Publix Theatre campaign books. The result is a far-reaching and intelligent piece of work which should make it possible for any kind of a theatre to sell Paramount product in their community.

Of course, even this idea can be ruined by spoiling a good idea. But we are rather of the opinion that they will improve as they go along and, knowing a little about the showmanship background of some of the men responsible for this new sales manual, we feel certain that managers and exhibitors alike will rejoice in something really worth while.

Fox, sometime back, inaugurated an idea somewhat along these lines but not on the same scale. As a result the Fox press books have been getting better and better with each new picture.

Columbia has lifted its press sheets out of the waste-paper basket class and put them on a par with the majority of the other major companies.

Ditto for most of the others, thereby proving that every phase of the industry must expect to keep pace with the rapidly changing slants within the business itself. Press books remained stationary for too long a time. Those formerly responsible for them just would not recognize the need for improvement, but, despite this handicap, we have watched the progress of the newer press-campaign book with no little interest and our gratification will no doubt be reflected in the added interest which will be taken in general towards them.

The next move we hope to see in the trend for improvements should be centered on posters. Here is what was once an important part of most selling activities until they were forced by sheer necessity to discard them altogether.

Good lithographs can again grace poster stands all over the country. But they will have to be turned out with a whole lot more common sense than seems to be going into them now.

Maybe some of these changes are not coming along as fast as we think they should. We will remain patient and see what happens next.

"CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Business is business here in New York and this is just one example of how local showmen strive to keep up grosses. Incidentally, this is NOT a laugh; it's too darned serious. And if we ever started to show some of the other gags being worked these days you'd wonder what's become of showbusiness. (Maybe you're wondering anyway.)

NEWSPAPER PLUGGED THEATRE IN GRATIS ADS FOR McCORMIC

We note that Keith McCormic, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Sunnyside, Wash., cashed in not long ago on the fact that an enterprising newspaper in his town began an advertising campaign for the boosting of local payrolls. In a four column ad donated by the paper, Mack fell heir to exactly 560 lines of free space.

Following the reproduction of a photograph of the theatre copy read, "Follow the Crowd to Our Amusement House." 'The Man Who Played God' is still fresh in the memories of those who saw it. We need more of these pictures shown in theatres the size of the Liberty. Sunnyside's Theatre is a Credit To Any Town. Senior and Junior Mercy are to be commended for giving this district a theatre, the size, style and quality of the Liberty. It brings folk to town from a radius of 15 miles. Their local staff is courteous and obliging. The local manager, Keith McCormic, is ready at all times to help any Community worthwhile enterprise or social activity. We are glad that Senior and Junior Mercy have an establishment in Sunnyside." A line at bottom of ad was taken by the newspaper to state that it donated the space.

Seems to us that there is food for considerable thought in the above copy, aside from the fact that McCormic received it gratis. It tells the story of a well operated theatre and one which the paper took pride in including among its mention of local institutions. Other newspapers in other towns might be interested in plugging worthwhile local enterprises, hence we're passing the idea along.

KEN HAYDEN USING VARIETY OF STUNTS TO BOOST BUSINESS

Business keeps up about the same out at Howard Beach, Long Island, N. Y., reports Ken Hayden, manager of the Howard Theatre, but we have a hunch that his efforts have greatly helped keep the box office up to par.

In addition to running his Gift Nights on Saturdays and Pay Nights on Thursdays he's trying out a new one called Guest Ticket Night, whereby a series of passes will be given away. First honors will rate a month's pass, second, a 3-week's pass, third, a two week's pass, and seven other one-week passes. It's a little too early to give his fellow showmen a full report on this stunt so we'll have to await further word.

Concluding that merchants in his neighborhood were fed-up with various tie-ups and promotional schemes, Hayden has attempted to remedy the situation by promoting a Merchants Association. He called his first meeting a short time ago and had a remarkable response to the move. A good speaker was secured from the Jamaica Chamber of Commerce and his talk "pepped" the men up in great shape. A Brooklyn newspaper had a reporter cover the event, thanks to Hayden, and gave the story a two-column head in the news section, mentioning name of manager and theatre. Right now, Ken thinks, these storekeepers are so enthusiastic that he could go out and sell them most any kind of a reasonable tie-up.

He is also working on the formation of a weekly newspaper, entirely independent of the theatre ad of which we'll tell you more just as soon as we receive additional information.

We believe all his fellow Club members will agree that Hayden is doing a whole lot to keep his house before patrons and business men in his neighborhood and we will await further word from him with interest. We have also passed along his best regards to Russ Cohen, of the Garden Theatre, and Russ is shooting his right back. Keep socking the old ball, Ken, and keep in touch with headquarters.

MOSS IN MIDST OF BIG CAMPAIGN FOR RETURN OF VARIETY

Latest reports concerning the activities of Richard Moss, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Los Angeles, Calif., disclose that this well known member of our organization is right up to his ears in a campaign being waged in the interest of the return of vaudeville.

The catchline is, "Big Time Vaudeville Comes Back to the Orpheum." Every conceivable form of advertising is being used—billboards, radio, newspapers, stunts, throwaways, trailers, lobby, letters from important dignitaries, wires from stars and the big arcs are all set for opening night. Jack Dailey, publicity man, is assisting.

Sounds like a real old fashioned Dick Moss campaign, doesn't it fellows? You'll hear more about it as soon as we can gather up the details.

ORLOVE'S LETTER

Louis Orlove, manager of the Uptown Theatre, Milwaukee, did not overlook the fact that the Class of 1932 in his neighborhood held many potential patrons for his theatre.

He secured a list of graduates and mailed each one a letter of congratulation, stating that presentation of the letter during Commencement Week would entitle the holder to free admittance. The letter also mentioned the institutional value held by the theatre in the neighborhood, and stated that wherever the graduate might go he or she would receive the same friendly welcome in every link of the Fox chain.

ATTRACTIVE BANNER HELPED SAMPHYA PUT OVER BANGKOK SHOW

It's a long way from Broadway to Bangkok, Siam, but when it comes to the bannering of a theatre it's just a step around the corner, as far as similarity of method is concerned.

Note the accompanying illustration of a photo sent the Club by E. Samphya, manager of the Phathanakorn Cinema, showing how "All Quiet" was advertised. A big banner, with big letters spelling out the title was stretched across what is apparently the front of the arcade entrance leading to the theatre. Bursting shells decorated the banner and flags of all nations further lent to the scheme.

Communications from Samphya and other Round Table representatives in far off countries are always interesting and serve to strengthen the conviction that methods of showmanship are more or less the same the world over. We thank him for sending the photograph and hope he will remember his Club in the future.

A novelty post card was mailed out a short time ago by Charles P. Carroll, manager of the Audubon Theatre, New York City, to exploit "Disorderly Conduct." The back of the card he has headed "Summons" in bold face type. The words in caps in the following quotation were written in ink in the dotted line space on cards. The balance was printed. The card was numbered and purported to have originated at the "City Magistrate's Court, Amusement District, in The Name of Better Entertainment." The rest follows:

"You are hereby summoned to appear before the Show—District Magistrate's Court —Audubon Theatre—City of New York, from Friday, —— through Monday, ——, to answer a charge of Disorderly Conduct made by police officer Spencer Tracy, —— precinct. If You Fail to Appear you will miss one of the most vital, thrilling dramas of the year, featuring Sally Eilers, Spencer Tracy," etc., etc. The card was signed Spencer Tracy, Police Officer; Charles P. Carroll, Managing Director.

LOUIS VAUGHN AND HIS STAFF TURNING OUT FINE DISPLAYS

We're going to try our level best to reproduce examples of some of the work being turned out by Louis Vaughn and his staff at the Fox-Dodge Theatre, Dodge City, Kansas, but the snaps at hand fall somewhat short of requirements on account of small size and lack of sharpness. However, it is easy for us to see from the originals that these boys are making effective displays and merchant tie-ups.

The smaller of the two photos illustrates a poster made for "Dancers in the Dark." The top portion above the catchline, "The Girl They're Talking About," really ran to a clipped-off peak but we had to trim it. The portion below the face of Hopkins broadened out into a base on the left and showed considerable more of the lady's locks than portrayed here.

The larger photo shows one of two window tie-ups sold a jewelry store and clothing shop on the strength of the line, "If You're 'Girl Crazy' Go Get Her." The jewelry store followed this line with, "We have the ring," while the clothing shop used the same lead line and followed with,

"Buy a New Suit." As Vaughn states, the same copy can be used for a tie-up with a furniture dealer, such as "If You Are 'Girl Crazy' Go Get Her, We'll Furnish The Home," etc.

We're sorry that Vaughn's snaps will not do full justice to these attractive displays but trust that the idea has been clearly described for others who may want to carry out similar poster design and merchant tie-ups. Regardless of all this, however, we are obliged to him for sending word of what he has been doing and will look forward to hearing from him again in the near future.

It is the Club's custom to publish photos from time to time showing what members are turning out in the poster line. Others are invited to submit evidence of their work.

LOOK before you Book!

In my opinion not all good pictures are made in America. That is why I negotiated for a number of features that combine the best European and American methods and personnel. Then I went abroad. I made suggestions. I picked stories, players, directors. Powers Pictures are produced for American audiences—according to American standards and tastes.

Every day you are asked to book blindly—to load up your booking sheet with a lot of highly priced features—"sight unseen." But I offer you Powers Pictures on a "Look before you Book" basis. You know what you are buying. You judge the entertainment value at no risk.

You will find Powers Pictures are different. The crowds that the current "cycles" of crime, sex and sophisticated smut are keeping out of your theatres, will come back to see the human, dramatic Powers features.

Authors whose books sell by the millions wrote the stories. Past masters in pleasing the public, these writers can find and express human emotions that are based on neither sex nor crime. They present warm-blooded, real people in out-of-the-ordinary dramatic situations.

Your patrons will welcome the fresh faces and personalities of the highly trained and talented Powers players; they will revel in fascinating settings and backgrounds impossible to reproduce over here. You will welcome Powers prices and this opportunity. I saw these pictures before I selected them. You have the same privilege.

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

By GUY JONES

PORTER IS HANDLING PUBLICITY FOR CASEY AT MELBOURNE HOUSES

The last time the Club heard from John Porter he was in charge of the Palace and Princess Theatres in Melbourne, Australia, but Dan Casey, general manager for Universal in that country, wanted a hustling fellow to take charge of publicity in Melbourne, so that's what Porter is doing these days—and doing a good job, we'd say, after a glance through some trade reports and local newspapers.

In addition to securing a half-page of photos on "Frankenstein" in a conservative, hard-boiled newspaper, a stunt he pulled on the same picture must have been a cuckoo. The picture happened along at Commencement Day celebration and Porter contrived a tie-up with a group of University students to take part in a burlesque operating exhibition on the platform of a truck.

Staged Mock Operation

While leading authorities viewed the spectacle and horrifiedly made inquiry as to whether it was an advertising stunt, the students, dressed in regulation medical smocks, rode through the streets and performed their mock operation on a fellow classman. Forty students rode the five-ton truck and helped create the "Monster" on an operating table. Both sides of the truck bore banners reading, "Dr. Frankenstein Creates a Monster—Ruin 'Em Smith Drags Him Apart." At intervals during the procession, students cautioned the onlookers to "beware of the Frankenstein Monster." At the last moment the truck driver refused to have anything to do with the stunt and Porter had to take the wheel.

Porter also had a thrilling experience not long ago in an effort to hold a first showing of a newsreel on Phar Lap's victory at the Agua Caliente truck. After driving 600 miles at an average of 55 miles per hour in a high-powered car he was forced to play second fiddle to a rival film man, due to a forced landing of the airplane that carried the film. However, he made record time at that and was a close second with his shots of the race.

The above well illustrates the kind of work being done in far-off countries for the sake of showbusiness by members of this organization. It's very interesting to hear from Porter again and we hope he'll not wait such a long time before again communicating with headquarters. We wish him continued success in his endeavors.

HANDSOME SOUVENIR PROGRAM PUBLISHED BY STODEL, AFRICA

A communication from J. H. Stodel of African Theatres, Cape Town, South Africa, announces the opening of the Capitol Theatre, a new Consolidated link at Pretoria, S. A., and it is our privilege to glance through a copy of the attractive program prepared for the occasion.

This program compares favorably with the best issued on similar occasions in our own country and Stodel deserves much praise for the way he handled the work. Practically every right hand page describing the theatre and its appointments is faced on the left by a page ad from some firm which played a part in the construction of the theatre, leaving no room for doubt as to the small amount of production cost borne by the theatre company.

The Club is glad it was of some service to African Theatres in the matter of helping this firm get in touch with theatre people in the U. S. A. on the program matter and that also goes for any other Round Table representative in far off countries. Mr. Stodel expects to open another house, the Plaza, next September, and we'll tell you something about this when the event occurs. In the meantime, we'd like to hear what is doing in showbusiness in Cape Town and other cities on the circuit.

Reis Promoted!

Jack Reis has been promoted from assistant to manager of the U. S. Theatre, Bronx, N. Y. Reis is an experienced showman, having served under managers Bill Brock, Max Cooper, Mort Green, Sig Solomon and Jules Fields. He is a nephew of Mose Reis, founder of the old Reis Circuit, and of Charles Reis, at one time manager of the Rialto, Strand, Rivoli and Capitol Theatres, Broadway, New York City.

NAYOR CONSTRUCTED A PRACTICAL FRONT

The attractive front made by H. T. Nayor, manager of the Warner Theatre, Worcester, Mass., was not only strikingly effective but practical for use on other pictures. Notice the uprights and cross section of compo board with mortices for display of stills. The uprights can be used again and again for the same purpose. Panels in the entrance doors to auditorium are also used for a similar display. The large cutout on easel in the lobby contributed to the general scheme.

GOLDBERG AND BECK HANDLED CAMPAIGNS ON GOLF RE-ISSUES

Lou Goldberg, in charge of advertising and exploitation of Warner's Broadway Theatres, New York City, and his assistant, Meyer Beck, have been looking after the re-issue of the Bobby Jones Golf shorts this season at the Strand Theatre. The accompanying illustration is a reproduction of a post card mailed out to all golf clubs and officers in the Metropolitan district. A 16x9 inch card bearing the same head and schedule of shorts to be shown at both Strand and Warner theatres was also sent to all clubs. The shorts also receive mention in all newspaper ads, on marquees and in lobbies.

This popular game is in full swing and Goldberg's tip is a timely one to all club members who contemplate making their first or second showing of the Jones Series. Last summer there was a lot of activity on the part of many showmen when exploiting these pictures and it resulted in many profitable tie-ups with local golf clubs, sporting goods stores, etc.

This Might Go Over!

Over in London and other English cities the newsboys are prohibited by law from shouting their wares and therefore resort to use of posters such as our regular one-sheets to play up some news feature, etc. Club members who have tie-ups with their local newspapers might try the gag. The very novelty of a silent newsboy in this country would be apt to get attention.

BATHING BEAUTY REVUES!

Always a surefire tonic for the box office, this year's should prove even more inviting for the patrons because of the newer styles on bathing suits.

Best handled by merchant and newspaper tie-up with the stores furnishing the models or the newspaper securing them as entries for a Bathing Beauty Popularity Contest. Great care should be exercised in the selection of the girls to avoid picking those of questionable reputation in the town.

As in all activity of this nature, too much work is involved to warrant making it only a one-night affair. Get the most out of your efforts and the effectiveness of the idea so that it runs for a period of about four weeks, one night a week, and then a whirlwind finish on a special night to determine the final winner.

Each week's Show can feature some particular line of bathing and beach clothes. If any of the girls are talented, let them do special numbers of songs or dances or both. If they cannot entertain, it would pay you to engage several to break up the monotony of the Show and serve as a good excuse for the various models to parade around the stage during the singing of a number.

Great possibilities in this idea. Last year's Club pages carried any number of successfully engineered Bathing Beauty and Popularity Contests. Look them over and watch this month's issues for additional dope.

ROSENBERG HITTING USUAL PACE OUT AT SAN DIEGO THEATRE

Just to let fellow Club members know that Jack Rosenberg, manager of the Plaza Theatre, San Diego, Calif., is still hitting the ball out in his town, we'll tell about a little gag he used on the sailor boys; of how he made up an attractive booklet from ordinary exchange mats, and of a tie-up for free printing and distribution of window cards.

The gag that brought the sailors to his theatre was a little envelope with calling card enclosed, copy reading "Meet Me At the Plaza Theatre Tonight And We'll See Edward G. Robinson in 'Two Seconds'—Vivienne Osborne." The envelope was addressed in handwriting, "Personal." The message inside was also handwritten.

The folder made for "Crowd Roars" from exchange mat, as Rosenberg points out, shows what can be done along these lines. A single mat of a speeding auto and words of the title decorated the first page. The second featured photos of Cagney, Blondell, Dvorak and Linden, each captioned with a catchline. The same mat used on the first page, although much smaller, occupied space in the center. Horizontal and vertical Scotch rule borders enclosed catchlines on the following page, and the fourth showed head cuts of Cagney and Blondell, with another speeding auto mat below. Scene cuts of two racing cars were staggered on the fifth page, along with title and list of cooperating racing drivers. The next page depicted a smash-up scene with copy relating to production at Hollywood. The lead-line on the seventh read, "Its Thrills Begin Where Others Leave Off," followed by additional scene mats of leading characters. The last page carried title, names of featured players, playdates and theatre. Two pieces of 8½x5½ coated stock clipped together made the folder.

The window cards, 300 in all, were promoted by a deal made with Richfield Gas and distributed by company salesmen to every service station within a radius of 40 miles. All stations were good locations and two cards were placed in windows of each station.

All of which would seem to indicate that Jack is after business and, we take it for granted, getting it. His tip on using exchange mats is, we believe, worth taking seriously. Much can be accomplished, as in the folder described, by judicious use of the ordinary garden variety of mat and small cuts made from stills. We will hope to receive other evidence of his handiwork.

SUGGS MADE FINE DISPLAY AT LOW COST

Pictured above is the lobby display made for "Tarzan" by M. S. Suggs, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Bristol, Tenn., most of which was fashioned from a used jungle drop piece obtained from one of the old roadshow type houses. Pieces from the drop were placed in the foyer and around lobby, giving a splendid background. Small trees and branches secured just outside the town and cutout material from regular accessories all combined to create a striking effect.

EGAN SOLD CALGARY BAKER TIE-UP IDEA THAT BOOSTED TRADE

Pete Egan, the Club's well known representative in Calgary, Canada, recently made a profitable tie-up with the manufacturer and distributor of a popular brand of bread. He tells us that he "sold the theatre" to the company and we're setting it down just that way, which, we assume, means that the baker took care of cost of a special 9.30 A. M. show. A large ad stated that every child who brought along a wrapper from a loaf of the bread would be admitted free. It was also advertised that all mothers accompanying their youngsters would be admitted free. A 23 piece dinner set, handled in the usual give-away style, was presented to one of the mothers.

Details of the above piece of promotion are lacking but, knowing Pete Egan as we do, we think it's safe enough to assume that the bakery took care of all cost. If it didn't, then the theatre came in for generous mention in a large size display ad in the newspaper. But we'll bank on it that Showman Egan received even a better break.

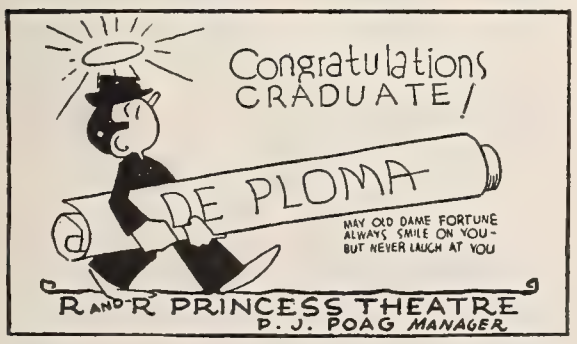
POAG HITTING THE BALL SAME OLD WAY IN DEL RIO, TEXAS

Just when we began to wonder what happened to P. J. Poag, manager of the Princess Theatre, Del Rio, Texas, and one of this Club's consistent contributors, the postman brought us the desired information. He's still in his border town and still hitting the ball with the same old wallop. Following is some evidence to that effect.



Your attention is called to the reproduction of a page ad headed, "Free Theatre

Day." This resulted from a three-cornered deal between theatre, newspaper and merchants, the latter paying the entire cost of the show. The occasion was called "Downtown Day" and special tickets were printed for this "Gift Matinee." The shows were held at 12 noon; 1.30; 3.00, and 4.30 P. M. We note that Poag got in a plug for his night show on one end of the ticket. We believe all will agree that the page co-op gave the Princess a fine break. The newspaper also carried many stories on the show.

While on the subject of tie-ups, let us also state that he recently cooperated with the local fire department for a benefit show. A long, two column ad the newspaper advertised the occasion and while we haven't any details at hand, we'll assume it was handled on a percentage basis, the house retaining sufficient to cover its nut.

Another little gag recently used by Poag, which is illustrated on this page, was the issue of cards of congratulations to graduates. These were sent out to every student participating in the exercises.

Other recent effort included a herald on "Wet Parade," carrying appropriate copy on the "wet or dry" question; a novelty throw-away with safety pin attached for "When A Feller Needs A Friend," and a novelty folder plugging several forthcoming attractions.

That "Free Theatre Day" of Poag's certainly came in for a lot of attention on the part of the cooperating newspaper, being mentioned several times in boxes on the front page. While we are unable to furnish details of this stunt, we believe it's safe to state that the entire cost of the show was taken care of by the participating merchants. On account of the advertising the paper came through with generous publicity.

WHAT WAS WRONG WITH THOSE ADS?

One point we want to emphasize in connection with that experimental group of ads in last week's issue is: that they were expressly made up by Ken Long and were NOT complete ads taken from press books. There may be one or two who will get the wrong impression that we are using this series to find fault with the ads turned out by the press-book crews of the various companies. We are not. Our sole aim is to help you improve your own newspaper advertising through the use of exchange mats.

IMPROVING YOUR NEWSPAPER ADS!

By KEN LONG

(SEE OPPOSITE PAGE)

The answers to last week's questions are as follows:

In layout "A" the title of the feature picture was omitted.

In layout "B" the theatre names and play dates were omitted.

In layout "C" the play dates were omitted.

Layout "D" would not be accepted by the average newspaper because of its size. Few newspapers will accept an ad which is more columns wide than it is inches deep, with the exception of single column ads.

In layout "E" the cast was omitted.

Layout "F" shows the lack of thought put into the preparation of such an ad in that the copy throughout refers to a girl and the ad carries an illustration of a man. The body copy is also too bold . . . it overshadows the title and cast.

Layout "G" is illustration heavy. In ads of this size it is not advisable to use an illustration of such proportions, unless it is a star with outstanding box-office value. If such is the case, be sure that it is a good likeness.

You can judge for yourself the value of an ad in which such information as star or cast, title of attraction, play dates or theatre name has been omitted. Of course such errors are usually caught on the first proof from the newspaper, but a few minutes spent in carefully reading the layout may save hours of time when the error is noticed on the first proof. In reading the layout, keep in mind the four basic facts which should appear in every theatre advertisement . . . namely, WHO, WHAT, WHEN and WHERE.

The layout may be correct, but frequently errors are made in the composing room. Therefore, it is a good plan to SEE A PROOF OF EVERY AD, no matter how small, before it is published! With this proof in hand, the ad-writer who has difficulty in visualizing his layout in type may also find something which should be modified. Time is valuable in daily newspaper advertising, so make any necessary changes, endorse the proof O.K. WITH CHANGES and return it to the newspaper immediately. Even if there are several changes, a capable composing room will invariably attend to them without the necessity of submitting a revised proof. However, if there is any doubt about the corrections being made as ordered, a second proof should be requested.

On the opposite page, illustration "A" is a two column by seven and one-half inch ad on "Merrily We Go To Hell." Exchange mats Nos. 2-AX and 2-A are used. Illustration "B" is a three column by seven inch display using Exchange mats Nos. 2-AZ, 3-A and 3-AZ. Illustration "C" is a one column by three and one-half inch ad. Exchange mats Nos. 1-A and 1-AX are used.

Illustration "D" is a two column by seven and one-half inch ad on "Love Is a Racket" using Exchange mats Nos. 2 and 10. Illustration "E" is a one column by six and one-half inch ad. Exchange mat No. 2 is used. Illustration "F" is a two column by four inch ad using Exchange mats Nos. 4 and 23.

LYNCH SENT MESSAGE TO PATRONS ON LARGE SIZE TELEGRAM FORMS

An enlarged telegram form measuring 11x17 inches was used by Ed Lynch, manager of the Cameo Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., as a plug for "So Big." It bore the following copy:

> "To every man and woman in Bridgeport: The importance of our coming attraction prompts us to send you this huge message warning you not to miss it stop The picture is called 'So Big' and is based on Edna Ferber's Pulitzer Prize Novel stop Barbara Stanwyck one of the screen's most popular actresses plays the leading role stop Many of your favorites are in the cast including Bette Davis stop George Brent stop Dickey Moore and Hardie Albright stop It will be at the Cameo Theatre for one week starting ——— stop No advance in prices stop Best regards ——— Manager Cameo Theatre."

The enlarged telegram has been resorted to in many instances to plug an attraction and a profitable deal can generally be made with either of the big companies in lieu of advertising received. The messages are usually delivered by uniformed messengers.

COOKING CLASS BIG!

Litchard Promoted Cooking Demonstration Series With Fine Results For All Concerned!

SOME time ago we were privileged to publish an excellent article on theatre management by F. M. A. Litchard, managing director of the Morse Theatre, Franklin, Mass., which bore the title "Brick and Mortar." We now take pleasure in presenting the details of a carefully worked out Cooking School tie-up with a local light and power company, a subsidiary of a powerful organization operating throughout New England.

Power Company Tie-up!

The power company agreed to furnish an electric range and furnish an instructor for cooking lessons on the theatre stage every Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday afternoons at 2.15 during the campaign. The time of day was chosen because of it being fifteen minutes before starting time and therefore not interfering with men patronage. Here is a brief resume of the steps taken:

A trained demonstrator was secured; awards were secured from all merchants retailing electric refrigerators, because of light company policy; awards were made at the rate of one or two each Friday at the break; it was necessary for the person receiving the award to be at theatre; each adult ticket purchased during the four-week period was accompanied by a card to be placed in a receptacle in foyer (handled in the regular give-away fashion).

Adding Atmosphere!

Ushers and doormen were clothed in Chef's uniforms during period, a move that occasioned much comment; a 24-sheet on sign cloth was attached to baton in two and displayed with lights during all demonstrations; a special signature cut was made for newspaper advertising during period; all heralds plentifully splashed with displays on all angles of tie-ups (samples at hand are four pages, carrying merchants ads, plugs on current and coming attractions and plugs for cooking school demonstrations); letters were mailed to all secretaries of women's organizations within large radius; letters were written with personal appeal from demonstrator and included pass for entire series of lessons; donation of ten passes secured a vacant store with four large windows for display of awards and advertising streamers (power company turned on electricity in store for night flash).

A radio store was tied up for the broadcasting of an especially made up record through racon horns from tops of buildings (this is a regular tie-up and costs the theatre nothing); all awards were displayed under baby spot in lobby, display enhanced by small figures furnished by the Range company; special sound trailer made up at expense of theatre with announcements of everything pertaining to demonstrations, etc.; all raw material for cooking promoted from chain store company, for which it received credit on trailer and heralds; all finished dinners immediately taken to local charity organization for needy families; free space for theatre in various ads inserted by merchants, and a display of a refrigerator on stage during demonstrations, same used to freeze parts of dinner.

The demonstrator started her act by setting an automatic clock and telling ladies in audience that she was going to enjoy picture with them. When she announced that the dinner will be cooked when the performance is at an end she linked her statement with the fact that each one could do the same thing at home; that is, go to the movies, etc., without worrying about getting a hurry up dinner or having it spoiled.

Must Be Built Up!

Litchard advises those in the smaller communities not to be discouraged if they try out this plan and find that it does not go off with a terriffic bang at the start, as it takes time for the average public to assimilate a new idea, but just keep plugging it for all it's worth and that the stunt will turn out to be a corker for the building of good will and as a box office booster.

Aside from the above, he comments interestingly upon a display of "wooden money" he now has in his foyer. It is actually wooden money which has been in circulation in the city of Tenino, State of Washington. He tells us it offers untold opportunities along the line of "Don't Take Any Wooden Money," etc. As the majority of people are not aware that any such stuff is actually legal tender in some places it takes some explaining; hence, he keeps it in the foyer where people have to pay admission to see it.

This Round Tabler also calls attention to the use of "water glass" in place of mucilage and the fact that it gives much better results than the latter for general use in the work shop. We gather that he refers to silicate of soda, which is really liquid glass. It can be applied with ease and when it hardens it certainly does stay put.

We are mighty glad to hear from Showman Litchard again and wish to thank him for the detailed information set forth above. We know he'll continue the good work at his house and hope that he'll not forget to send along other contributions to this department.

STEARN'S A CHAMP WHEN IT COMES TO PROMOTING CO-OPS

When it comes to promoting trucks and double trucks at no cost to theatre and grabbing the lion's share of space, Harry Stearn, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Williamsport, Pa., need never take a back seat.

Look them over and see if you won't agree that Stearn knows how to put co-ops over. Note the one that carries the Packard Eight ad at the foot of the page, which amounts to about 3¼ inches in depth for the company that footed the bill.

Take a glance at the other ad that ties in a sponsored "Booster Club" with the announcement of a new policy and presence of Willie Creager, a recent importation to Williamsport. As usual, the merchant gets a small part at the bottom of the page and Stearn steals the balance! Not so bad.

These can certainly be classed as worthwhile co-op ads and must have brought a gratifying smile to Harry's countenance when issued. How he gets away with such a lot of free space we're at loss to explain. Maybe he knows the newspaperman's language. Maybe he's just a darn good salesman. Anyway, he delivers the goods.

MITCHELL PROMOTING NUMBER OF COSTLESS CO-OPS UP IN CANADA

One of our Canadian members, no less than Charles H. Mitchell, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Leamington, Ontario, reminds us that some of the showmen in his neck of the country have been somewhat lax in the matter of contributing to this department and straightway proposes to help remedy the situation by sending along some news concerning show business in his town.

We can easily see that the promotion of cooperative ads and other free advertising is not a lost art as far as Mitchell is concerned, a full page in a local newspaper and a four page herald testifying to his ability along this line of endeavor. He lined up a number of merchants for the page on the strength of making an announcement of lower admission prices at his theatre and the herald struck rather a new note in that it was made up in the form of a program.

The first page of the herald carried a masthead for the theatre, followed by, "The Play's The Thing. . . . Highlights of This Issue. . . . Two Barrymores—score together. . . . Style Topics, By S. Ferguson. . . . The Double Feature Special. . . . The Ice Question, By Cook's Hardware. . . . Sky Devils, with Spencer Tracy. Space in the inside spread was equally divided between the theatre and two advertisers, and back page between theatre and one advertiser.

We are obliged to Mitchell for sending along word of his activities and glad to know that he finds these pages interesting. Our answer to the latter is that it's his kind who keep the pages alive. So here's hoping that others of the Canadian contingent will read these lines and pay up their back dues by shooting along some additional notes on show-selling up in Canada.

HARRY LEWIS USING TOY MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY AT RITZ

Every Saturday is Toy Day at the Ritz Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., according to a herald recently issued by Manager Harry Lewis. Following copy at the top which featured the event, attention was called to the feature attractions and short subjects. The titles indicate that care was exercised when selecting the program. Copy at foot of herald instructed the youngster to present the herald to the doorman when asking for a toy. Lack of information prevents us from telling you whether Harry promoted the toys, or not.

BASEBALL STUNT

Charlie Carroll, manager of the Audubon Theatre, New York City, is trying out a base ball stunt which might prove profitable to other Club members.

He recently arranged for Manager Terry of the New York Giants to be guest of honor at the theatre, and on that occasion inaugurated the "Terry Booster Club," an organization of the younger element whose avowed purpose will be to boost the Giants.

The possibilities of such a club will at once become apparent to managers in all cities boasting a membership in the major and minor leagues. Hence, we are passing Carroll's tip along.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

This week's contributor to the poster series is none other than our friend D. Newton Perkins, artist for the Majestic Theatre in Jackson, Miss., where A. M. Jacob holds forth as managing director. In fact, Jacob is responsible for many of the art display ideas executed by Perkins, therefore the two of them, working together, can be honestly credited with the attractive and ticket-selling fronts and posters seen at the Majestic at all times.

The top illustration shows a group of small posters on popular newsreels, shorts and cartoons. This idea has been gaining in favor ever since Dave Davidson first emphasized it in a special article for the Short Subject Issue.

The lower illustration is a combination of poster and display. We particularly call your attention to the grouping of stills in triangular form at the upper right of the display. No question about the powerful effectiveness of this sort of work.

SCANLON IS AMUSING HIS PATRONS WITH A GAME CALLED "BINGO"

The craze for all sorts of games these days has found its way to the Warner Theatre, Torrington, Conn., where Manager John Scanlon has been entertaining his patrons with "Bingo," a game based on the old familiar "Lotto." It is handled between the audience and two men on the stage with a blackboard. When identifying marks on the board correspond with the slips handed out to patrons, a holder is entitled to shout "Bingo."

Believing that most everyone is familiar with the old game of "Lotto" and for other good, sound reasons, we're not going into any further details on "Bingo," except to remind all that it has been a most popular form of entertainment at benefits, fairs, resorts, etc. We also think that Johnnie will be glad to supply additional information to the uninitiated upon request.

Among other recent activities of Scanlon's we note that he made a tie-up with a local restaurant whereby the last page of menus are devoted to a plug for current attractions; the issue of special heralds headed, "Torrington's First Talkie Stars in a Three Reel Comedy"; the mailing of post cards with personal endorsement of manager on "Rich Are Always With Us," and a $5,000 Reward herald on "Scarface."

It's been quite some time since the name of Johnnie Scanlon has graced these pages and we're very glad to have him on the active list again. He pulls a lot of interesting stunts up in his home town and we know that every member of this organization will find plenty of practical show-selling information in accounts of his work, if we can prevail upon him to send the dope along at regular intervals.

SMITH TURNED OUT ATTRACTIVE AD FOR CURRENT ATTRACTION

Our attention was called not long ago to one of the newspaper ads being turned out by E. C. Smith, manager of the Carolina Theatre, Chapel Hill, N. C., which we would have gladly reproduced on the Club ad page had there not been considerable copy in small type which would have been lost in so doing.

It was an attractive three-column display enclosed in three and two line borders and headed, "They Came In The Night—I Was All Alone—They Accused Me—I Am Innocent." The feature attraction was "Night Court." A combination of mats, silhouette and otherwise, lent to the general attractiveness of layout.

NO DUES OR FEES!

Our mail bag recently prompts us to again broadcast the fact that there are no initiation fees, dues or charges of any kind in conjunction with your membership in the Round Table Club.

You are likewise under no obligation of any kind other than to keep us posted on your activities and to let us be of whatever help we can to you and your theatre.

JOE FELDMAN'S AUTO RACE IN ALBANY WAS AN EFFECTIVE STUNT

A highlight of the campaign on "Crowd Roars" by Joe Feldman, manager of the Strand Theatre, Albany, was a "Junior Automobile Sweepstakes," in which kid speed demons ranging from five to eight years of age took part.

He hooked up with a local newspaper for the stunt and the front page of the last edition was held to announce the name of the winner. It was, of course, necessary to secure permission from the Mayor and Police Department to have the main street clear of traffic for the duration of the race. Merchants were induced to enter junior model cars bannered with their names, the understanding being that if any of their cars won the kid driving was to get the car.

The Mayor acted as starting judge and the Chief of Police as judge of the finish. The race lasted for twenty minutes and ended directly in front of the theatre. All newspaper advance stories and other advertising and publicity definitely connected the stunt with the picture. The only cost to the theatre were passes ao each of the kids and the two racing cars, which the theatre intended using, anyway, as ballys. The two cars, fully bannered, acted as pacemakers.

Feldman states that Albany hadn't seen so much excitement since Admiral Byrd paraded along the same street.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

From grand opera to the movies briefly sums up the theatrical career of Adolfo Caruso, formerly manager of the United States Theatre, Hoboken, N. J., and now in charge of the Grenada, Corona, L. I., and although there is considerable gap between these two forms of entertainment, we'll go on record in stating that this was an entirely logical and sensible move on the part of the Major.

Adolfo Caruso

Caruso was born in Rome, Italy, and although business pursuit and name may suggest kinship with the departed tenor of international fame, he claims no family associations. He has managed opera companies in Italy, Germany, Holland and the United States, his last connection with opera before entering motion picture show business being the Caruso Music Bureau of Philadelphia.

So far his career in this line has been brief but full of action, having been promoted from the assistant managership of the Embassy Theatre in Orange, N. J., to full charge of the house where is is now located, all in the short space of four weeks.

We predict this manager will go far in show business. They don't make Majors over night in the Army and that's the rank he attained while attached to the Military Intelligence Corps during the World War. From what we can learn he saw plenty of service. He's in another army now—your army and our army of showmen—and we will watch his work with much interest.

SOME NEWSPAPER SUGGESTIONS

Chief among the "don'ts" to be carefully observed in connection with your newspaper contracts is the preparation of reader copy for special or feature story purposes.

Although the average press book contains excellent stories for use in your local paper it must NEVER be clipped and sent to the editor as it comes out of the press book. Always type it out on clean paper double spaced and try to inject a little localized copy in the rewriting process.

No newspaper editor ever respected a theatre manager whose chief claim to ability consisted of a pair of scissors and a paste pot. Yet, they will never credit anyone but yourself if you send them their copy typed out.

The second point is: type out all the text matter to be incorporated into your advertisements. Writing it out in a scrawling long hand, causing everyone in the composing room to get "maderinell" won't bring about good looking ads. In connection with this thought we again call your attention to the Ken Long series on newspaper advertising in which he points out the many better type faces and sizes all of which you ought to start getting acquainted with.

Every newspaper will gladly furnish, upon request, a proof sheet of ALL their available type faces and sizes so that you can intelligently mark your copy accordingly. This eliminates all possibility of the composing room misunderstanding what you want emphasized and brings about a more familiar relationship with one of the most important phases of your job, namely, ad layouts.

The third point is: keep up friendly relations with all departments of your local paper. You can never tell when you will need the co-operation of the sporting editor, advertising manager, business manager, editorial writers, etc. So visit them frequently and extend to ALL of them the courtesy of your theatre.

J. BECCERA TIED-UP WITH AUTO MERCHANT FOR GIVEAWAY OF CAR

We are indebted to J. Beccera, manager of the Uptown Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, for the original photo of the accompanying illustration, which shows some fortunate Clevelander about to become the proud possessor of a brand new motor car.

Beyond the photo and a statement that this stunt proved most successful for the theatre, we can give no further description at the present time. The large sign at the left stated that the car was presented through the courtesy of the car agency and the Uptown Theatre. Of course it was a give-away and handled in the usual fashion, but just what it cost the house we do not know. As you all know, the agency generally stands the greater portion of the cost in lieu of advertising received through having the car in the theatre lobby. In other instances merchants sometimes club together and pay the main share of the expense. There are various methods of promoting an auto give-away, all of which has been dwelt upon from time to time in this department.

The above display was nicely put on, judging from the special sign erected for the occasion and the interested expressions of faces of spectators. Most everybody is anxious to get in on a give-away of this kind, whether the owner of a car or not, for autos always have cash value. Thanks to Beccera for remembering the Club, and we'll hope to hear further from him.

ASSISTING MICKEY MOUSE

A forty-eight-page book explaining to the theatre owner how he can benefit by a vast amount of free publicity in connection with showings of Mickey Mouse shorts has been prepared by United Artists for mailing to 15,000 exhibitors.

This assisting campaign, as it is termed, is based on the fact that larger national advertisers licensed by Walt Disney to manufacture Mickey Mouse articles have appropriated considerable sums to plug the names of theatres playing this short feature. It is claimed that 28 of the largest manufacturers in the country, whose goods are sold through more than 170,000 stores, will insure coverage in every town or city, regardless of size.

Window displays, newspaper ads and direct mailings will not be handled at random, but will be so timed as to intermesh with playdates supplied direct to the manufacturers of Mickey Mouse products by United Artists. Under the new plan "Silly Symphonies" will also come in for exploitation assistance.

Becker, Not Booker!

We learn through the good offices of A. J. Cooper, manager of the Bellevue Theatre, Upper Montclair, New Jersey, that when listing Dave Becker's name among newly-elected Round Tablers we inadvertently set it down as Booker. Dave manages the Broadmoor Theatre, Bloomfield, and Coop tells us he let out a howl when he saw the error. Now that this is straightened out, maybe both these Jerseyites will let the Club know what's going on in showbusiness over their way.

IT REALLY HAPPENED!

By ROY HUFFORD

That "cooler inside" sign does not seem to synchronize with the appearance of this crowd as it left a theatre located close to New York during that last heat spell that knocked local grosses for a row of ashcans. You can't fool Kid Customer. If your house is hot, don't try to tell them it's cool. Just keep quiet.

BURNS ENGINEERED SPLENDID DEAL WITH BIG TELEGRAPH FIRM

A distribution tie-up made with the branch office of one of the large telegraph companies by Will Burns, manager of the Princess and Rialto Theatres, Joliet, Ill., has assured direct distribution of 1,000 weekly pocket programs for each theatre and 2,000 personal current attraction reminders each week. The telegraph company receives in return a one frame trailer every show every day with copy changed, as per direction, four times during the year. This agreement is to run indefinitely. Details of the plans are as follows:

The local branch of the telegraph company delivers and picks up approximately 750 telegrams each week in addition to almost as many contacts with its regular package, personal message pick-ups and contracts with the four large manufacturing firms, six large and popular drug stores, four leading department stores and about fifteen smaller stores, such as florists, candy shops, etc., for delivery service.

Uniformed Messengers

To take care of this work three regular uniformed and well mannered boys are employed. In the event of extra distribution for theatre on special attractions it is agreed to call out a relief boy (in uniform) to concentrate solely on the campaign. Any distribution not taken care of along with regular deliveries is handled between times in order to keep up to the mark of 2,000 contacts each week.

The Theatre management advises the branch office of bookings for both houses at least one week in advance and has provided it with a rubber stamp outfit consisting of upper and lower case 18 point Gothic type and two stamps. One stamp is about 4 x 5 inches in size and the other two inches by three inches. The theatre also provided a supply of multi-colored scrap paper, post card size, and every time a change of program occurs copy similar to the following is set up: "Forget Your Troubles—By Seeing—Wheeler and Woolsey's Girl Crazy—Rialto Now." Enough cards are stamped the night before opening to take care of message delivery and about 200 more are for direct delivery to doors of different homes each evening. The stamp is also used on spot near address on all packages delivered. The catchline is changed for each change of picture.

Message Will Be Read

One of the main points to consider in this tie-up is the fact that the theatre is certain the message will reach the intended prospect at a time when it will be read. People will open the door to a clean cut young fellow wearing a uniform of a well known company. The weekly programs serve as an advance notice, with the current cards as a daily reminder. The latter are apt to prove a pleasing variation from form letters, circulars and other printed matter. In case of special drives on pictures relating to certain types, the theatre has the advantage of reliable concentration on these prospects.

We also note that Burns recently promoted free distribution of 5,000 folded heralds through a tie-up made with a local radio dealer, who was convinced that two lines in 10 point type at the bottom of the third page would do him more good than a full page ad, which readers would interpret as "just another advertisement," These heralds were distributed by the telegraph tie-up and by placing two on each seat in street cars on each trip. Method of distribution was the final selling point when convincing the cooperating merchant. The front page of the herald merely carried in large Vogue type the copy, "Listen! . . . You Lovers of Life." The second page played up the High School Orchestra as an attraction, followed by mention of the feature picture. The third page carried some well-gotten-up copy on how a patron could relax in a comfortable arm chair and enjoy the show. Musical numbers were mentioned and described and synopsis of picture given. The back page was blank. "Strangers in Love" was the feature film.

Burns' tie-ups are very interesting to us and we're sure that Club members will find them likewise. As far as we know his deal with the telegraph firm is in full swing at this time and, apparently, producing excellent results. It appears to be a well-mapped-out plan and we're passing it along in case other Round Tablers want to contact their local telegraph offices for a similar tie-up. As Burns points out, an arrangement such as described becomes a powerful, effective and flexible means of distribution.

CRAIG INVITED ALL GOLD STAR MOTHERS TO ATTEND PICTURE

Memorial Day was observed by Charles B. Craig, manager of the Strand Theatre, Gloucester, Mass., through the courtesy of inviting all gold star mothers in town to attend a showing of the current picture.

Seven of the mothers, escorted by members of the Local posts of the Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars, marched from the G. A. R. Hall to the theatre, where, under crossed flags, they were taken in hand by the theatre management. At 5 P. M. they left the theatre for a restaurant, where they were served an appetizing supper. An ice cream concern donated its part of the menu and a florist presented each of the seven women a corsage bouquet made up especially for the occasion. After supper they returned to the theatre to witness the rest of the performance.

Appreciation of the above courtesy was expressed by the guests the following day in a front page story in a local newspaper, Craig's name and theatre figuring prominently throughout.

It's a bit late, of course, to be plugging Decoration Day stunts, but good ones can always be filed away for next year or adapted to some other occasion. It would appear that Craig earned a lot of publicity and good will for his house at the sacrifice of seven guest tickets.

THE BALLYHOO DOES THE TRICK!

If ever a theatre marquee was dressed up and charged with super-strength magnetism that marquee is in front of the Mayfair Theatre in New York where Bob Sisk's sensational jungle and animal display is stopping the crowds by the thousands. Now in its second week, "Bring 'Em Back Alive" continues to pack 'em in to the tune of busted records day after day.

Unquestionably, the display on that large marquee is responsible for no small measure of the many tickets being sold and it demonstrates beyond all possible argument how effective such ballyhoos can be made for theatres located on busy transient thoroughfares.

Do not overlook the value of your own marquee if you are so located. It can literally drag them into the theatre if what you are displaying is effective enough. Think it over before your next "unusual" picture arrives and perhaps you, too, can cash in on a spectacular ballyhoo.

JACK F. DAILEY has been a reader of this department for several years, and now that he has become a member we believe his fellow showmen will be in line for additional show-selling information. Dailey is the publicity director for the Orpheum Theatre, a first-run RKO house managed by Round Tabler Dick Moss in Los Angeles. Most of our members are familiar with the kind of work turned out by Moss, and from what we hear about Dailey, he, too, is an enterprising showman. Okay, Jack, you and Dick take turns shooting the good word along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

PAUL HEFNER is the manager of the Liberty Theatre, Horton, Kansas, and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his recent application for membership in our fast-stepping organization of showmen. We're glad to have you with us, Paul, and hope you will use this department as a means of communicating with your fellow Club members. Just as soon as an opportunity arises, sit down to your trusty typewriter and knock out a story about what you have been doing to sell shows in your town.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

F. A. POLICH not only assists Joe Cooper with the management of the RKO Orpheum Theatre, Portland, Ore., but also holds down the job of treasurer for the house. We also have his application at hand, and a cordial welcome is extended to this newly-elected Clubman. Between Polich and his boss we ought to be able to keep all their friends and fellow showmen informed on what's going on in showbusiness out their way.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LAWRENCE LEHMAN manages the RKO Mainstreet Theatre, a 3,000-seater out in Kansas City, Mo. We believe that Lehman has been following our department for some time, and now that we have him for a regular member, it should be a foregone conclusion that the rest of our gang will be let in on how shows are sold at the Mainstreet. Shoot along some of your ideas, Lawrence, and we'll do our part in the matter of passing them along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

L. L. MILLS is located up in Portland, Maine, where he has the job of assisting W. F. Freiday with the management of the RKO Keith's Theatre, a 2,000 seater that features pictures and vaudeville the first half of the week and double features the latter half. His application for membership in this organization makes it 100 per cent at Keith's, for we listed Freiday's name a week or so ago. We hope that both Freiday and Mills will do their level best to keep their theatre represented in this department.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HENRY WTULICH is the assistant manager of the Stratford Theatre, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where he has the job of helping J. A. Hartung, manager, sell his shows. Henry gave up the toolmakers' profession two years ago to become a showman and he's been hard at the game ever since. He is but 21 years of age and already has a fine start. Read the Club pages regularly, Henry, and we're sure you'll find a lot of tips from brother Round Tablers which will help you in your climb up the ladder. Tender our best regards to Hartung and ask him to let us know what's going on in showbusiness at the Stratford.

JOE COOPER manages the RKO Orpheum Theatre in Portland, Ore., and it certainly is like old times to have this enterprising showman join our organization. This is the first opportunity Joe has had to join the Club and we feel sure that he intends to make up for lost time. He and a lot of other fellows out his way are right on the job when it comes to showmanship, so we may as well count on receipt of some interesting yarns concerning his campaigns. You can start the ball rolling any minute, Joe—the sooner the better. Incidentally, we'll pass along your best regards to Eddie Hitchcock.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. H. SETH is in charge of the Luxor Theatre in Sourabaya, Borneo, and he is proposed for membership in this Club by Round Tabler Lim of Samarinda, also in Borneo. We are indeed glad to have another representative over in his country and think we can promise our members some interesting stories about how shows are sold over there. In a forthcoming issue we'll publish a picture of Seth's theatre and tell you how he ballyhoos an attraction. We hope he will send in other material as often as possible.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN A. CASSIDY is located right down the street from Club headquarters in New York City at the Home Office of Radio Pictures, where he is engaged with the handling of advertising and publicity. He's another RKO man in line for introduction to this big army of showmen and we're also glad to list his name among the recent applicants. We hope he will keep his obligations in mind and shoot along any material which he thinks will be of interest to his fellow members. The fellows at the RKO Mayfair. RKO de luxer in Manhattan are building some unusually interesting fronts. We hope Cassidy will find it possible to keep us informed on these front time to time.

MATTY FOX takes care of publicity and exploitation for R. W. Thayer, manager of the Riverside Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., and also acts as assistant manager. He's another one of the many RKO men who have recently become members of this constantly-increasing organization and we're glad to include his name on the list. He and Thayer look after a 2,600 seater, which is a man's size job. We'll be on the lookout for news of what both these men are doing to boost trade.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ART H. STEAGALL is another assistant manager to join the Club and he's located out at the Palace Theatre, Rockford, Ill., where he helps Ed Masters. We also extend a cordial welcome to this new Round Tabler and wish him continued success in his chosen field. Read the Club pages every week, Art, and you'll note that a great many other assistant managers are contributing their share to this department. So let us remind you and your boss to keep us duly informed on what's going on.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN E. JOSEPH is the director of publicity in the central division for RKO, which takes in the State, Lake and Palace Theatres, Chicago, Ill. The State and Lake run on a straight picture policy, while the Palace shows both vaudeville and pictures. Joseph should be in a position to contribute some very interesting articles on showmanship to this department and we hope he'll find the necessary time to do so. In the future these pages will be a meeting place for all RKO men, as well as every other theatre circuit, and we're sure Joseph will enjoy swapping yarns with his fellow showmen.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES J. DUFFY is holding down the job of assistant manager and treasurer of the RKO Pickwick Theatre, Greenwich, Conn., and we've already told readers that this house is managed by B. O. ("Box Office") Shelton. Duffy and his boss change pictures four times a week over in their town and without a doubt have plenty to do. However, we earnestly hope that both these new Club members will find time to communicate often as possible with headquarters. We want them to pass along any good show-selling tips they may have up their sleeves. We'll do the rest.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

B. O. SHELTON is another New York man to join the Club ranks and he is located up in Greenwich, Conn., where he manages the RKO Pickwick Theatre. There's plenty of room for you around the Table, Shelton, so pull up a chair and let's hear what you've got to say to the other fellows in this organization. It is impossible to proceed any further without reminding other Round Tablers of this new member's initials—"B. O."—Box Office Shelton! Born to showbusiness, and unless we miss our guess he'll make good as a contributor to this department.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RAY O'CONNELL manages the Orpheum Theatre out in St. Paul, Minn., and he's still another RKO man to join this ever-increasing army of managers. We're glad to receive your application, Ray, and list your name among the many enterprising showmen in this organization. Running a 2,200 seater ought to be productive of many a good show-selling stunt and we hope this new Round Tabler will send along some evidence of what he and his staff are doing to put their attractions over the top.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS
FOR PICTURE THEATRES

NOVELTY

Harold Stern & Orchestra
New York Palace

This band has what it takes to entertain, using a trio, quartette and a solo vocalist, Bill Smith, whose clever impersonations of famous radio personalities received a hearty response. Stern offered a violin solo of "Dark Eyes," with a vocal rendition by George Sturney, who incidentally is one of the best pianists in these parts. Imitating the Four Mills Brothers, the quartette sang "Tiger Rag," for a bang-up finale.—H. P.

Barto and Mann (2)
Cincinnati Albee

This team, claiming previous connection with the "Vanities," represents extreme contrasts in stature, one being six feet or more tall, and the other about half that height, which alone brings laughter. They specialize in soft shoe and acro dances, punctuated by rough-house clowning during which both take hard bumps and falls. Their bodily entanglements during the routine maneuvers are especially funny.

Danny Beck
Detroit Fox

Nothing can be said for, and nothing need be said against Beck's impersonation of Harry Langdon. Beck gives the audience a fair share of mirthful amusement with his work as a trap artist, striking rhythm from everything in reach. He won the noisiest reception on this bill.

Bernardo de Pace, Celine Lescar
Milwaukee Wisconsin

Bernardo de Pace, half comedian, half musician makes his mandolin speak in an effective manner. Miss Lescar, assisting him, offers a bit of fine singing and also acts as a foil for his musical conversation on the mandolin, which she answers to on a "uke." Their act should click anywhere.

Robbins Trio
Dallas Palace

This roller skating act is as fast and thrilling as any one could hope to see. The two men and the girl are all good in their rapid series of numbers on a mighty tiny space in the center of the stage and when it seems they have spun and done all possible in their veritable whirlwind of spinning, it is a breath-taking finale when one of the men supports his two partners in the act as he revolves rapidly on the proverbial dime. Maneuvers are exciting and will be liked by any type of audience, as they are experts.

The Musical Shermans (2)
Detroit Hollywood

These two, man and girl, open with a fluid, murmuring guitar duet of "Oh, That Kiss." The man offers clever novelty impressions of a fife and drum corps, a little girl's recitation of "Mary Had a Little Lamb" and a cat-and-dog-midnight-alley skit. They finish with a fast banjo and guitar number.

Jackson, Gardner and Adams (3)
Detroit Hollywood

No more successful comedy act has been seen here for many months. Moreover the girl in the act, Dorothy Adams, is a treat for weary optics. The act opens with an M. C. announcement that Jackson and Gardner, famous radio artists, will offer their own version of "William Tell," which, of course, turns out to be a comic song. The girl is introduced as a shy hopeful, but her shyness dissolves when she starts to vocalize "Minnie the Moocher" with appropriate hip and shoulder movements. The diaphragm of the prop "mike" quivers feverishly and finally explodes in a burst of white smoke. An eccentric tap by one of the males in the guise of feeble age is a comedy act in itself. He also does a comedy spring dance. All three take part in a skit called "Potiphar's Wife and Salome." Despite its unusual length this act hasn't a dull moment. Insistent applause brought an encore skit.

Mills, Kirk and Martin (4)
New York Palace

Here is a trio of slap-dash, rough and tumble boys, whose clowning proved a show-stop. One of the boys offers a ukelele solo, imitating an old-fashioned music box, for a nice reception. During a rhythm tap dance a stooge flits across the stage, timed for a big laugh. For the finale, the trio offer a hot rendition of "Margie," during which the stooge again makes an appearance for another hearty laugh.—H. P.

Marie Remington
New Orleans State

This is a pretty miss, capable at dancing, who makes her work harder and more novel by doing it on skates. She flips, breaks, skates around the stage in great style.

Rudy Valee & Orchestra
New York Paramount

Rudy received an ovation on his appearance and did a straight for the comedy of Willie Howard, who offers a satirical announcement of a radio program while Rudy croons "Good Night, Sweetheart," through a microphone. With his band Rudy offers a vocal of "My Silent Love," for a big hand and then imitates Chevalier singing "All I Want Is But One Girl," cleverly done. Rudy indicated his ability to draw the customers.—H. P.

Ebony Follies (5)
Denver Orpheum

This act opens with four males dancing and a girl singing capably. Later men change to oldtime costumes, with sideburns and old clothes, and act closes with rough and tumble. A good comedy act.

Wilson, Kepple and Betty
Detroit Fisher

Although this is billed as comedy, the laugh sauce is mild, to say the least. The act does embrace some fair tap dancing and nimble manipulation of an accordian.

Baron Lee & Blue Rhythm Band (12)
Brooklyn Metropolitan

The "Baron" and his band compare favorably with the two other famous colored bands playing this country. They are all on a par, as a whole, but with each topping the other in their own specialties. The "Baron's" (to this reviewer) is the fine playing of his orchestra. These boys, capably directed by Lee, offer a program of music that is hard to beat, and "sell it" to the audience in a showmanly manner. As added attractions the band carries Ada Ward, blues singer, and Nicodemus, comedian and dancer, both getting good applause for their part in entertaining the audience. Lee himself is an accomplished showman who makes a fine appearance when he leads his orchestra. For closing they offered a special arrangement of "St. Louis Blues" that "wowed" the audience and earned them applause that nearly amounted to an ovation.—E. D.

Dorothy Mackaill
Detroit Michigan

In a performance that can do her screen prestige no good, the blond star parades her new husband, Neill Miller. The act consists of singing, dancing and a brief skit in which Miller is frequently addressed as "Mr. Mackaill" despite his protests. Montgomery and McDowell are two stepping lads who help out.

Brock and Thompson
Philadelphia Fox

Opening with a routine tap dance, these two boys with the aid of an old chair with a license tag attached, give an imitation of an old model Ford car in which one represents the driver, the other the engine, that is good for plenty of laughs.

George D'Ormonde (2)
Detroit Fisher

D'Ormonde's work is cycling, trimmed with comedy, on a motorcycle. The girl is nearly his equal on the wheel. Together they put on a wild polo game that is both spectacular and funny.

Paul Howard
Denver Denver

Will please any audience. Paul is double jointed, can kick backwards over his head and tap his nose with his feet. He can assume poses that look ridiculous and the crowd is hearty in applause.

A. Robins
Detroit Fox

This is a droll bit of clowning that wins applause on its originality. Robins works alone with what is probably the most elaborate wardrobe and array of props on any variety bill. From voluminous pockets he extracts, throughout the act, enough bananas to satisfy all the monks in the Bronx Zoo. He also does, vocally, a number of musical imitations and several grotesque impersonations.

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

Cincinnati Albee

Billy Dooley, as the "Goofy Gob," does the same work which he claims he originated in screen comedies nearly a decade ago. Entering on a unicycle, he goes into a routine of dancing and wisecracking, ably assisted by Frances Lee. Highlight of the act is a session of lariat spinning, with the team doing a nifty dance inside the loop while crossing the stage.

Serge Flash
Detroit Fisher

Flash apparently can juggle anything he can get his hands on, and in any attitude of posture. Considerable merriment results from inability of members of the audience to return to the stage balls casually tossed out to them. Best audience appeal on the bill.

Pete and His Accordian
Detroit Hollywood

Pete's popular tunes squeezed from a flashy music box are refreshing entertainment.

Harry White and Alice Manning (7)
Baltimore Hippodrome

Three Mangan Brothers singing and then doing a familiar three cadet high stepping routine. Then Alice and Harry, in Bavarian costumes, did a comedy and song about pretzels, followed by a comedy hokum eccentric act.

Jimmy Hadreas
Detroit Fox

Hadreas appears as a street cleaner pushing a cart into which he delves for hats. For every hat he has a dance. In the second part of his act he embellishes his cosmopolitan assortment of steps with acrobatic touches. He is a clever lad who wins noisy audience approval.

COMEDY

Willie & Eugene Howard
New York Paramount

The Howard boys open and are interviewed by a reporter, whose questions are answered by Willie, resulting in hearty response from the audience. Eugene offers a vocal selection from "Pagliacci," after which Willie shows how George Jessel, Al Jolson and Eddie Cantor would sing "My Mother's Eyes," earning a round of applause. For the finale Eugene and Willie harmonize "Put That Sun Back in the Sky."—H. P.

Fred Pisano & Co. (2)
Brooklyn Gates

This is a team of two men who offer a comedy sketch as an opener that draws the laughs right from the start. Andrew Basso, as an Irish "cop" is aided and abetted by Pisano, who has the audience in an uproar at his "wop" dialect. Their gags and stories are put over in the form of an argument and get plenty of laughs. Basso sings a "gang" song in an excellent voice and earns himself a great reception. The act closes with a bass drum and tambourine bit, in which Pisano and Basso sing comedy lines to a special song. The act is entertaining from start to finish and the audience proved their satisfaction by lustily applauding them.—E. D.

Mlle. Ann Codee (4)
New York Palace

This French comedienne possesses charm and personalitity and offers a comical sketch using Frank Orth as her foil. As a guide she shows Orth the sights of Paris, but becomes jealous of another girl at a cafe and a fight between the two girls gets a nice hand. In the finale, Miss Codee and Orth offer an Apache dance in which Ann puts her partner across her knee and spanks him. A little risque, but good fun.—H. P.

Presslar-Klais
New Orleans State

This is a low comedy act which starts out snappily with the feminine half singing "Alexander's Rag Time Band" in the boisterous manner. Follows the introduction of the male as a pianist with burlesque Paderewski hair. He clowns about, falling all over the place, losing his collar, developing rubber legs and finally getting started with something that remotely resembles Chopin's "Polonaise in A." Rest of the comedy is a scream burlesque of a certain style of concert artist. Closes with both singing.

Glenn & Jenkins
New York Loew's State

A team of blackface comedians and dancers who offer 12 minutes of sure-fire gags, songs, talk and dancing. One has an infectious laugh that gets under the skins of the patrons and has them quickly and uncontrollably laughing at everything they do or say right to the finish. One of the outstanding bits of this act is the novelty in which they sweep the floor with brooms while dancing. This is an entertaining and clean act.—E. D.

Bob Hall
Dallas Palace

This chap concocts his chatter as the lead subjects are flipped to him by members of the audience, rehashing it to pour it forth as some sort of rhyme. Calling for "National Subjects," he is given the names of plenty of local appellations with "beer" and "more beer" and the name of a patent medicine. His clever manipulating of words brings good applause.

Irene Ricardo
New York Roxy

This clever comedienne opens with a comedy song in which she bemoans the fact that her visage is not more beautiful, the audience laughing at her antics. Then a novelty song, which she sings in German and Swiss, drew a nice hand. Dressed as a cop, she goes into her famous "Whoa, Pagliacci," with new verses that the audience found highly amusing. —H. P.

Lee Gresham & Gladys Blake
Milwaukee Wisconsin

A combination of nutty antics including a Spanish dance and an imitation of a ventriloquist and dummy comprise the offering by this couple. Their comedy, however, is refreshing and gets a good hand.

Joe Kelso & Company (3)
Detroit Hollywood

"Hokuemagicians" is the billing of this. The act consists of some vocal melody and comedy tricks.

3 Sailors
New York Capitol

Opening with a comedy bit which may be called, "He who gets slapped," this trio goes into a novelty bit in which they are adept. Their formation of a wheel rolling offstage brought a nice response, after which they offer a routine of tap dancing, closing with a difficult dance trick.—H. P.

Rome and Gaut
Baltimore Hippodrome

This act is of the comedy hokum, slapstick variety and played to running laughs.

Ted Healy & Gang
New York Roxy

Healy offers a nonsensical act employing a gang of nit-wits whose antics keep the audience laughing from beginning to end. A novel collapsible piano that suddenly takes shape is a surprise, while the clog dance on stilted shoes by one of the gang is well received. This act appears certain to please.—H. P.

DANCERS

Griffith and Weston
Dallas Palace

This team appearing as "ultra-collegiates," judging from their garb, are good and give some good catch-as-catch-can sequences, after their initial appearance when the girl is transported to the stage in the seat of her partner's pants. Even though appearing with a bandaged knee, it does not seem that any steam is restrained from the man's velocity of pitching Miss Griffith about the stage, and her recoveries are interesting, although not always intended to be graceful. She is certainly a two-footed high kicker in addition to her other successful efforts.

Miss Vanessi
New York Palace

The Biltmore Boys, a vocal trio, introduce Miss Vanessi, who offers a graceful dance, after which the trio again vocalize with a novel arrangement of "How's Your Uncle?" Miss Vanessi then presents a rainbow dance, which earns her a nice hand, the trio following with a vocal of "Jig Time," then into bits of clever tap dancing. In a Spanish scene, Miss Vanessi offers the Rhumba, going into a hot harlem finale. Audience reaction favorable.—H. P.

Ray Bolger
New York Paramount

This ex-"Vanities" star stopped the show. Opening with a comical dance, Bolger offers an imitation of an acrobatic Spanish tango, his clowning with an imaginative partner earning plenty of laughs. An old-fashioned soft-shoe dance for the finale drew an encore in which Ray offers a highly amusing political speech. He closed with a clever imitation of a tap dance trio.—H. P.

Verna, Sylvia and Ruth (3)
Detroit Fox

These three serve as clever pacemakers for the 16-girl line of Sunkist beauties. With smart modern steps they lead the ballet in foreign native costumes, through transitions from folk dances to American shuffles, struts and taps.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

REVIEWS OF STAGE ACTS

Brooklyn Gates

Seven young people in this act who offer 15 minutes of novelty, comedy, singing and dancing. Opens with a male harmonica trio, who are joined by two personable blondes, all five going into a happy rhythm tap routine, finishing with dancing and playing. Jack and Betty, dressed as "rubes," first sing "Pickin' Petals Off of Daisies" (with gestures), and then offer a laughable comedy dance which earns them a great reception. The two young girls, nicely dressed in white evening gowns, next offer a well-performed high kick and acrobatic dance and are followed by the three boys with a challenge tap routine, all getting good applause. Jack and Betty do another good comedy dance and are joined by the entire ensemble for the grand finale. This is a good, clean act, outstanding for hard work and an effort to please. It should entertain any audience.—E. D.

Sammy Lewis and Patti Moore (2)

Detroit Michigan

This redheaded lass and wise-eyed gob partner open with a rhymed patter line and a comedy dance routine. A roughhouse necking skit sent merry rumbles through the house.

La Voane Sweet

Philadelphia Fox

She introduced some novel acrobatic and tap dancing feats. Standing on her hands on a piano stool she executed a tap dance with her feet on the crown of her high hat and then followed with cartwheels and other gymnastic stunts quite out of the ordinary.

Audrey Wykoff (3)

Baltimore Hippodrome

The act started with a fast acrobatic dance by Audrey, including cartwheels and splits. The father does a single tap dance made famous by George Primrose, and is followed by the grandfather, over 60, who does a buck dance. The grandfather took most of the lavish applause.

The Rhythemettes (3)

Detroit Fox

This trio makes its entrance in funereal shrouds, professing in song to be censors who will correct a number of popular evils. They discard the shrouds and go into a number made up of the lines of a group of popular songs. This is long enough to become tiresome. Their version of "The Rhumba on the Tuba" is an entertaining bit.

Ann Pennington

New York Roxy

Ann Pennington offers a routine of fair dancing, employing a hot cornetist to set the pace. Her offerings were only moderately well received.—H. P.

Reri

Milwaukee Wisconsin

This young lady has her native hip-shaking dance step down to a "T." She has a pleasing personality and sings in a pleasant manner accompanying herself on the guitar.

The Gray Family (6)

Detroit Hollywood

This sextet, two men and four girls, has a smart, fast routine that gives it a class rating.

SINGERS

Frances White

New York Palace

Miss White opens with "Every Little Bit of Me," then offers an imitation of a gold digger on Broadway, with favorable results. Frances introduces her pianist as the author of her material, and scores with a song called "Parade of the Racketeers." For an encore, she offers a medley of old-time tunes including "Ohio," "I'd Like to Be a Monkey in the Zoo" and "Mis-sis-sippi," which pleased.—H. P.

Lillian Roth

Philadelphia Mastbaum

Lillian Roth, screen star and also star of Earl Carroll's "Vanities," won long and appreciative applause for her singing of various "blues" songs, including "Sing, You Sinners, Sing," "Between the Devil and the Deep Blue Sea" and "What Can It Be."

James Melton & Johnny Green

New York Palace

James Melton, radio star, accompanied by Johnny Green, noted composer, at the piano, opens with "Cuban Love Song," then offers "My Silent Love." Green plays a medley of his compositions including "I'm Yours," "Out of Nowhere," "Hello, My Lover, Goodbye" and "Body and Soul," receiving a fine reception. Melton closes with "Song of Songs" for his share of the applause.—H. P.

ACROBATICS

On Wah Troupe (5)

New York Palace

This Chinese quintette offer a variety of difficult acrobatics and juggling. For the finale each does somersaults, the while balancing two twirling plates on rods. Good opening act.—H. P.

Merrill Bros. and Maude

Brooklyn Gates

This first-class acrobatic team offered 10 minutes of sensational feats of strength, balancing and wire-walking. Opening with an acrobatic pose, the male members, dressed in evening clothes, present feats of balancing and tricks on a 15-foot pole, earning a good hand for their efforts. One of the Merrill Brothers next does a breath-taking bit on a slack wire, swinging and walking to the tempo of the music played by the orchestra. They follow this with acrobatic work, done on a platform and two flights of stairs, closing the act with a sensational bit, in which one man walks on his hands, up and down the stairs, while Maude encircles his waist. The entire act is done in a dignified but showmanly manner, and earned the fine applause given them at finish.—E. D.

Mills and Shea (2)

Detroit Fox

This pair, in gob clothes of outlandish fit, have a neat variety of comedy acrobatic dancing and tumbling.

Paul & Nino Ghezzi

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

These two boys are plenty good with their strong arm gymnastics. They draw heavy applause for their work and for an encore offer the black bottom dance done on their hands.

SPOTS & SHOTS ON BROADWAY

Paul (Scarface) Muni and Edward (Little Caesar) Robinson were seen last week at the Park Avenue Flower Show—of all places.

Mary Brian and Buddy Rogers are plenty that way about each other. Incidentally Buddy's guitar player is often mistaken for Buddy.

Charlie Ahearn and his Millionaires are back from a successful European engagement and are set for a long vaudeville tour here.

This Broadway influence works so fast that already the stuffed animals atop the Mayfair marquee are snarling and making faces at eash other.

There are two good aftermaths of the Sharkey-Schmeling fistic encounter. In the first place there is something to talk about besides the financial condition of the country, and secondly, talking fight may instill some fight into us to lick the unpopular champ, depression.

And now they're calling it the Sh—— Sch—— fight.

Jean Herbert and John Hancock, who wrote the music and lyrics for the current floor show at the Paramount Grill, will do the new show for the fall.

We were introduced to Pete, the black-eyed bulldog of Our Gang comedies, who was strolling along the main stem with a pipe in his mouth. Did he say woof-woof or goof-goof?

Arthur Tracey (Street Singer) plays a return engagement at Loew's State this week by popular demand.

Lilian Shade has been signed to appear in the forthcoming Broadway show Ballyhoo."

Aubrey Scotto, formerly with Paramount, will direct "Divorce Racket," a Paradise production, which will be filmed at the Ideal studios.

OVERTURES

FREDDY MACK (Brooklyn Fox) conducted his Joy Gang in an entertaining overture built up of popular tunes. As an added attraction, Mack introduced Miss Ruth King, radio personality, who assisted greatly in drawing applause for the overture. The orchestra opened with the song, "Little Side Door to Heaven," with a vocal chorus by Miss King, as Mack played a violin accompaniment on the second chorus. A novel twist was given the song when the orchestra next played a chorus in split-rhythm. Mack, with his pleasing voice, then sings a chorus with an octette made up of the bandmen, accompanying in close harmony. Miss King joins in the finale and shares in the fine applause given this popular group.

DAVID ROSS (Philadelphia Mastbaum) and the 60-piece Mastbaum Symphony Orchestra offered Lehar's melodious "Merry Widow" overture, carrying out the Viennese atmosphere even in the suits of the orchestra members, who wore the scarlet coats and plentiful gold braid of the Austrian army officers. The Mastbaum Ensemble danced the famous "Merry Widow Waltz," with the girls in white, full skirts and the men dressed as Austrian army officers. The applause which greeted this offering showed that the audience appreciated the combined efforts of orchestra and ensemble.

JOHN CHRISPIN (Detroit Michigan), appropriate to the appearance of Rudy Vallee and "Scandals" stars here, directs an overture composed of hits from the "Scandals." The introductory theme strains are from "That's Why Darkies Were Born," followed by "Life Is Just a Bowl of Cherries," "The Thrill Is Gone"—which Crispin sets off with a violin solo—, "This Is The Missus" and the fully developed score of "That's Why Darkies Were Born." Considering that Crispin followed such a reputable conductor as Eduard Werner here, he is doing admirably.

RUBINOFF (New York Paramount) offers for this week's overture selections from George White's "Scandals," opening with a medley consisting of "This Is the Missus," "That's Why Darkies Were Born," "The Thrill Is Gone" and "Life Is Just a Bowl of Cherries." Rubinoff renders a violin solo of "My Song," after which the entire orchestra goes into "This Is the Missus," modulating into "That's Why Darkies Were Born," the latter a blare by the brass section. This overture was very enthusiastically received.—H. P.

LOU SCHRADER (Baltimore Hippodrome) stepped from the right stage entrance into the spot, then down into the pit to direct the musicians through the intricacies of "The Student Prince" score with various colored flood lights playing over the members to interpret the various moods. Ended to applause.

SAMUEL BENAVIE (Detroit Fisher), with typical Benavian musical gestures offers a two part overture. First on the program is "Little Nest of Heavenly Blue," followed by a gavotte featuring the double string bass viol. Benavie does the inconceivable with this seldom featured instrument. The audience was demonstrably appreciative.

HERSCHEL LEIB (Detroit Fox) uses the rich strains of Southland music for his overture this week, alternating old and modern favorites. Among his selections were "Swanee River," "Sleepy Time Down South" and "My Old Kentucky Home."

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO, EVERYBODY!

The woes of the music business were forgotten, for at least the one day, by all members of the Remick, Witmark and Harms music firms when the Warner Club held its annual outing and picnic last week. . . . Practically everyone came home sunburned and tired, but they all knuckled down a little harder than usual the next day and looked at the business situation with a little different attitude.

Up Broadway at the Audubon, the Skouras outfit is slowly but surely building up a new personality in the person of Teddy King, orchestra leader. . . . Heretofore, Teddy has been announcing acts and conducting the overtures only . . . now the entire stage shows are being built around him while he is working from the stage with his band and with the acts. . . .

Horace Heidt and his band, Jimmy Caruso and his Cafe de Paris London Orchestra and George Olson and his band have been signed for the Warner Vitaphone series of band shorts, known as "Melody Masters." . . . Official word says that there will be 13 of them in all, the balance to be announced in the near future. . . . Tommy Tucker and his orchestra, playing from the Hollywood Restaurant over WMCA daily at 11.30 P. M., also plays for NTG'S floor show. . . .

"Smile, Darn Ya, Smile" . . . That's Brooklyn's new theme song since "Smiling" Eddie Lowry's inaugural performance at the Brooklyn Paramount. Eddie, with his merry smile and his cheery chatter has taken the town across the river by storm and it looks like he is their "fair-haired" boy from now on. . . . He is offering Brooklynites a new type of personality and a brand of entertainment they have never received. . . . Eddie established a record in theatrical annals when he was featured master of ceremonies for five years in the city of St. Louis. . . . Whether he can duplicate this record now remains to be seen, but he certainly is making a grand start. . . . Talking about records reminds me that the four Mills Brothers, CBS radio stars, have just had added to their original 18-week contract an additional 15 weeks. . . . Thirty-three (33) weeks on one circuit (Publix) is a record for an act in these days. . . . Jack and Betty Willing and their company of five recently broke in a new comedy dance act at Loew's Gates, Brooklyn. . . . The audience liked it plenty . . . so it looks as if this team will have plenty work before them soon. . . .

Can you imagine a parade of 2,000 persons in honor of a neighborhood personality. . . . Well that's what happened last week up in the Bronx. . . . Lou Bonder, organist at the Park Plaza, celebrated his second anniversary, so the local merchants, societies and school children "threw" a parade for him, incidentally bringing plenty business into the theatre. . . .

S'long ED. DAWSON.

ORGAN SOLOS

BILL MEEDER (Richmond Hill Keith) continues to please the patrons of this house with his enjoyable organ novelties and solos. Currently he is offering a solo of singable numbers, introducing each orally with a clever continuity before playing it. Numbers include: "Lazy Days," "I Wish You Were Here," "My Silent Love" and "Cabin in the Cotton." For a clever bit of novelty, Meeder used four lines from each of eight popular numbers, rapidly changing from one to the next, both in melody and lyrics. Naturally this twisted the audience, but it drew numerous laughs and a big hand at the finish, as did the entire presentation. The audiences of this theatre not only have the pleasure of singing to good programs, but also of listening to a first class musician as well. Their reaction at the close of each solo proves their appreciation and his worth to the house.

DICK LIEBERT (Jersey City Loew's) presented a most interesting organ presentation this week, which was conceded a huge success and assisted in still further building up this organist's popularity. The solo was titled "Dream Train" and incorporated not only a number of singable songs, but some fine scenic motion pictures. Starting with the song "Hummin' to Myself," the "train" started on its tour, with the audience singing its way from place to place. Near the end the "train" ran wild and smashed, ending the solo with a special to the song "Paradise." A most novel solo, and from the applause at finish, one thoroughly enjoyed by this audience.

LOU BONDER (New York Park Plaza) celebrated his second anniversary at this neighborhood house with a special organ presentation built around the occasion. The popularity of this young fellow was demonstrated by the packed houses during the entire week, the parade of local merchants, societies, school children, the lobby full of baskets of flowers and a huge cake given him by a local merchant. Bonder used special lyrics and songs for his solo and as an added attraction presented radio and stage personalities each night of the week. He is enjoying great popularity at this house and is unquestionably a box-office attraction, his value to the house increasing with the time he is there.

MAX MARLIN (Brooklyn Metropolitan) recently presented "Barber Shop Chords" as the community songfest, introduced as "Sing With Marlin." He offered four songs, "Can't We Talk It Over," "Dream Sweetheart," "Paradise" and "Somebody Loves You," for the audience to harmonize to. The audience joined agreeably on the singing of each number, following it up with good applause for Marlin at the finish.

KEN WRIGHT (Menominee Lloyd's) recently presented another of his original and outstanding microphone novelties. This one was entitled "Memories," and was offered as a straight spotlight solo, with Wright explaining via "mike." Opening with a rendition of "Memories," and then reminiscing at the microphone on wartime songs, Wright offers solos of many of them. As a grand climax, Sousa's "Stars and Stripes," played with full organ, drums, etc., was used. A smart display of color, scenes and a varied combination of organ stops, together with Wright's good showmanship, helped make this concert one of the best of the popular organist's career.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

THEATRE ENGINEERING IN RADIO CITY

In 2 Sections—Section 2 Vol. 108, No. 1 Issue of July 2, 1932

The Majority of the Country's Most Successful Theatres use

ALEXANDER SMITH CARPET

Paramount Theatre
Toledo, Ohio

WESTMINSTER is an Alexander Smith Carpet that is becoming increasingly popular with theatre owners because of the way it stands up under heavy traffic. There is no finer heavy-traffic carpet made. Long life, distinctive patterns, brilliant, clean-cut colors, luxurious "feel" and moderate price make WESTMINSTER an excellent value. Let us send you samples and reproductions of best-selling patterns. W. & J. Sloane, sole selling agents, 577 Fifth Avenue, New York.

AUDITORIUM CONDITIONING CORPORATION'S "BYPASS PATENTS"

AUDITORIUM CONDITIONING CORPORATION is owner, among others, of U. S. Patents Nos. 1,670,656 and Reissue 16,611. These patents are known generally in the air conditioning industry as the "bypass patents" and cover the use of air from an enclosure for mixture with conditioned air, so that a final mixture is usually obtained greater in volume than the conditioned air and of higher dry bulb temperature but lower relative humidity than the conditioned air.

These patents have been litigated in the United States District Court for the Western District of New York in two proceedings. Hon. John R. Hazel, excerpts from whose opinions are set forth in the marginal column, fully sustained the validity of both patents in every particular. Injunction was granted, as well as full accounting for all profits, damages and costs.

AUDITORIUM CONDITIONING CORPORATION even consented to a reopening of the case to admit further evidence, in order to test to the fullest extent the validity of these patents. The second decision likewise sustained the validity of the patents and the contentions of AUDITORIUM CONDITIONING CORPORATION on all points.

AUDITORIUM CONDITIONING CORPORATION believes that its bypass systems incorporate most modern practice yet devised for conditioning the atmospheres of enclosures used for human occupancy from the standpoints of economy, flexibility, efficiency and assurance of comfort despite unforeseen variations in heat and humidity load.

AUDITORIUM CONDITIONING CORPORATION believes the development covered by these and its other patents to be extremely valuable. Its obligations to licensees under the patents demand that AUDITORIUM CONDITIONING CORPORATION'S rights be observed and infringements vigorously prosecuted.

AUDITORIUM CONDITIONING CORPORATION appreciates that some owners may have contracted for installations with unlicensed contractors and in ignorance of our rights. Under such conditions the AUDITORIUM CONDITIONING CORPORATION would welcome a discussion of such installations with the view of reaching a settlement in a businesslike manner without applying to the courts.

AUDITORIUM CONDITIONING CORP., Plaintiff,

—against—

GREATER ROCHESTER PROPERTIES, INC.,
Defendant.

HAZEL, J.

* * * It was air of uniform distribution and character, to eliminate dampness and discomfort in playhouses, that chiefly concerned the inventors. * * * prior adaptations were inefficient and expensive since the cold air required hot air or steam for reheating before the air was let into the theatre or room. * * * recirculated air * * * in both patents in suit is used to mingle with saturated fresh air, or with return air * * * from the conditioner * * *. The recirculated air is of higher temperature than the conditioned air. It passes to the mixing chamber for uniting with the conditioned air before discharge through pipes or ducts at the openings in the theatre, and * * * increases the temperature of the conditioned air and also imparts a lower relative humidity to the mixed air. * * * Fleisher's accomplishment * * * (was) attained * * * by proportioning the volume of return air so that the amount of recirculated air beyond the conditioner and the volume of return air passing through the conditioner would vary, and * * * he designed that the "larger the volume of return air recirculated beyond the conditioner, the less the volume of return air going through the conditioner and vice versa". * * * The gist of his invention constituted a steady reuse of the air piped from the theatre, thus lessening the expense in apparatus construction and maintenance. This object and purpose is supported by the proofs.

Lewis was not only the first to use a system of recirculation of a large quantity of air, drawn from inside a theatre, and to control both temperature and humidity, but he also was the first to condition only a relatively small part of the air * * * so as to secure desired ventilation and humidity; while Fleisher as heretofore explained conceived a betterment by using a minimum of outside air mingled with a larger portion from the interior of the theatre, and proportioning the return air from the theatre to allow the quantity recirculated beyond the conditioner to respond to interior fluctuations. Both patents were new and novel and advanced known cooling and ventilating systems of the type under consideration.

Both the Lewis Reissue and Fleisher patents in suit are valid and infringed by defendant * * *.

And in the reopening proceeding, after a thorough consideration of new evidence submitted by defendant, Judge Hazel further held:

Although I have considered all the matters and arguments drawn to my attention in defendant's brief, I discover no satisfactory evidence or reason for holding the patents in issue anticipated. A decree for plaintiff (AUDITORIUM CONDITIONING CORPORATION) may be entered. (italics ours).

MOHAWK Presents

The charming lobby of Warner Bros. Western Theatre, Los Angeles, carpeted with Mohawk's Glenburn Wilton.

One-Third of Your Decoration is the Floor

Mohawk's Scotia Grade
Specially Constructed for Theatre Use

It stands up under the hardest wear because it was made for that purpose. That's why scores of leading theatres use it. Available in 20 figured patterns and a variety of plain colors. Special designs made to order promptly.

Remember this: Your floor covering forms one-third of the decoration which patrons see as they view your lobby. You cannot create a favorable first impression unless your carpeting is exactly right.

Every theatre has its own personality and its own carpet problems. There is a certain design, coloring and quality of carpet that will meet your needs better than any other.

Mohawk produces every popular weave, including dozens of different grades and hundreds of designs and colorings. Special patterns and colors can be made to order promptly at slight additional cost.

Mohawk makes carpets specially constructed for hard theatre use and has trained experts to help you select the right fabric to do your carpet job with the utmost economy.

3 wise moves to make your theatre more

Prosperous . . . .

Remodel Give your patrons a needed change of atmosphere. Fix up the front. Dress up the signs. Rearrange the lobby; make it more inviting. Make the entrance more presentable. How are the seats—and carpets? Now is the time to get things done—between seasons—while help is plentiful and costs of materials and equipment are at the lowest mark in years.

Redecorate Clean up the house, inside and out. A complete change of color scheme and design will work wonders on box office receipts. Check for needed sound correction. Never before was the cost of redecorating so reasonable as it is right now. You know it should be done, so why not do it now, while you can get an A1 job and save money?

Reseat Provide comfort for your patrons. You can't afford to neglect your seating—the one part of your equipment with which your customers make actual personal contact. We will supply beautiful, full upholstered, sturdily constructed chairs at a cost that will surprise you. If you really want to be thrifty, now is the time to act. SEND THE COUPON!

One Complete Transaction

Everything needed to remodel your theatre and make it more prosperous can be included in a contract that will SAVE YOU MONEY. One deal—one undivided responsibility for a first class completed job. One financing—a moderate down payment and a schedule of easy payment terms that cannot be equalled elsewhere. Get our proposition, now.

A CASH CUSTOMER OBLIGES THE SHOWMAN WITH A CRITICISM

WE have received a letter from a patron of motion pictures. That is a sufficient introduction, we take it, inasmuch as the title, "patron," is quite clearly identified by this time with those social forces which make this motion picture business possible. Indeed, perhaps some exhibitors may question that we have a motion picture patron to display, and upon our assurance that we have, may wish to have him dragged forth and publicly embarrassed with ceremonies crowning him Chief Glorious Example.

Facts, however, are facts, and much as we should like to protect our interested correspondent, we must lend proper authenticity to this comment. Therefore our patron of the motion picture is exposed as Mr. T. R. Dick, a resident of Baldwin, L. I., N. Y. And Mr. Dick, writing, as he says, solely as one who likes to go to the motion picture theatre for entertainment, wants to know if something can be done about the spacing between rows of seats that, as he says, impose certain burdens upon one desiring to be entertained.

That is to say, Mr. Dick wants to know just how entertaining the theatre people think it is to be getting up and down at frequent intervals, or to be pulling your knees up into your lap? And we, reflecting upon the law of averages, wonder how often it is that such disturbances somehow synchronize themselves with those punchy points in the screen performance that really represent what the show is all about. Mr. Dick is apparently quite able to express himself:

"Not long ago," he observes, "I noticed in one of your papers an article about making theatres comfortable for patrons, and I also notice that dozens of theatres devote much time and enormous expense in beautiful fixtures, entrances, elaborate decorations, etc. [Unquestionably true.]

"The purpose of this letter is to bring to your attention—and if the writer succeeds in focusing same on a very great need for motion picture patrons, he will feel that he has accomplished something—the need for greater space between rows of seats. [Our attention has been on it for some time. It remains for others to carry out our suggestions.]

"Years ago, when people bought tickets with numbers on, they would no doubt be seated throughout the performance and the need for arising and departing was minimized, but nowadays the way shows are run—some continuous—with people entering in mid-pictures, etc., there is always a traveling back and forth, disturbing the people seated, knocking down coats and hats and other matters on the floor, treading on toes and disturbing the general comfort.

"The writer believes this could be eliminated by simply adding another foot or even a half-a-foot between each row."

Well, there is nothing new in the complaint. Only patrons are seldom so articulate regarding their criticisms of the theatres they frequent as Mr. Dick, and therefore this friendly voice of a patron—we must remember that, a patron—is forwarded to the industry at large, and to theatre operators in particular.

The motion picture theatre, as we find it today, has been with us for quite some while, and what a patron thus points out has been commented on in a great variety of forms by many, including the functionaries of this publication. Indeed, some change for the better has been accomplished. Time was when 28 inches, at best 30 inches, between rows was the common maximum. Now 32 inches is the commoner maximum (a rather general code stipulation, in fact), while with a great flourish, an exhibitor here and there has ordered that this distance be increased to 36 inches. Yet, after all these years, Mr. Dick's criticism remains a valid one.

Valid, of course, is the criticism. It is the solution we question. The remedy lies not so much in the direction of addition as subtraction. It is not more inches in the space between rows that we need, but less rental per cubic foot of theatre area. The point, however, remains the same. Somehow everything must be done to make the motion picture theatre a finer, more alluring, satisfying place to be entertained in than—the other kind of place.

THEATRE ENGINEERING IN RADIO CITY

By EUGENE CLUTE

An examination of the technical provisions made chiefly in the Sound Theatre but also in International Music Hall of Rockefeller Center

THE SEVERAL distinguishing characteristics of the Rockefeller Center development in New York, must of course include the motion picture theatre (Building No. 8) in the Radio City division of the project. It seems that it should lead the way and set the pace. Like the other buildings of this group, it has been designed through the collaboration of an unusually large number of distinguished architects associated for this purpose and they have had the co-operation of the experts of Radio-Keith-Orpheum and of innumerable consultants upon every special aspect of the problem. To present a clear picture of this theatre, with some pertinent attention to Theatre No. 10 (International Music Hall), and to endeavor to properly evaluate the radical departures from accepted practice which are among their outstanding characteristics, is the purpose of the following study.

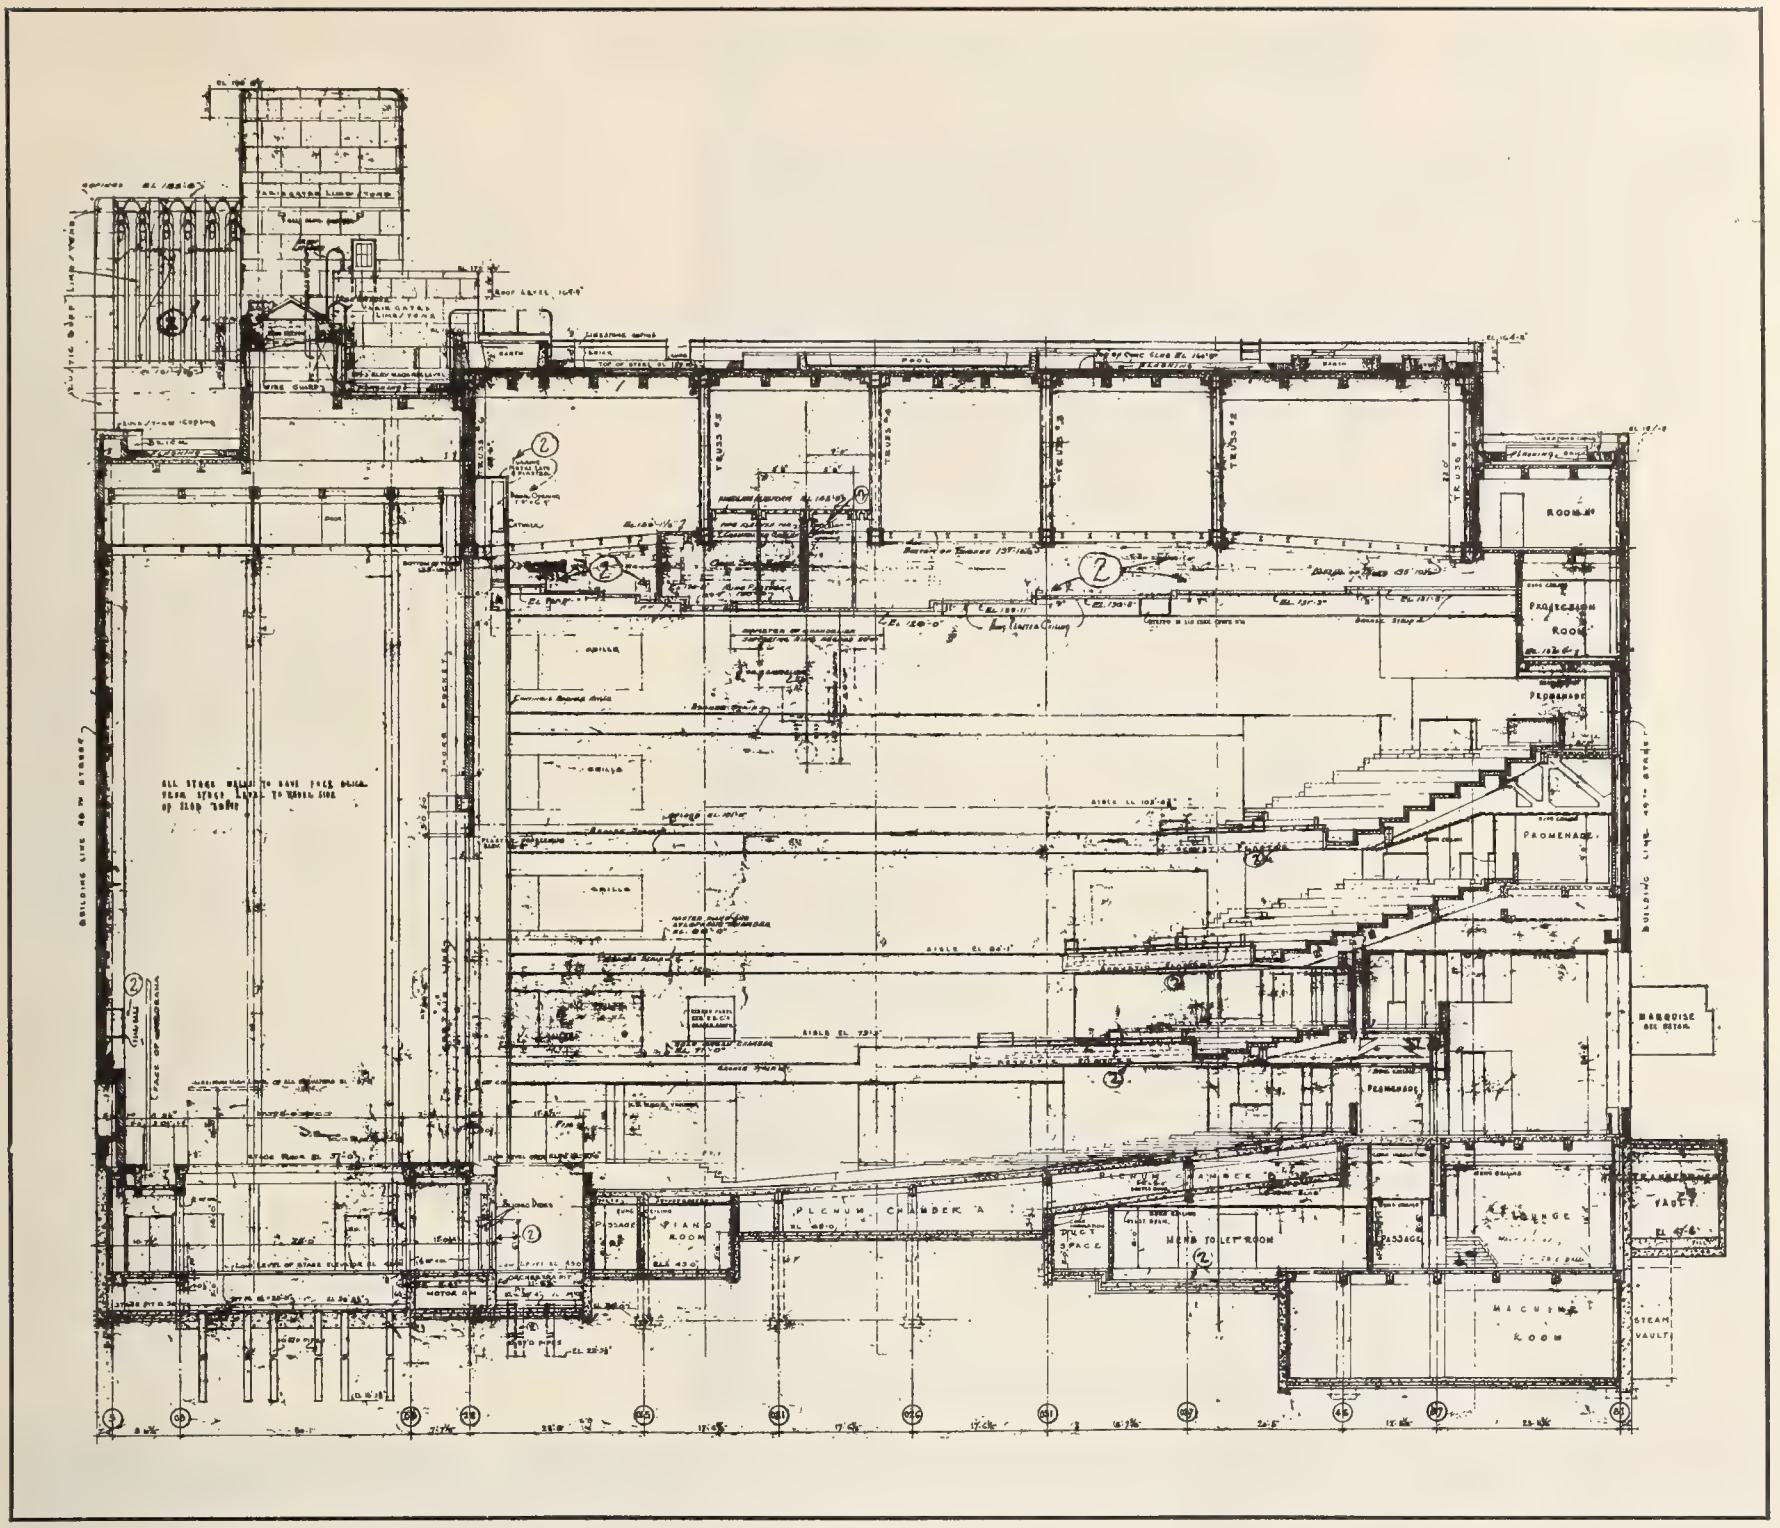
The architects have endeavored to meet the practical requirements first of all, and they have developed the design through the co-ordination of the necessary functional elements. This is the modern way of approaching an architectural problem. It is the reverse of the older practice of designing according to tradition. Instead of concerning themselves with columns and capitals, cornices and domes and plaster ornaments of appropriate symbolism, the modern architect centers his attention upon sight lines, acoustics, motion picture projection, air conditioning and other functional matters, letting the decorative design grow out of the conditions that are established in this way.

When the practical requirements of all buildings, including theatres, were comparatively simple, approaching the problem from the decorative, rather than the practical side, seems to have served fairly well, but a modern motion picture theatre has such highly special requirements due to the technical and sensitive nature of the art of projecting sound motion pictures and of providing facilities for the enjoyment of this entertainment to the fullest extent, that the practical requirements must come first.

In Theatre No. 8, as is usual, the architects have been handicapped by being required to design a theatre that can be used for stage shows if at any time it may seem desirable to change the policy. Though the Cinema in Rockefeller Center is to be used for motion picture entertainment exclusively, without any presentations or other form of stage show, provision had to be made for a stage with all of its accessories, and this has consumed a considerable amount of ground area allotted to the theatre which might otherwise have been used to advantage in designing the building purely as a motion picture theatre. As a matter of fact, the announcement that this theatre was to be used exclusively for motion pictures did not come until the construction of the building was well under way.

FROM THE outset, however, provision was made for the showing of motion pictures with sound as a requirement of first importance. The determination to make possible the use of the most advanced methods of motion picture projection as fast as they might be developed, including the projection of pictures practically the full size of the proscenium opening, was the reason for some of the major innovations in the planning of this theatre.

If the full height as well as the full width of the proscenium opening was to be visible from all parts of the auditorium, the large, single, overhanging balcony which had come to be generally regarded as the last word in motion picture theatre planning, would not do. The architects were told in the beginning that some other arrangement of seating which would afford the same capacity and permit this view, must be adopted, and the suggestion was made that three relatively shallow balconies be substituted for the usual single large balcony.



Though new in the motion picture field, this idea is not new to the history of the theatre, for it is a return to the old opera house plan. There is, perhaps, a certain appropriateness in this in view of the importance of the part that sound now plays in motion picture entertainment. Undoubtedly it is easier to project sound satisfactorily into, and under, these three shallow balconies than it is to project it under a large, single, overhanging balcony, with its tendency to produce sound pockets.

The distribution of sound is further facilitated by the form of the auditorium, for the side walls flare out from the proscenium, acting very much like the horn or directional baffle of a loud speaker to confine and direct the sound into the rear of the auditorium. The form of the ceiling also was designed to be especially favorable to good acoustical conditions, being free from curved surfaces that might focus sound downward, causing "dead spots." It is a flat ceiling, stepped down slightly toward the center for aesthetic reasons. All plain ceiling surfaces will be of sound-absorbing acoustic plaster. The ornamental portions will be of hard plaster, their form breaking up the sound and preventing its reflection. The walls go straight up to the ceiling. There is no flaring surface needed over the proscenium opening, or at its sides, in a theatre equipped with sound reinforcing apparatus, on account of the directional effect of the loudspeaker baffles.

We find that the form of the auditorium has been designed to produce the desired acoustical qualities with the aid of only a minimum of sound absorbing material. The rear wall, and the portions of the side walls as far forward as the fronts of the balconies, will be lined with acoustic tile which will be covered with cloth for decorative effect. The fronts of the balconies will be of acoustical plaster decoratively treated. The under side of the three mezzanines (the balcony soffits) will be of hard plaster, as their sloping surfaces will act in some measure to reflect the sound—into the rear of the auditorium. The major part of the side walls will be lined with wood forming perfectly smooth surfaces, not broken by paneling, but given a decorative pattern by the arrangement of the rectangles of veneer so that the grain of the wood will run in different directions in adjoining portions. Broad, horizontal bands formed in this way will provide directional lines, marking the levels of the mezzanines and carrying the eye towards the proscenium.

THE ARCHITECTS explain wood was chosen as a lining for these walls purely for its decorative effect, for its beauty and the sense of intimacy it gives to the interior. Specifically, the engineers state that wood was not chosen for acoustical reasons, although it is slightly more sound-absorbent than hard plaster. The position of these walls in relation to the sound issuing from the motion picture screen or the stage is such that there is no need to make them sound-absorbent. Their only effect upon the acoustics is directional; they act to some extent as reflectors for which a hard material is suitable.

The writer has long shared the common belief that the excellent acoustics of some of the older theatres was due partly to this wood lining of the walls. Though engineers connected with this theatre say this is not true, the writer clings to the idea.

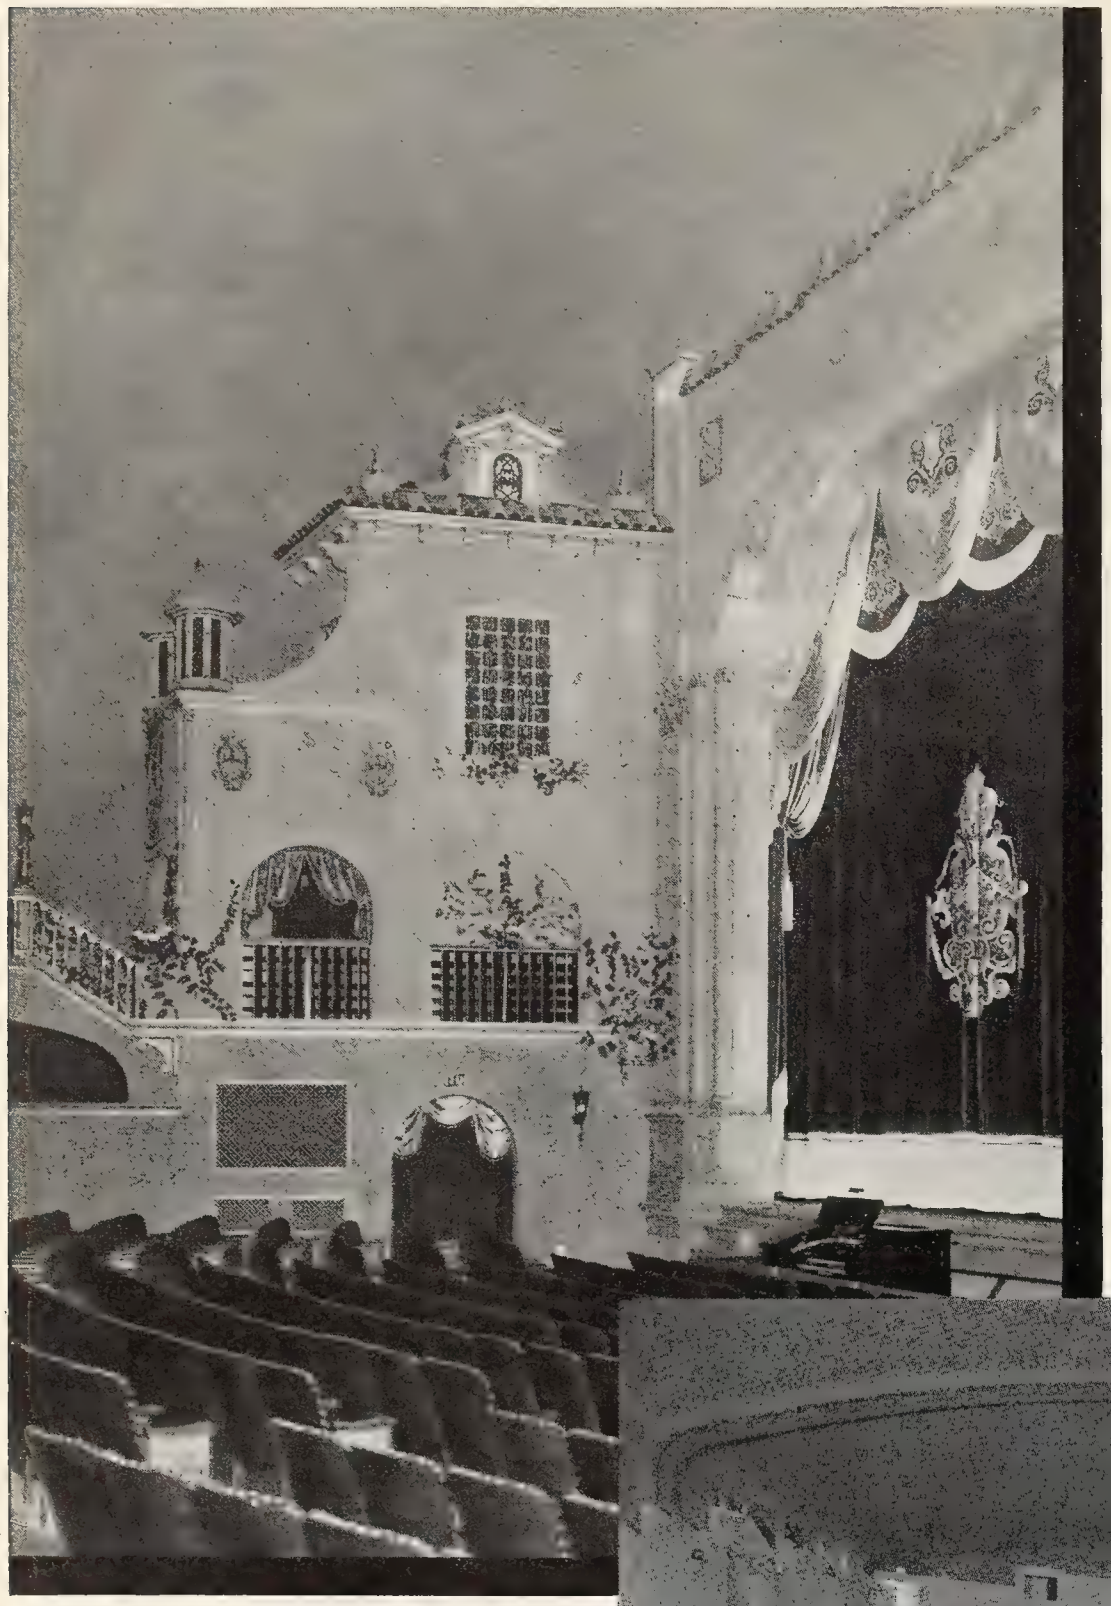
that this wooden lining may have some virtue aside from its decorative value, some slight resonance that may improve the quality of the sound.

The clothing of patrons is an excellent absorbent of sound, of course, and has been counted upon in the general acoustical provisions in this theatre. The reflection of sound from vacant chairs has been guarded against by the use of a mohair pile fabric for the upholstery. Carpeting in the aisles prevents reflection from the orchestra floor and from the floor of the mezzanine balconies.

The photoelectric sound reproducing and reinforcing apparatus, which has been designed by RCA Photophone engineers especially for this theatre, will, it is said, represent a distinct advance, particularly in its ability to handle a much wider range of frequencies than any RCA equipment hitherto produced. (An announcement of extension in frequency range was recently made.) This improvement will be in the loudspeakers as well as in the parts of the apparatus that deliver the signals to them.

The loudspeakers, four in number, will be placed, as usual, in back of a perforated screen, but they will be about twice the size of the usual loudspeakers employed in sound motion picture work.



Each speaker will be in the form of a straight horn (directional baffle) 11 feet long, by 75 inches square at the throat, making with the dynamic unit an over-all length of about 13 feet. The unusual length will be specially valuable in rendering the lower frequencies, and the ample space available back of the screen permits the use of these long, straight horns in place of the curved horns which it is so often necessary to use because of cramped space, but that absorb a great deal of the sound.

The loudspeakers will be supported upon steel frame work suspended from an overhead trolley track, and they will be so adjusted (or aimed) that the area of distribution of sound will take in the heads of people in the first row of the orchestra, in the back row of the third mezzanine, and also of the people at the extreme sides of the theatre. The spread of the main beam of sound from each of these directional baffles will be 35° or less. Because of the improved nature of the apparatus and the acoustical design of the auditorium, it is expected that unusual evenness in the distribution of sound will be attained without any undue loudness at the front of the house, and with comfortable and easy audibility in the most remote seats. Contributing to this result will be the distance between the first row and loudspeakers.

Having no connection with the sound motion pictures and provided for use only in case it is at any time decided to present stage shows, there will be four loudspeakers recessed in the wall, two at each side of the proscenium opening, in back of

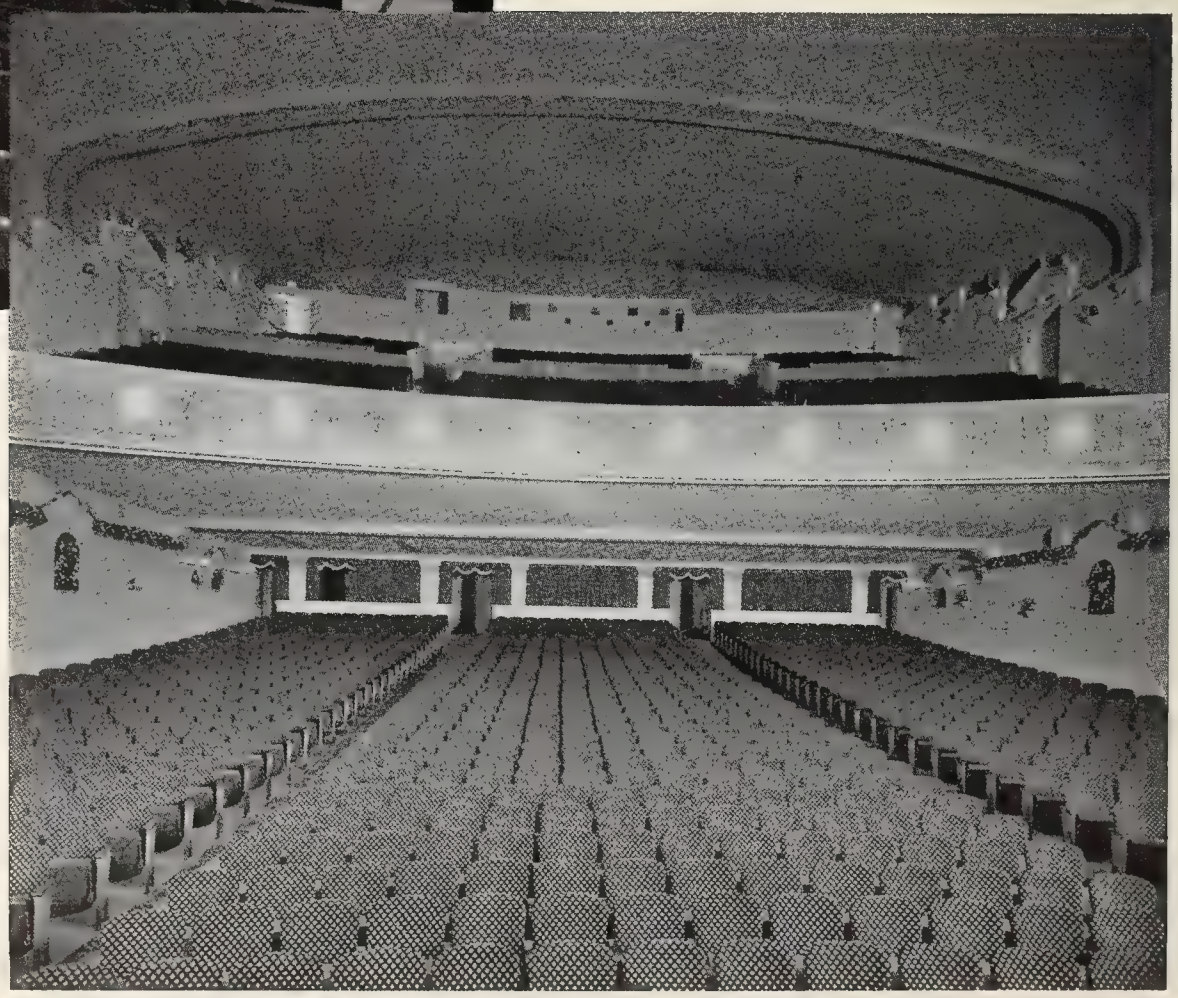
A 1,700-SEAT ATMOSPHERIC THEATRE IN

THE TEXAS theatre is a two-floor, 1,700-seat theatre recently erected by R. & R. Theatres in Oak Cliff, a suburb of Dallas, Tex. In general design it follows an intimate style worked out in atmospheric patterns. W. Scott Dunne was the architect.



The building contains commercial space in addition to the theatre and has over-all dimensions of 130x133 feet. Construction is fireproof, in brick and stone, and was carried out under a general contract. The investment represented, exclusive of the site and equipment, amounts to $140,000, while equipment cost $30,000.

The main seating level contains 1,200 chairs, arranged in 35 rows, while the balcony, with 500 seats, has 17 rows. All chairs, which are by the American Seating Company, are full-upholstered.

The projection room, in the usual location, measures 12x28 feet. All auxiliary rooms are adjoining. The entire walls are painted a deep green. Equipment includes two Motiograph projectors, two spots and one effect machine.

The angle of projection is rated at 14°. The maximum screen size possible is 20x40 feet, and the distance between the first rows of seats and the screen is 20 feet.

Two views of the auditorium—at left, the forward portion toward the left wall; below, a general view toward the rear. The decorative pattern is Venetian, employed in an atmospheric scheme. All lighting is indirect and includes color combinations.

Describing the Texas in the suburb of Oak Cliff, a new R. & R. house of Venetian pattern, representing a total investment of $140,000

DALLAS, TEX.

The theatre is equipped with complete air conditioning apparatus on a plenum system. Cooling is by spray chambers.

The architecture of the Texas employs Venetian motifs. The facade is done in brick and stone, with a sign-type marquee and floodlighting.

The lobby proper, occupying the importance of a main foyer, also has an ornamental colored cement floor and base, plaster walls and a domed ceiling. On the walls are wrought iron lanterns, while further illumination is supplied from coves at the ceiling. Stairs lead to a mezzanine balcony, which also serves as a main lounge, giving access directly to the balcony seating area. The floor here is full-carpeted, walls and ceiling are of plaster, and lighting fixtures are of wrought iron. Furniture consists in reed chairs and lounges.

The auditorium, decorated in a Venetian atmospheric style, has a cement floor with carpeted aisles. The walls are surfaced in tinted plaster. All lighting is indirect, and in the system is incorporated color illumination on a dimmer system. The auditorium has a proscenium arch and provisions for a full-sized stage, but so far completed arrangements are for only a screen platform. The proscenium opening measures 47x29 feet.

Two foyer areas—at right, standee area at the rear of the auditorium; below, the lobby, or main foyer, which gives access to the former and also to a mezzanine balcony on which is located a general lounge leading to balcony.

Looking into the mezzanine lounge. The stairs lead to the auditorium balcony seating area. The floor is full-carpeted, walls are in plaster, and furniture is of reed.

LEGAL ASPECTS OF THEATRE OPERATION

By LEO T. PARKER

Recent decisions of the higher courts in cases involving theatres, analyzed by an attorney-at-law especially for the theatre manager

GENERALLY SPEAKING, a contractor who intentionally breaches a theatre construction contract cannot recover any money for the work performed. However, if the contractor has honestly endeavored to construct the building in accordance with the plans and specifications and deviates therefrom in a slight degree, or his mistake is not radical, the courts have adopted the rule that the contractor is entitled to recover an amount equal to the contract price less the damage or depreciation to the building as a result of his mistake. In other words, a contractor who substantially performs a contract is entitled to recover a reasonable amount for the work and materials supplied.

Two reasons are given by the courts for the rule that a "substantial" performance for a building contract should permit a contractor to recover a reasonable amount for his services. One is that it is next to impossible for a builder literally to comply with all the minute specifications in a building contract. The other is that when a building is erected on the lot of the owner, such owner receives the benefit of the contractor's labor and materials, and it is therefore deemed equitable to require him to pay for what he gets.

For illustration, in Cassinelli v. Stacy (38 S. W. [2d] 980), it was shown that a contractor failed to perform a theatre building contract in strict accordance with the plans and specifications. Legal controversy arose between the owner and the contractor. In holding the owner entitled to deduct from the contract price an amount sufficient to enable him to alter the building to conform with the plans and specifications, this court stated the following important law:

"The doctrine of substantial performance permits the builder to recover on the entire building contract if the work has been done under a building contract, but is defectively done, allowing damages for incompleteness. The measure of recovery for a breach of the contract by the builder in such event is the difference between the contract price of the building constructed according to the contract, and its reasonable value as it is at the date of completion. . . . . But, if any work or material required by the contract has been omitted, and some may be done or furnished at reasonable cost, in this event, the measure of recovery is the cost of doing the work or furnishing the material so omitted."

Ordinance Held Void

A VERY important point of the law is that municipalities have only such authority to adopt ordinances as is expressly or impliedly authorized by the state. Also, an ordinance is void if for any reason it is not reasonably advantageous and likely to benefit the morals, health or enjoyment of the general public. So held a higher court in the recent case of Knight v. Johns (137 So. 509).

In this case it was shown that a city enacted an ordinance which forbid certain businesses to be open for business before 7:30 in the forenoon, and to remain open for business after the hour of 6:30 in the afternoon.

The validity of this ordinance was contested on the grounds that it was unreasonable and not adapted to benefit the general public. Also, it was shown that the ordinance was not enacted in conformity with state laws. Therefore, the court held the law invalid, and said:

"The city has the right of inspection reasonably necessary for the enforcement of its health and sanitary ordinances. . . . . Into every . . . . power given a municipality to pass by-laws or ordinances there is an implied restriction that the ordinances shall be reasonable, consistent with the general law, and not destructive of a lawful business."

Injury Caused by Appliance

IT IS WELL settled law that a theatre owner and his employes are bound to exercise ordinary care to maintain the theatre in a safe condition. This point of the law was discussed in the recent case of McCloskey v. Koplar (46 S. W. [2d] 557).

The facts of this case are that a steam radiator, which was left on the theatre premises, toppled over and seriously injured a patron. The latter filed suit against the theatre owner to recover damages. The counsel for the theatre owner argued that the latter should not be held liable because he had no control over the radiator when the injury was effected. However, on account of the fact that the radiator was on the theatre premises, the higher court indicated liability on the part of the theatre owner, and stated the following important law:

"Ordinarily, radiators are not permitted thus to become potentially dangerous instrumentalities in crowded theatres if those in charge use due care. The radiator was the property of the appellant (theatre owner) and was a part of the equipment of the theatre under his control and management. He was prima facie responsible for the dangerous situation, whoever may have moved the radiator. . . . . And the requirement that the instrumentality be under the management and control of the defendant does not mean, or is not limited to, actual physical control, but refers rather to the right of control at the time the negligence was committed."

Theatre Owner Not an Insurer

IT IS WELL established that the owner of a theatre is liable in damages to all persons who come into the theatre at his invitation, express or implied, providing the injury is occasioned by the unsafe condition of the theatre premises known to the owner and not to the patron and, also, providing the owner of the theatre failed, after discovering the defect, to repair the same within a reasonable period.

On the other hand, various courts have held that the operator of a theatre is not liable in damages for injuries sustained by a patron, if the thing which caused the injury had been in use previously without effecting injury to any other patrons.

For example, in the recent case of Lappin v. St. Louis (33 S. W. [2d] 1025), it was shown that a woman, who was familiar with the premises, was injured when she was walking down concrete stairs. She sued the proprietor for damages contending that the latter was negligent because he failed to provide a handrail. The injured woman testified that she may have prevented the fall by holding to a handrail if the same had been present.

The counsel for the proprietor proved that the stairs had been in existence for twelve years previously and that there had been no accidents.

Although the lower court held the patron entitled to damages, the higher court reversed this decision, and said:

"It (owner of premises) was not bound to make the stairway absolutely safe, but was charged only with the duty to use ordinary care to maintain it in a reasonably safe condition. It would be liable only if the plaintiff (patron), using due care, was injured by an unsafe condition in the stairway known to it and not known to the plaintiff. . . . . In this case there is no evidence that defendant had previously known of any dangerous condition of the

TIMELY PUNCH IN THE ORGAN SOLO

By BERNIE COWHAM

Timeliness is what counts, says this theatre console artist, who tells how he puts the solo over in these days of sound

THERE IS still a place for the organist in the theatrical world—and I am speaking in particular of the motion picture theatre.

The validity of that statement, of course, revolves around the word organist. Maybe there is no place for those who are content merely to "play the organ"—those who get by, or attempt to, with as little effort as possible. But for those who are willing to work, especially to maintain public interest through the creation of organ acts (novelties, stunts, new forms with a timely punch), and through them, endeavor to make the value of the organ felt at the box office—for these organists, there is definitely a place, a fact proved by the continued presence in the better theatres of organists who have been able to keep up with the times.

My way of going about the creation of timely organ acts may not be suitable to another organist. In fact, I am not so self-centered that I can not conceive of another organist going one, or even two, better. However, I have usually found a way to meet new conditions and keep organ music a lively, and even a drawing, interest to the theatre patron. And if I have anything to say about my methods which may prove of value to other console artists, I am glad of this opportunity to speak out.

My current location is in a theatre having a patronage made up of the finest type of people, people who though city-wise, are yet removed in their private pursuits from Broadway. The theatre is an RKO house located in an old section of New York City called Flushing, which, though a part of the city, yet retains much of its original small-townish character and is geographically eight miles from New York City proper, out on Long Island. I give this information as a background for the description of what I do. The organist should always know the clientele of his theatre, or his creative efforts are just hit-or-miss.

In a situation such as mine, personality represents over 50 per cent of the battle. My advice is: Sell yourself to the customers. Make 'em your pals! . . I talk to them from the console just as if I were visiting with them in their homes. I try to find out what they like to sing—then give it to them. There is always a spot in my solos for an old-time song. Both the young and the old enjoy them. Parodies, tongue-twisters and novelty choruses all have their places, too.

Once in awhile, just to get away from the usual routine, I'll ask them to listen while I play a number for them. For these instrumental parts of the solos I select a well-known classic, or a semi-classic, composition. Don't try to give 'em something they won't appreciate or can't understand. The organist, who is a trained musician, naturally has a different point of view toward music from that of his audience in general. And people do not patronize the theatre to be educated.

"Sell yourself to the customers. Make 'em pals!"

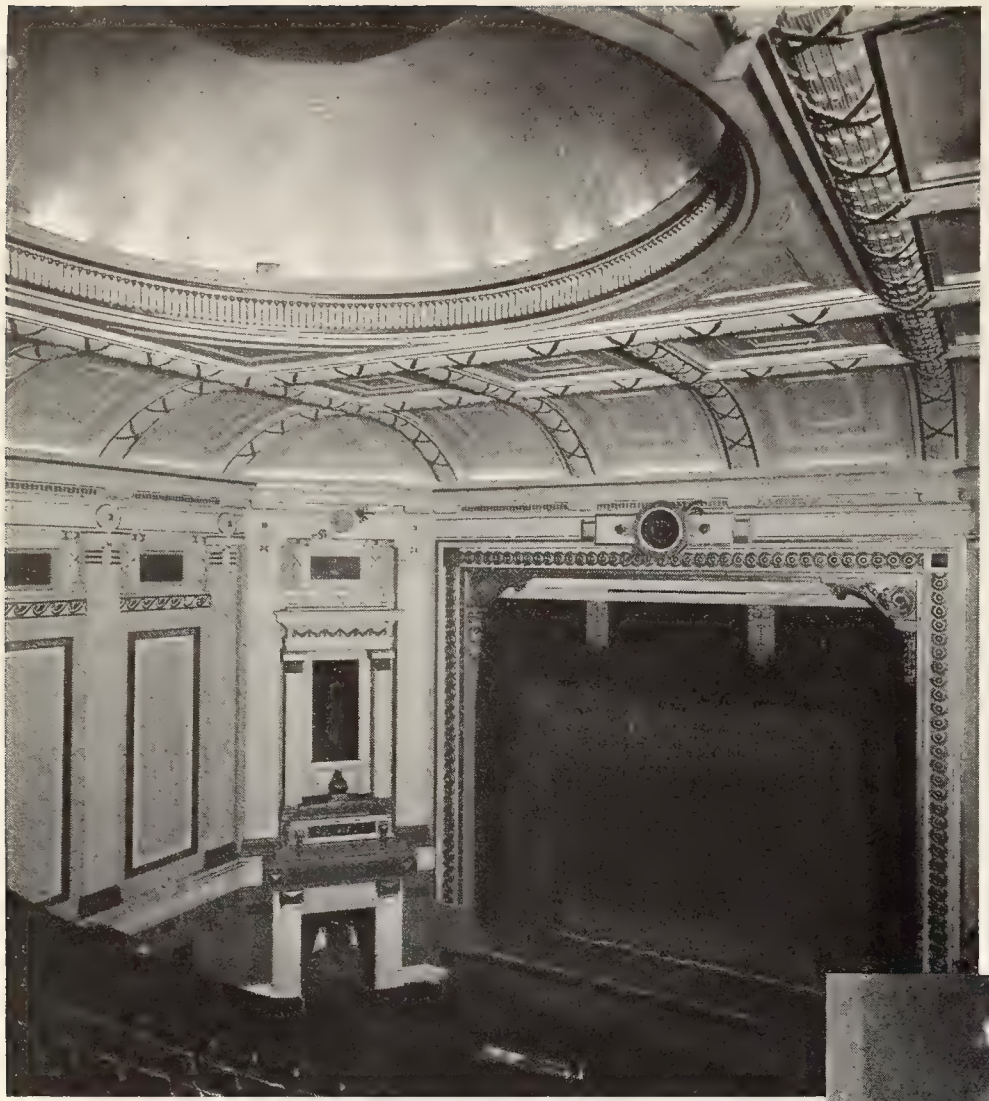
I spoke before of organ solos with a timely punch. What I emphasize is timeliness. Probably the most novel part of my daily program is my screen newspaper. Each day I write verses giving the latest news events in rhyme. I had the slide maker prepare slides carrying the heading, "Bernie Cowham's News and Views," lettered in newspaper style across the top. The balance of the slide has a background, gray in effect, consisting in a faint reproduction of the reading matter of a newspaper. The verses are typed upon this background in regular typewriter lettering. I give below an example of the verses I concoct from the day's news. These are accompanied by a suitable tune. The example given, picked at random, was presented to the tune of "Spend an Evening in Caroline." These are the verses I got up for this particular "broadcast":

Slide 1.—Yes, the Sharkey-Schmeling fight is in the headlines. . . It was not a good decision some folks say. . . Oh, bring back the good old days of "Fitz" and Corbett. . . That's the plea of the fans today!

Slide 2.—And Miss Earhart for her hop across the ocean . . . Got a nice, bright, shiny medal for her pay . . . 'Twas presented by our President, "Herb" Hoover. . . . To this brave flyer yesterday.

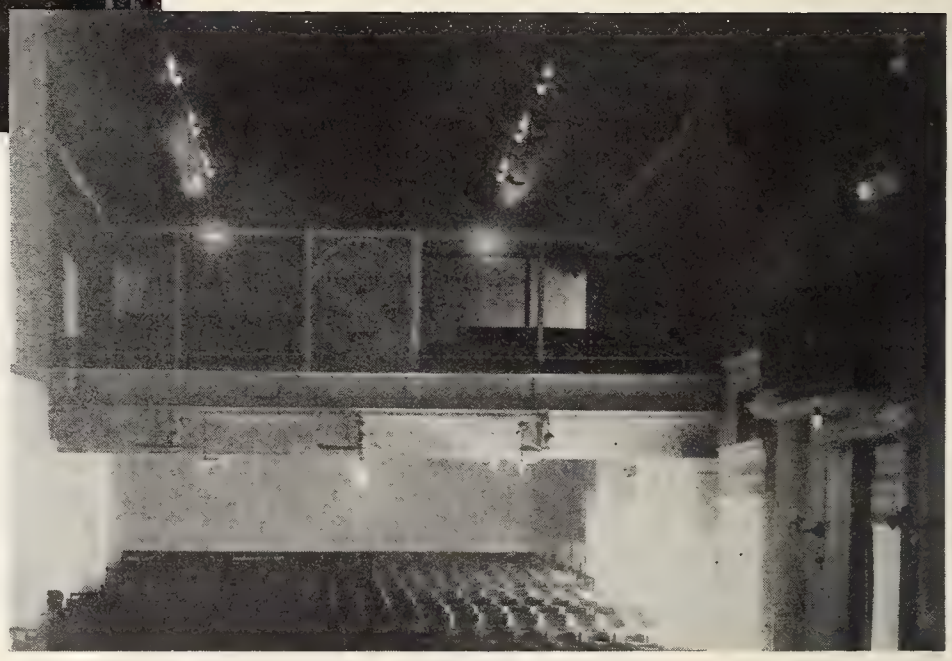
Slide 3.—Oh, boy, Garner's all set and willing to run for the Democrats . . . Oh, boy, Garner is "wet." . . . He and Al Smith don their old brown hats.

Slide 4.—Old Man Summer's gently sneaking in upon us. . . . And some fair and warmer weather's on the way. . . . There are prospects for a bright and sunny weekend. . . . That's the news from the press today.



During the baseball season I always give them the scores of the day's games, usually writing the verse to the tune of "Take Me Out to the Ball Game." This newspaper idea takes a lot of time to prepare, but it is worth the effort, for it receives more comment than any other stunt I have ever tried.

Here is another angle the neighborhood organist should watch—publicity. Endeavor to tie up with your newspapers in connection with stories whenever possible. Appear on local club programs whenever you have the opportunity. Play up to the schools in your vicinity. In other words, make yourself a part of the community life in which you are following your career as an entertainer.



It is through the personal contacts that the organist gets to know his public, because each personal contact stands for a score of others who react along the same lines. And it is also through these personal contacts that the organist builds his personality-appeal.

Somewhere, long ago, I saw a little motto. I believe it was credited to George M. Cohan. It went: "All you have to do is to keep working, planning, thinking and scheming—you're bound to be lucky." Plenty of punch in those last words—and truth, too.

HYDERABAD AND SINGAPORE

PERHAPS ONE should not bother about distinctions in show-business. The product to be sold is essentially human stuff wherever it may be marketed, and more than one showman has made the mistake of classifying his patrons too definitely. Some inquiring is yet to be done as to just how far those differences between the "big" gorgeous Broadway theatre and the Little Gem in Jalopi really extend after all. As for Hyderabad and Singapore —well, there too one might do well not to go much beyond the obvious.

The obvious differences between the cinema there and in the Western World (especially the United States), are enough, however, to be interesting and instructive. In a region so varied in type of population, industry and terrain, one is not surprised to find a variety in types of theatres much more complex than in a homogeneous region like the United States. Here theatres are regularly to be distinguished by the adjectives small and big. In areas like the Straits Settlements and India—and this would be true, of course, throughout the commercial and industrial sections of the continent—language and custom factors loom large in the problems of the showman everywhere. In an international commercial center like Singapore, there is especially an immediate distinction between theatres represented in the presence, importantly, of the educated European and American.

Thus for a glimpse of the motion picture theatre of Asia, one could not be comprehensive without considering a sheer quantity of houses far beyond the likely appeal of the subject to the Western showman. The Excelsior in Hyderabad, India, and the Capitol in Singapore, Straits Settlements, have the virtue of their wide differences, the former being located in a city of more local importance and largely patronized by the native population; the latter having a prominent site in one of the great international ports of the Far East, with a population teeming with citizens of a score of Western countries.

The Capitol was the largest amusement enterprise ever launched in Malaya. It is located in the heart of Singapore and has a seating capacity of 1,750. Two performances are given each evening, one at 6:15, and the other at 9:15 o'clock. In addition there are matinees on Wednesdays, Saturdays and Sundays. The admission prices are from 25 cents to $2.50 in Straits currency. Patronage is both native and "European."

The Capitol is fully equipped for talking pictures, which form the entire program. It has a large modern projection room with two projectors (Simplex heads and Peerless high intensity arcs). The sound equipment is Western Electric. Power is used directly from the city lines, but the house has its own generator for cases of emergency. The Capitol is further equipped with Brenkert effect machines despite the fact that no stage shows are presented, and it has a magnascopic screen and Vallen electrical curtain controls. The signs are neon.

The building is of European architecture, with construction in reinforced concrete. The main seating level (which, curiously enough, is that patronized by the lower classes) contains 1,100 chairs, while the Circle (referred to locally as being on the third floor) seats 650. All chairs are of modern upholstered type, executed by Heywood-Wakefield.

Associated with the theatre is a restaurant on the second floor, while another restaurant is located on the fourth floor. The building also contains apartments and shops, which occupy the outer area surrounding the theatre. The entrance to the theatre is at the corner of the building.

The Excelsior in Hyderabad (Deccan), India, is operated by The Mahavir Photoplays & Theatres, Ltd., under the management of S. F. Sutaria. It has a seating capacity of 950. Two shows are given daily with admission at six different class prices. Patronage is native, with also a certain amount of "European" custom. Talking pictures are presented, and the entire regular program is on the screen. However, the Excelsior is equipped with a stage 75 x 50 feet in size, and dramatic stage performances in Hindu are given thrice a week, independently of pictures.

Equipment includes two Kallee projector heads mounted on Western Electric universal bases, the sound system being W. E. Besides a Siemens-Schuckert motor-generator, the house has one by General Electric.

The Excelsior is located on the main street of the city. The outer area of the ground level contains shops. In Hyderabad it is pointed out that the Excelsior was the first theatre in all India to be equipped with an automatic ticket register.

A portion of the projection room of the Capitol theatre in Singapore, in which one notes equipment liberally supplied by American, instead of European, companies. Power is used directly from the municipal lines. The light source is high intensity.

SOLOING THE CLASSICS

IT IS A thing that is done by the theatre organist in Britain more than in the United States—this soloing the classics. There are, however, a few of the "heavier" things applicable in certain situations, and it was interesting to observe a report in the British Kinematograph Weekly that an organist in the provincial town of Ilkley, Yorkshire, worked out a solo using passages from Richard Wagner, with lighting effects and a few educational references. The cue sheet for the solo as worked out by this organist—Harry Croudson—is as follows:

Music	Remarks	Slide	Lighting
Mastersingers Overture.	First 26 Bars. At last Bar retard and straight into	No. 1	Dark Amber.
Prize Song ...	From beginning up to about Bar 26.....	No. 2	Light Amber (or Pink).

VERTICAL SOUND RECORDS

By H. A. FREDERICK

[The following is an account of the progress made in vertical recording ("hill and dale" method), representing a portion of a paper by H. A. Frederick published in the "Journal" of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. The method has brought about advancements in the recording art which have been the subject of several demonstrations during the last few months.]

IN MOST commercial uses of lateral records, surface noise has imposed very serious limitations. In many cases this noise has been suppressed by the use of so-called "scratch" filters. These have effectively quieted the reproduction but only by the sacrifice of an important portion of the recorded band of frequencies which are above 3,000 to 4,000 cycles. Investigations have been carried on to determine the fundamental causes and the characteristics of the surface noise in order that, with a better understanding, it might be more effectively reduced and without such a sacrifice.

In addition to the limitations imposed by surface noise, other studies have indicated that, with the available reproducers for lateral cut records, the needle point may fail to follow the center of the groove accurately when the curvature becomes too sharp, and may skid from side to side by varying amounts, depending on the record and the characteristics of the reproducer being used. Studies have proceeded relating to the physical characteristics necessary in a reproducer in order that it may faithfully follow a groove. These studies have led us to expect superior performance from a groove cut with vertical undulations than from one with lateral undulations. These records are similar in principle to those used by Mr. Edison. With the lateral groove there is distortion due to the fact that the sound is recorded with a chisel-shaped stylus and reproduced with a round stylus; also that in reproduction the bearing point of the stylus against the groove shifts forward and backward as the needle rounds a curve. These effects are illustrated in Figure 1. With vertical records the first of these effects, sometimes called the "pinch" effect, is absent, but a shifting of the bearing point of the reproducing stylus forward and backward occurs if a round stylus is used. It is doubtful if a chisel-shaped reproducing stylus or a stylus with an elliptical point can be justified due to the increased cost and complication, and in consideration of the rather small amount of distortion which this would eliminate. Some qualitative idea of what takes place with vertical undulations may be gained from Figure 2, in which a sine wave is shown together with the resulting positions of the stylus point. For a given stylus tip radius and for a given recording level this effect increases with frequency.

This failure of a stylus point to follow a vertical record with great accuracy is, of course, due to the finite length of the stylus point along the groove. A fact which relieves this situation is that speech and music and most other sounds which we are interested in recording contain much less energy in the high than in the low frequency range.

Frequency analyses of surface noise have been made using a variety of reproducers and record materials. In general, these frequency characteristics have been found to be very largely influenced by the characteristics of the reproducers, but do not show any marked differences as between lateral and vertical recordings. Frequency charts of surface noise taken with a vertical reproducer having a very flat frequency characteristic over the audible range have shown the surface noise to be relatively richer in high frequencies. The distribution of surface noise energy below 10,000 cycles from a cellulose acetate pressing is shown in Figure 3. The amount of recorded sound energy in the low frequency range, i. e., below about 2,000 or 3,000 cycles, however, is large relative to that in the higher frequency ranges. Moreover, the characteristics of many lateral reproducers have been such as to accentuate surface noise between 3,000 and 5,000 cycles. Hence the use of "scratch" filters for the elimination of the high frequency components of the surface have made a large effective reduction in noise without any material loss in loudness of the sounds of interest. The loss in loudness at the higher frequencies has also reduced the audible distortion due to poor traction and, although the loss of the higher frequencies is serious, it has been held by many that the end has justified the means. Surface noise is probably caused by a more or less random distribution of impulsive shocks on the needle due to minute irregularities in the record. It has been common practice in lateral recording to use record material containing a certain amount of abrasive in order to grind the needle to fit the groove. The irregularities due to the abrasive would logically be expected to produce a scratchy noise of much the character with which we are all familiar. A 5,000-cycle note of the same loudness as a 10,000,-cycle band of surface noise using a reproducer with a flat characteristic would have an amplitude of only about 0.000001 inch. In order to reduce the surface noise to the point where it is no longer troublesome, it appears necessary to eliminate irregularities at least down to this order of magnitude. It has been found that, if the usual abrasive record were replaced by an unabrasive record pressed of a very clean homogeneous material such as cellulose acetate, the surface noise caused by the record material itself would be greatly reduced. Such a change, however, by itself, has been found to give a comparatively minor improvement; for, when this cause is moved well into the background, other causes of surface noise of practically the same order of magnitude as that due to the abrasive of a shellac record become controlling.

The next process which it has been found necessary to improve has been that of rendering the surface of the original wax electrically conducting. The usual methods of graphiting or brushing with fine electrically conducting powders have been found unsatisfactory. Recourse has therefore been had to one of the earlier methods used in phonograph practice, namely, cathode sputtering of the wax. This method was not devoid of difficulty, however. With the best sputtering technic the usual thick

"waxes" are heated to such an extent as to injure or destroy their finely engraved surfaces. By using a very thin layer of wax flowed on a metal surface it is possible to keep it cool during the sputtering operation. It is thus possible to apply an extremely uniform, smooth, and tenacious surface of metal of adequate thickness in a very few minutes. This can be electroplated by the ordinary methods, and the electroplate used for pressing the final record. By using this thinly flowed wax, it is possible to obtain a surface texture which is extremely smooth and homogeneous and which is also free from the mechanical strains incident to shaving the waxes by the methods previously commonly used. In addition, waxes of this type possess obvious advantages in ease of transportation, ruggedness, etc. When the noise due to the two causes discussed above has been removed or largely reduced, a third source of noise is apt to become prominent. This involves the reaction of the wax shaving on the recording stylus, which appears on the final record as "clicks" when the shaving breaks or is removed in a non-uniform manner. It has, however, been found possible by suitable design to provide a recorder, stylus, and suction arrangement such that the shaving is removed in a very smooth stream, thus eliminating this type of noise to a large extent. * * *

If a blank groove record, made with the improvements noted above, is reproduced by a reproducer which is uniformly responsive up to 10,000 cycles, the surface noise is 20 db. below that of an old type record reproduced in the same manner. If, however, all frequencies above 5,000 cycles are eliminated in each case, the difference is 15 db. If now the noise of the new record reproduced to 10,000 cycles is compared with the old record reproduced to 5,000 cycles only, which is the comparison of greatest practical interest, the difference in noise is about 15 db. In addition, it is possible to take advantage of the fact that most sounds to be recorded contain less energy in the high frequency range than in the medium or low frequency range, and to record the higher frequencies at a level somewhat higher than normal. In reproduction these higher frequencies are then correspondingly reduced by the reproducing amplifier or circuit. It is thus found that a further reduction of about 10 db. in surface noise can be obtained, the amount depending somewhat on the high frequency cut-off of the reproducer or circuit. This effect occurs chiefly between 5,000 and 10,000 cycles.

The "volume range" for any particular frequency band is usually considered to be the difference in decibels between the loudness of the surface noise and the loudness of the maximum recorded sound which the record can accommodate when reproduced faithfully over this frequency range. With the lateral records of the past, reproduced to 5,000 cycles, this volume range may be stated as about 25 to 30 db. This figure obviously will differ somewhat for different cases, depending on the character of the sounds recorded and on the degree of excellence obtained with the recording and processing methods throughout. With vertical recording the reductions in surface noise described above increase the volume range for a 5,000-cycle band of frequencies to from 50 to 55 db. For 10,000-cycle reproduction the volume range is 45 to 50 db. Obviously, these new facilities open the door for very great improvement in fidelity of reproduction and for the reproduction of many effects not possible in the past. In many cases it means that the surface noise may be reduced to inaudibility. * * *

Laterally and vertically cut records drive the reproducer point quite differently. Laterally cut records drive the point from both sides but the point rarely follows the center of the groove with great exactitude. It deviates from the center by amounts chiefly dependent upon the mechanical impedance of the reproducer. A vertically cut record, on the other hand, drives in only one direction. The restoring force is due chiefly to the elasticity of the supporting structure of the reproducer, the normal restoring force being equal to the total weight on the needle minus the weight of the moving or vibrating part. The stylus point will always remain in contact with the record unless the forces set up by the undulations exceed this normal restoring force. Operation should always be below this limiting condition. This sets definite requirements on the mechanical impedance of the vibrating parts and, unless this condition can be met, reproduction of extreme frequencies by vertical records is impossible. With the vertical reproducers which we have used, the stylus can follow sudden downward motions of the record groove even to accelerations about a thousand times that due to gravity. With laterally cut records, there is no definite limiting condition analogous to the above. However, it appears easier in practical design to reduce greatly the mechanical impedance of vertical than of lateral reproducers. Practical experience has shown that the mass can be so reduced as to reproduce up to well above 10,000 cycles and the stiffness reduced so as to reproduce down to the order of 20 cycles. In fact, there appears to be considerable margin on this score. This makes it possible to reduce the weight with which the reproducer point bears on the record to between 2 and 20 per cent of what has been used with most commercial lateral reproducers. This reduction in stylus or needle point pressure has been found to decrease the wear on the record very greatly, with the result that its life has been considerably increased. Tests have shown that the first few thousand playings cause negligible deterioration, and even several hundred thousand playings do not show excessive wear if the record is properly protected from dust and dirt. * * *

The response of the moving coil vertical reproducer is practically constant over a very broad frequency range. It is shown in Fig. 4.

The design of a recorder for use with vertically cut records involves no fundamentally new problems over those used with laterally cut records which have been described previously. It is still desirable to design the recorder to approximate a constant amplitude characteristic for the lower frequency range and a constant velocity characteristic for the higher range. This frequency characteristic has been often shown and is familiar to all. The same recorders which have been used for lateral recording can usually be converted for vertical recording by the addition of a comparatively simple link system and are quite satisfactory if a high frequency cut-off of 6,500 to 7,000 cycles is acceptable. It is, however, desirable to have a higher high-frequency cut-off. Such a recorder has been used in making many of the records which we have studied. Its frequency characteristic is shown in Figure 5.

The response of the oil-damped lateral reproducer is greatest at the very low frequencies. Its response decreases with frequency, this decrease in the lower frequency range compensating more or less for the increase of response of the recorder with frequency. Because of the flat characteristic of the vertical reproducer, it has been found desirable to compensate in the reproducing amplifier or circuit for the low response of the vertical recorder at the lower end of the frequency scale. A frequency characteristic for the combination of recorder, reproducer, amplifier and network is shown in Figure 6.

It has been found with vertical records that speech is reproduced with considerably improved naturalness and that the word endings, sibilant sounds, etc., are much more distinct. The sounds of the different instruments in an orchestra, particularly when playing a loud passage, are reproduced with very great individuality and clarity. Results of this kind are difficult to describe and should be heard to be appreciated fully. If records such as those described are reproduced using various low pass filters, the loss of distinctness due to the elimination of frequencies above even 7,000 cycles is easily noticeable, whereas little or no difference in needle scratch or surface noise may be observed, this being almost wholly absent in all cases. The latter statement holds whether the records contain speech or music or if blank grooves be reproduced. In listening to such records a loud speaker has been used which is essentially flat over a large portion of the range of audibility, its characteristic being as shown. (Figure 7.) The reproducer frequency characteristic, as shown in Figure 4, is essentially flat to 10,000 cycles. A corrective network has been used which compensates for the low frequency droop in the recorder which, at the high frequency end, is, as shown in Figure 5, essentially flat to 9,000 cycles. Thin metal-backed waxes have been used which, after recording, have been rendered electrically conducting by metal sputtering. The moving coil microphone has been used, the characteristic being as shown in Figure 8. The records have been pressed of cellulose acetate.

Equipment News and Comment

NEW MOTOR-GENERATOR

● Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company has developed a new motor-generator in which the stabilized arc is said to permit simple and ready change-over. The sealed-sleeve bearings, claimed as an exclusive feature, are said to require changing of oil only once or twice a year.

Rigid steel frames and all-welded bedplates tend to minimize vibration, according to the company, while maintenance is regarded as simplified on the ground that brush holders are individually removable. Non-deteriorating insulation and directed ventilation are pointed out as conducive to long life in the generator. Distribution is through National Theatre Supply Company.

PORTABLE REPRODUCER

● The Weber Machine Company of Rochester, N. Y., has developed portable sound reproducing apparatus, (based on its Syncrofilm standard equipment and designed for locations where permanent equipment cannot be maintained). The equipment weighs 60 pounds, and is described in the following specifications:

Frame of aluminum alloy moulded castings. An intermittent in the projector having a hardened and ground star wheel and cam. Mazda lighting, of 500, 750 or 1,000 watts (500-watt lamp furnished). Projection lenses of 4-inch focal length, and a reflector system of optical glass coated for heat resistance. Condensers, two 3-inch plano-convex. Motor, 1/20 h.p., 110 volts, 60 cycles. Bearings of bronze alloy. Two-point rear shutter with fan characteristics. Ventilation fan for cooling projection lamp attached to motor shaft. Round-belt drives.

SOUND PROJECTOR

● A new sound-on-film standard projector, marketed as the Phototone Talkafilm, has been developed by the Platter Sound Products Company, of North Vernon, Ind. The equipment, prepared at the factory, may be installed and serviced by the exhibitor. Certain simplifications are therefore claimed, involving the sound heads, direct chain drive, optical lens system, photoelectric cell assembly, exciter lamp housing, adjustable lens light gate assembly, combination spread directional speaker bell, and an all-electric amplification system.

The company also has announced a new electric portable sound-on-film projector suitable for smaller theatres, schools and

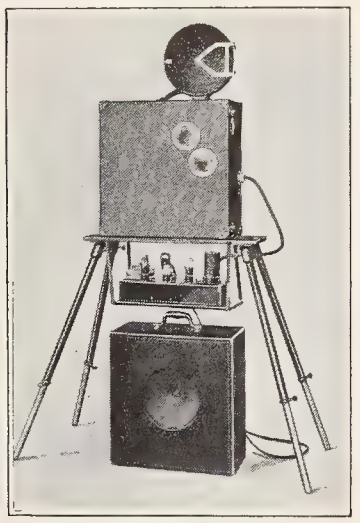
for Class "B" Theatres



THE recent motion picture productions are carrying less musical accompaniment than in the early days of sound. This offers an unusual opportunity to the organist to dramatize the motion picture with suitable selections. Also, there is an increasing release of entertaining and interesting short reels for organ features on the program, providing a welcome musical diversion.

The PETER CLARK CONSOLE LIFT is designed to bring the organist at the console into full view during the musical numbers. Many of the largest houses are already equipped with this Lift. Owners and operators of Class "B" Theatres will do well to consider the advantages of the PETER CLARK CONSOLE LIFT, particularly as an aid to box office receipts.

The Platter Company has also developed a vacuum tube reproducing organ, designed for theatres and available in special designs for individual specifications.

NEW SPEAKER UNITS

● For the fields of public address, centralized radio and music reproducing systems, the Macy Electrical Products Company, Inc., of Brooklyn, N. Y., offers two new types of electro-dynamic units. The junior type operates on an output of 7-10 watts. The weight is 10 lbs. The giant type weighs 19 lbs. and operates on an output of 10-30 watts. Both types require a field supply of 1.6 amperes at 6 volts d. c., and have a voice coil impedance of 16 ohms.

The exciting energy of 6 volts can be supplied either by an ordinary 6 volt storage battery, or a specially designed Macy rectifier.

CIRCUIT BREAKERS

● Circuit protectors employing a principle referred to as "de-ionization," have been developed by Westinghouse, with amperage capacities ranging from 15 to 600, and a choice of pole combinations. This type of circuit breakers is cited by the manufacturer as the result of studies by Dr. Joseph Slepian, Westinghouse research engineer, concerning the behavior of high-power arcs. He, it is said, developed the "de-ion" principle of arc extinction, by which the high-power arcs drawn by an opening contact are dissipated.

PRE-SET FADER STOP

● A pre-set fader stop, for providing instantaneous changeover of sound, has been brought out by the Golde Manufacturing Company of Chicago, and is being marketed through the National Theatre Supply Company. The device consists of a friction stop with a projecting arm. The stop slides on a ring before the face of the fader and may be placed in any position around the full circle.

The arm carries a rubber cushion, which contacts the fader-pointer and arrests it at the pre-set positions. The pre-set fader stop has no pins and holes, ratchets or any other type of fixed-position arresting device.

The stop is attached only by the lower face-plate screws on Western Electric faders, making unnecessary any alterations of the fader.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

EXAMINATIONS FOR PROJECTION LICENSES

WE HAVE been advised that a move is being made in the State of Louisiana to pass a law requiring that every motion picture projectionist in the state be required to pass an examination and be licensed by the state before he will be permitted to project pictures.

"It is estimated," says a news dispatch, "that such a law would put many thousands of dollars into the state treasury, besides supplying hundreds of jobs of the political brand for the 'faithful,' in the form of clerks, examiners and tax collectors."

Our advice regarding this proposed action is not official, though its source is such that we are entitled to assume it to be at least approximately correct.

Come, let us examine into the matter. I have always been favorable to a really competent examintion for projectionists, with licenses issued to those found competent. It is my opinion that such examination should be repeated before the issuance of license renewal each year. I hold that real competence in projection to be essential to excellence in results, both upon the screen and through the horns. I hold that without competence there will be, or at least there is more than likely to be, viewed as a whole, an enormous waste in both electrical power and equipment deterioration, and that theatre patrons will not receive full value for the money paid in at the box office. I also firmly believe that lack of competence in projection operates to set up unnecessary eye-strain for theatre patrons, hence as a matter of broad public policy only, men who have passed a really adequate examination and have been found to be equipped with all necessary knowledge of their profession, should be permitted to project pictures and sound in theatres or other places where public exhibitions of motion pictures are given.

Of course no system of examinations should be instituted to make "jobs for the faithful" and to put "thousands of dollars into the state treasury." But really competent examination would work out well—exceedingly well, in fact, for the reason that it would cause the men, through fear of failure, to study their profession. But to have such an examination there first must be a thoroughly competent examiner, who must have an excellent knowledge of electrics, optics, mechanics and acoustics (insofar as they apply to projection). To examine merely from the fire hazard point of view is sheer nonsense. That is now much less important than optics and acoustics. In modern theatres using modern equipment, there is absolutely no danger from fire, and but very little from panic. The public, through the years, has pretty thoroughly learned the lesson that danger lies not in the fire itself, but in the panic it causes. The result is they no longer stampede.

To undertake an examination with any other than a thoroughly competent examiner or examiners would be largely farcical. It is for this reason that most of the examinations now conducted in the United States are very largely without real value. Canada is the only place in the Americas, so far as our observation goes, where a thoroughly honest and usually very competent examination of motion picture projectionists is held.

If Louisiana institutes such a board, may I most respectfully suggest that the examiners be two; namely, a competent electrical engineer who is acquainted with electrics as employed in projection, and a thoroughly competent motion picture-sound projectionist, who before appointment shall be required to very conclusively prove his competence to give such an examination. The electrical and general projection examinations should be separate, one immediately following the other. Examinations should be held each year before renewal of license, to see to it that the men keep up-to-date in projection matters.

IMAGE GOES IN AND OUT OF FOCUS

FROM Lawrence O. Dowell, projectionist of Lockhaven, Pa., comes this inquiry:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: I have been following the department for quite a long time and now desire to take advantage of your offer to answer questions. We are projecting a picture 20 feet by 25 feet, using a Ross, 3.75 e.f. lens. The projectors are equipped with rear shutters. Aperture plates are of combination type that move up and down for Movietone or Vitaphone. Projection distance is 90 feet, Simplex projectors.

"We are troubled by the picture going in and out of focus intermittently on all prints. The lens holder is tight, and there is no chance for the lens to move. Will you be good enough to explain what might be causing this trouble? Each different print we have to focus differently for the two projectors."

As I understand you, Friend Dowell, you find it necessary to alter the focus on one projector after the print has been focused on the other one. Also you tell me that all prints are intermittently out of focus. Well, Brother Dowell, I am not certain about this, but it seems to me two things must be wrong:

First, at least one of your projector lenses must have been dissembled and one of its elements reversed. Second, one of the elements in one of the lenses must be loose in its holder.

First of all, using a steel straight-edge, be sure that your aperture plate tracks and tension present an even, flat surface throughout their length. If they do not, replace them with new ones at once. I do not, however, think this is any aperture plate trouble. If you find that it is not, then carefully dismantle the projection lens and make sure that all the various elements are tight in their individual holders. Do not jam them up too tight, but make sure the holder is snug, so that nothing can move, and be sure that each separate element of the lens presents its convex surface toward the screen. Some of these surfaces are only slightly convex, so you must examine them carefully. Remember though, the convex surface must face the screen.

While you have the lens apart, use a solution of one half wood alcohol and one half water, and a clean smooth cloth, and wash all the elements, polishing afterwards with a bit of perfectly clean chamois. Then reassemble the lens and I think you will find the trouble will have disappeared.

Of course, in-and-out-of-focus may be and sometimes is set up by buckled film, though that particular trouble has been largely remedied. Anyhow, that would not exist in all the prints. Moreover, there is something wrong with those lenses, or else it would not be necessary to refocus the prints in one projector when they have run in perfect focus in the other.

SPROCKET HOLES MISMATCHED

WHILE IT is a fact that mismatched sprocket holes are not nearly so common as they once were, they are nevertheless still with us in considerable number, once the film has passed the first-run stage. It is my purpose to present for your examination some "horrible examples," taken from films returned from theatres in which apparently someone entrusted with the making of splices had not even the remotest idea that accuracy had any place in the procedure of film splicing.

In Figure 1, we see an example of two too-wide splices, with two matched, and two unmatched sprocket holes.

Figure 2, gives you a glimpse of (upper view) a wide, stiff, buckled splice passing over a sprocket. The lower view shows a properly made splice doing the same thing. What a difference! Which kind of splice do you make?

In Figure 3, we see a wide, stiff, buckled splice passing over a Simplex intermittent sprocket. Note how the holding pad is shoved away, and imagine what the screen image is doing! Examine the picture (a "still" made after having run such a splice down on the sprocket, then stopping the projector) and ask yourself whether or not you commit such outrages as is represented by this terrible splice.

The real projectionist well knows that close accuracy and proper procedure is very important in the making of film splices. He knows that improper procedure which results in a too-wide, or too-stiff splice, or a buckled splice, means trouble on the screen, with very possibly injury to the film itself. Only the "machine operator" permits himself to do such work, or permits anyone else to do it in his projection room.

Projection is, in all its branches, a work of precision. Accuracy is essential to excellence of results in just about everything connected with it. Even sweeping the projection room floor is a thing which must be carefully done, unless you are willing to inflict unnecessary damage to film and, later, to the screen image in other theatres. Careless sweeping distributes dust, you know, and dust works havoc to both the picture and the sound track.

The projection room watchword should be in all things—"Accuracy always."

EXPENSIVE— OR INEXPENSIVE?

GEORGE FRYER of the Legion theatre in Saratoga, Wyo., finds himself confronted with the following problem, concerning which he asks advice:

"I am running a small theatre in a small town, hence must make every penny count if I am to keep out of the dreaded 'Red.' I therefore cannot put in expensive equipment. Just now I have the choice of two units of G. E. Mazda and want your advice as to whether or not they will give me sufficient light on the screen.

"My house is only 30 feet wide. The rear row of seats is 90 feet from the screen. The picture is 10x12 feet. Projection distance, 90 feet. Screen is muslin, which I calcimine several times a year. I use Good-All sound-on-disc, with the speaker located on the left of the screen. Some day I hope to be able to install a sound screen. At present I am using 110-volt Mazdas, with 1,000-watt bulbs, but they are unsatisfactory."

I have answered Friend Fryer by mail, advising that if properly installed and handled, the mazda equipments, assuming them to be in good order, will provide sufficient illumination for a 10x12-foot picture —also explaining some other details concerning the differences between Mazda and arc illumination. I think, however, a discussion here of this whole matter might have distinct value.

In the matter of equipment, provided what is needed can be installed without going too heavily in debt, and provided there be a substantial margin of "stay-at-homes" or "come-infrequentlys" who might be coaxed out if results were improved, it may be that otherwise expensive equipment would not really be any added burden.

In the theatre business it is not so much what things cost, as what their conclusion will do for the box office. I would strongly advise Friend Fryer, and all other exhibitors similarly placed, to examine their local field very carefully, seeking to ascertain just what percentage of the people resident attend the theatre as often as they probably would were the programs improved by both pictures and equipment. It is highly important to know just what effect improvements might have on securing more patronage.

RESIDUAL MAGNETISM

JOHN D. REDDING of St. Paul, Minn., after some kind words about our work, asks what residual induction is and what effect it has.

Residual induction is that amount of induction remaining in magnetic material after the magnetizing force has been retarded or reduced to zero. So far as I can ascertain, the only effect it has is that what is known as hysteresis losses are dependent in considerable degree upon the amount or strength of the residual induction in a material. The higher the residual induction, the greater the hysteresis loss, and vice versa, other conditions of course remaining the same.

THE NEW APERTURE

JOHN SHIVELY of the New Theatre in Mifflinburg, Pa., writes: "Dear Mr. Richardson: I have been a reader of the projection department for the past three years, and I am also the proud owner of the Bluebooks of Projection—all three volumes—from which I surely have profited.

"The theatre at which I am shooting them right now is using a 12-foot picture. It is the purpose of the owner to enlarge the screen image to a width of 15 feet, but the height cannot be enlarged more than 6 or 8 inches. By using one of the new apertures would it be possible to get a picture 15 feet wide by 9 1/2 or 10 feet high? The projection distance is 110 feet. We expect to use two of the new Simplex Acme projectors."

Inasmuch as the dimensions of the seating space of the theatre have not been included, I cannot of course offer any comment as to whether the increase in size is or is not advisable. The dimensions of the new aperture are .600 of an inch high, and .825 of an inch wide. The screen image will of course be in exactly the same proportions. With these figures available, it is an easy matter for you to figure out what picture you can accommodate. You will, of course, to all intents and purposes, be obliged to install a new aperture, and the only thing you can do is to make the picture as high as you can and let the width be what it will. Whatever the management may desire to do in the way of picture size, it is not a practical thing to use a shoe-stretcher on the auditorium. If you can get a picture only 10 feet high, and you want to use that height, then the width will have to be what the aperture proportions provide. The thing works out as follows:

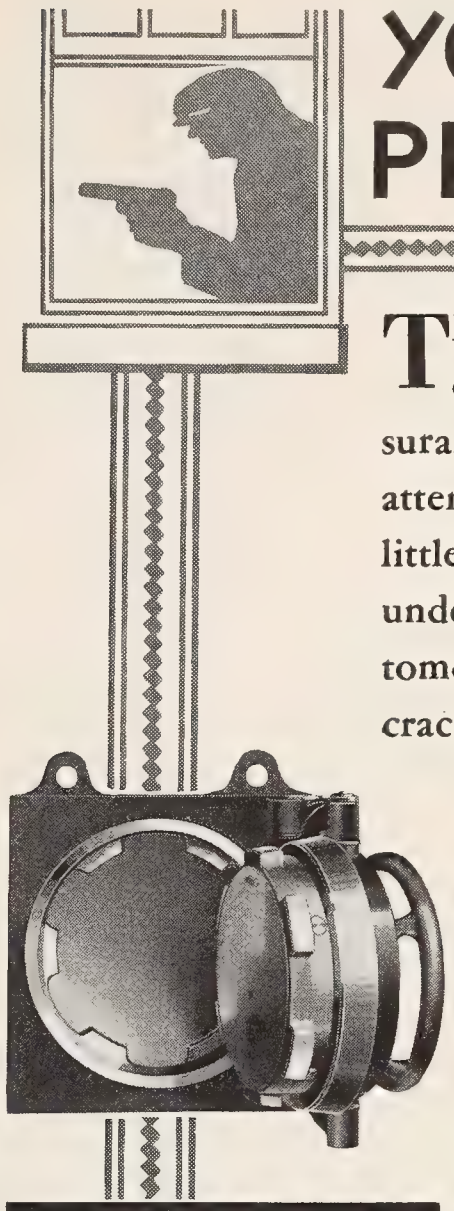
A 10-foot picture would be 120 inches high, therefore proceed according to the old rule of proportion: As .600 is to 120, .825 is to x. The solution is got by multiplying .825 by 120 and dividing this answer by .6, which gives 13 feet, 9 inches as the width of the screen image, which will be the width of your picture with the new aperture.

HALL & CONNOLLY EUIPMENT IMPROVEMENT



EVERY TIME I step into Hall & Connolly's factory, down in lower New York, they proceed to show me some improvement in their equipment and put me to a lot of trouble telling you about it. But that's the kind of folks I like. And now here is the latest:

In future, Hall & Connolly spot lamps and motion picture projector lamps will be equipped with an automatic arc control consisting of a glass contactor tube about 3/8 of an inch (inside diameter) by approximately 2 inches over all. This little tube is sealed shut after a vacuum has been created in it equal to that in ordinary incandescent lamps.

The tube is in an upright position. Inside it are two small copper contacts, probably less than 1/8 of a square inch in area. One of these is held in a fixed position. The other is carried, by a sort of glass bellows which will bend slightly upon application of pressure, to a small glass rod standing something like a half-inch above the end of the tube.

Stated in another way, this contact is held on one end of the above described glass rod, which is held in its center by the glass bellows. Normally the two contacts are held together under slight pressure, but if just a little pressure be applied in the right direction to the upper end of the glass rod, the glass bellows, acting as a fulcrum, will give slightly and let upper end of the rod move sidewise, thus moving the lower end in the opposite direction and separating the contacts. That is about as close as I can describe the mechanical action.

This device is held under tension by an upright metal bar about 6 inches high, the lower end of which is attached by a hinge to a base piece attached to the floor in the compartment in which it is placed.

It is so located that the beam of light from the light source, reflected through a small opening in the front of the compartment, comes into contact with thermostatic metal strips, which by their action, operate the glass rod before described, applying pressure thereto and breaking the contact, or withdrawing the contact and opening it, all of which operates to vary the speed of the arc control motor. The adjustment thus secured is so close that it operates on a variation of 1/64 of an inch in the positive crater position, which certainly should be close enough to suit even the most exacting projectionist.

But this is not all. I told you the upright metallic bar had a hinge at its lower end. It therefore may be tilted sidewise. This upright metal bar is attached to a hand control device having an indicating needle and graduated scale. By altering the position of the needle on the scale by means of a suitable knob provided, the position of the light beam with relation to the thermostatic element changes, all of which means that within certain limits the projectionist may alter the distance from the face of the collector lens at which the crater is maintained merely by turning the knob, thereby moving the indicating needle to any desired position on the scale. That is to say, if one desires to retard or advance the position of the crater—the distance at which it is held from the face of the collector lens—one may do so by means of this hand control.

By way of explanation, let it be clearly understood that this action has nothing to do with the length of the arc. It has only to do with maintaining the light source at any certain desired distance from the face of the collector lens.

TROUBLES OF ISOLATED THEATRES

NOT LONG ago John M. Spencer, projectionist at the Bellevue theatre in Paramaribo, Suriuam (Dutch Guiana), wrote me concerning trouble he was having with a certain make of sound equipment. I took the matter up with the manufacturer, who in turn took it up with his representative in that territory, finally writing me to the effect that the trouble arose because the exhibitor did not wish to pay for a visit of a service engineer to his theatre. I wrote Friend Spencer, setting forth the statement of the manufacturer, to which letter the following reply has come:

"Your most interesting letter received. I could not think of saying uncomplimentary things about your delayed answer [I told him the delay in replying to his communication was due to waiting for action by the manufacturer.—F. H. R.] because I can guess how busy you must be carrying on such valuable work."

Spencer then sets forth the fact that the service engineer was sent for, and did visit the theatre. Continuing Spencer writes:

"I do not think the export manager of the ———— company has a very reasonable way of thinking, or he would realize that a theatre situated away off down here is not at all like one in the United States,

To Correspondents:

I have a great deal of trouble with non-readable signatures on letters. It is impossible to answer these letters either in the department or by mail because I cannot be certain of the hand-written name. Therefore please typewrite, or print, your name under the signature.

in which latter the exhibitor has only to step to a phone and call an engineer—when help is needed. We, on the other hand, must get him from over-seas, and that means several days delay, not counting the expense. What then are we to do? Close up the place?

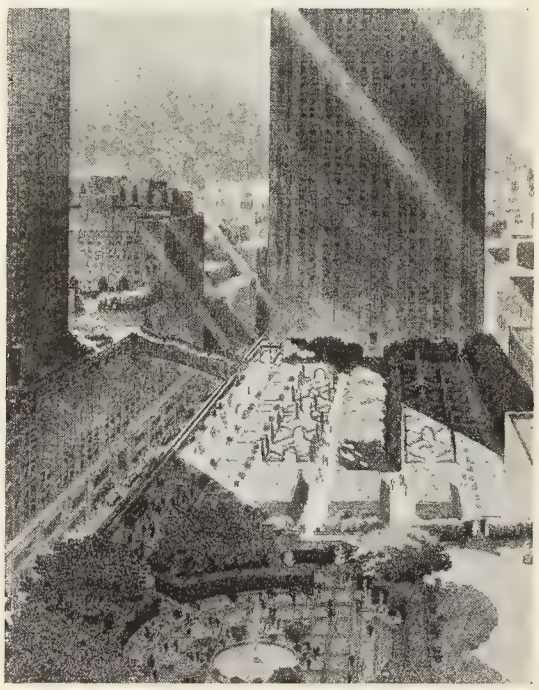
"I quite agree with you, Mr. Richardson, that it is hardly reasonable to expect the projectionist to understand all the many things about sound equipment (yet, at any rate), and be able to get along entirely without occasionally calling for expert assistance. However, my employer is the sort of gentleman who never refuses any necessary thing to keep the equipment in order.

"The export manager you have dealt with on my behalf should learn that the West Indian projectionist of today is not the kind of lazy-bones who is satisfied with any kind of results. Our men down here are very few in number, as compared with those of the United States, but they are just as intelligent as your own men and just as able to take proper care of the equipment, though because of relative isolation he labors under great difficulties.

"Projection conditions here are as follows: I as chief, receive 10 dollars a week. My assistant receives 7 dollars. We begin work at 8:30 in the morning, inspecting and cleaning the sound films only. I use carbon tetrachloride for cleaning. About 90% of the films we get are in a very poor condition. We use Kodak sound patch for splices. When this work is finished, both myself and assistant join in putting the projection room and equipment in good working order. All this usually takes several hours, after which we are free until the evening. We have three shows here, Saturdays, Sundays and Thursdays—occasionally, though not often, one on Wednesday—also occasionally one on Friday.

"Our shows start at 8:30. We close at about 11:30. We have rehearsals on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and occasionally on Fridays—both private rehearsals for testing the sound, and rehearsals for the censors. Programs change twice weekly.

"Our projectors are Super-Simplex (of which I am very proud) equipped with rear shutters. The projection room is lined with galvanized sheet tin. It has a concrete floor four inches thick. Its size is 20 feet wide by 10 feet front to back. From floor to ceiling it is 7 feet 4 inches. We have our own power supply—d.c., of course, but with a motor-generator set which supplies the necessary 110-volt a.c.



"Attendance is not always what we would like (unless we have a very good picture) due to the depression in these parts. The fire laws are not very strict, but we live up to them for the safety of both our theatre patrons and the property.

"Can you advise me as to what might cause the power transformer to burn out even if it does not receive excess voltage?"

Generally speaking, the transformer to which no excess voltage has been applied might burn out because of structural insulation weakness, because it is so located that its temperature gets too high, or because through some accident some current carrying medium shorted some of its elements. That is all I can think of at the moment. The probability is, however, structural weakness.

What Friend Spencer says about service is perfectly reasonable and entirely correct. Equipment manufacturers certainly very well know, when they sell apparatus for use in isolated places where service is not only rather slow but enormously expensive, what the purchaser will in all human probability be up against later.

It is perhaps too much to expect that commercial men engaged in selling will warn isolated exhibitors concerning this phase of matters. Certainly, however, such exhibitors should themselves understand that service will most certainly be both slow and expensive and insist upon their projectionists receiving as nearly as possible complete instructions with regard to the apparatus and its care. They should also try to be stocked up with spare parts.

PROJECTIONISTS AT S. M. P. E. CONVENTION

IT WAS indeed gratifying to note the number of projectionists present at the spring meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. Only a few years ago, if one had suggested that a motion picture "operator" attend such a meeting with a view to improving his knowledge of the work assigned him, one would have been considered "queer," if not just plain crazy, by both the "operator" and the theatre manager of that day.

At the Washington meeting I noted several projectionists who did not miss one of the papers read before the convention.

Chauncey L. Greene, projectionist at the RKO Hennepin-Orpheum theatre in Minneapolis, read before it a most interesting paper entitled, "Standards and Arguments of Projection for Visual Education."

Frank Dudiak, projectionist at Warner Brothers' Fairmount theatre, located away down in the rugged hills of West Virginia, in the town of Fairmount, was one of the most interested listeners at all sessions.

Our old friend George Edwards, projectionist at the Warner Brothers Strand theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., was, as usual, on the job from start to finish. H. S. Morton, Supervisor of Projection for the Punch and Judy theatre in Detroit, Mich., was there. Charles W. Parshley, of the University theatre in Cambridge, Mass., came in the company of his manager, Stanley Sumner. They both remained for the entire meeting.

As I look back over the past quarter of a century and think of the large number of projection rooms I have visited, the projection room (or "projectorium," as they proudly call it) of the University theatre in Cambridge, Mass., stands out as the neatest, cleanest and most immaculate of them all. The pictures projected from that room reach the screen at very nearly their maximum value. Manager Sumner is a man who wants the best and is willing to co-operate in every possible way to enable his projectionists to get the results he knows can be obtained. His men both like and respect him. They are not only willing to give the very best there is in them in return for the fair treatment received, but are very glad to do it.

I might add that the Washington projectionists' Local did everything possible to enable the production of high-grade projection results for the convention. Moreover, all delegates were made welcome at the Fox Washington theatre, Loew's Palace, the RKO Keith, and Warner Brothers' Earl and Metropolitan theaters at all times during the duration of the convention, without charge.

And now, let me "land" on high officials of theatre chains, not one of whose supervisors of projection were present. Projection today is not a cheap thing. On the contrary, considering electric power consumed, cost of equipment and its maintenance and the wages of men employed in the work, it is pretty expensive.

Upon its excellence depends in very large measure the entertainment value of the programs of all motion picture theatres. Upon the skill and knowledge applied to it in very large degree depends the amount which must be charged off each year in the favor of deterioration of equipment. Upon the knowledge and skill applied to projection in considerable degree depends the amount of electric power consumed.

Considering these facts—and we all know they are facts—does it not seem rather unbusinesslike for theatre chains to fail to send their supervisors of projection to such meetings, where they not only have the opportunity to hear many projection

CORROSION VERSUS OXIDATION

JAMES R. SPERRY, of Portland, Oregon, asks, "To settle an argument, will you be good enough to tell us whether or not there is any difference between corrosion and oxidation?"

After having secured a half-dozen different answers from those who might be regarded as authorities on such matters, I came across a very complete statement of the problem in the March issue of the Bell Laboratories Record, (Volume 10, No. 7). It reads interestingly, but is too lengthy for reproduction. In brief, it says that while corrosion of metals is often called oxidation, it is a mistake to interpret this as meaning that corrosion is a direct formation of metallic oxides. The term oxidation is much the broader of the two.

"A metal atom is said to be oxidized when it loses one or more of its outer electrons and thus forms a positive ion, which may remain in the solid structure, or be detached and go into solution. Corrosion is a type of oxydization distinguished by the formation of metal ions dispersed in water solution."

It is thus seen that corrosion and oxidation are different types of the same action.

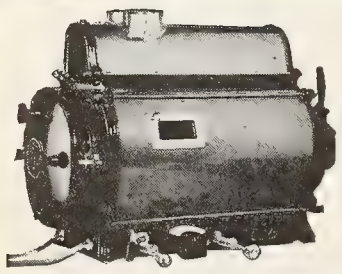
SENDING COMPLAINTS TO HEADQUARTERS

SOME WHILE ago a projectionist made certain complaints with regard to the product of a certain producer. Inasmuch as the matter seemed rather important, I referred the letter to Mr. Lester Cowan, executive secretary of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences, suggesting that the Academy take the matter up with the producer and try to bring about a remedy for the fault. I am just in receipt of a letter from Mr. Cowan, who says:



"Dear Mr. Richardson: Your letter has been received. I have sent the attached note to * * * whom I am sure will investigate the matter and make whatever adjustments are called for. Be assured that we appreciate hearing from the field, inasmuch as it is only through such letters as yours that we can keep cognizant of field conditions. You are doing a constructive work, not only in obtaining these complaints, but by forwarding them on where they will do some practical good."

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences is in very close touch with the producers. It is quite possible to secure real action by forwarding to the Academy statements of faults on the part of any individual producer, or all producers. I will be glad to receive from projectionists or managers, statements of faults found in the prints which are chargeable to the producer. These faults, however, must not be imaginary or trivial. Also, any fault must be described in detail and be accompanied by both the name of the producer and the name of the production.

Just now there is a great deal of complaint with regard to the low visibility of changeover signal marks. I shall be glad to forward complaints to the Academy for attention, provided the name of the production and the producer be given, and provided the projectionist closely examines the mark and describes just what the condition is which renders it partially blotted out to his vision.

I also suggest that projectionists who are receiving films in such poor mechanical condition that the work of projection is made inefficient, make a report, naming the exchange from which they come. Very possibly we will be able to effect some improvement in that condition as well.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

WE WOULD like to paint the interior of this theatre and would like some suggestions relative to the proper colors to use.

I believe it would be wise to use a wainscoting of some dark color, then a lighter side wall and a light ceiling. The draperies in the theatre are dark red. Walls have never been painted.

I will sincerely appreciate any suggestions that you can make.—C.R.S.

The Answer:

IT ALL depends on the height of the ceiling of your auditorium whether to provide a wainscoting of some darker color, as it generally has a tendency to minimize the ceiling height. Should you prefer to have a wainscoting, and your ceiling is low, do not make it any higher than the top of your seats. On the other hand, if your ceiling is high, a wainscoting would give a pleasant effect. The ceiling should be lighter in color than the side walls, but do not make your base color too light, as it soils too easily.

As you stated that your draperies are red, a tan color in mixed shades would harmonize fairly well. If your walls are plain and without offsets or openings, a stencil panel border effect would be very pleasing. Make the panels at least twice as high as wide so as to extenuate the ceiling height. A texture finish would be preferable over a smooth finish, as it will not show any blemishes or unevenness in the walls. If there are ornamental cornices at the intersection of walls and ceiling, and decorative beams in ceiling, the latter could be highlighted in various colors. This would break the monotony of the general effect.

The Question:

I HAVE an opportunity to buy an old building on the main street of our city, which has a population of 8,000. The building is in an excellent condition. It has 12-inch brick walls and an inside unobstructed floor area of 56 feet x 78 feet. Each side wall has three steel windows about 10 feet square. The ceiling is 20 feet high. There is a basement under the entire building. The floor joists rest on steel beams supported by two rows of three cast-iron columns. The heating plant is in a very good condition and located in the rear for a distance of 14 feet from the rear wall. Fortunately there is a frame building in front occupying 40 feet from the sidewalk. I expect to tear this down and utilize this space for lobby and two store rooms. The top of the floor in the rear building is level with the sidewalk. Which would be the most economical way of doing, lowering the entire floor on a slope, or building the slope on top of the present floor? The ceiling in basement is 10 feet in the clear. I figured that I could rebuild this building into a theatre and equip it for about $14,000.

Please let me know if this amount is sufficient, also let me know how many seats I can get. I would like to have as many as possible, since there is only one competing house in this town and it has 250 seats, so I think if I can do this for the money which I have, I think that I have a very good proposition.

Where would you place the men's and women's rooms?

Please let me have your advice in the next issue as I only have three more weeks' option on the property, and other parties are trying to get if I do not take it—G.D.F.

Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

The Answer:

SINCE YOU have a floor space of 56 feet x 78 feet, I presume you will use this for the auditorium proper. The boiler room being in the rear, I suggest you build the stage or apron over it, because it will be expensive or impossible to lower the slab over the boiler room on account of pipes on the ceiling and space above boiler for breeching to smoke stack. You certainly do not want to alter the heating plant if it is in good operating condition.

I would prefer to lower the floor instead of building a new floor on top of the old one, as this will increase the height of the auditorium at stage about 3 feet 6 inches and will give you a very well proportioned proscenium arch. The expenses either way are about the same. If we leave the stage or apron 14 feet wide, and allow 5 feet for a cross-aisle behind the last row of seats, and 9 feet between first row and stage, we have 50 feet for chairs, which would give 20 rows.

In the 56 feet in width we will have a center bank of 13 seats with a 4-foot aisle on each side, and two wall banks of seven seats each, giving 27 20-inch seats in a row, making a total seating capacity of 540 seats. Should you desire more seats, you can eliminate the rear cross-aisle by building a new foyer in the new part which is to occupy the 40-foot front, gaining 54 seats and making a total of 594 seats. Of course the windows in the side walls should be bricked up, and be sure to enclose the boiler and coal room with fireproof walls and ceiling in case they are not constructed so. I would advise you to make a new lobby at least 18 feet wide. This will still leave the stores on each side of lobby 18 feet wide. If you plan a new foyer, place the doors in walls between auditorium and foyer at entrance to aisles.

It would be best to plan the men's and women's rooms on the first floor by taking enough space off the back of each store. By building the foyer up in two stories, you can plan your projection room over it, leaving enough space for manager's office if you want one.

If you are very careful in planning this alteration, I think that the amount of money you have will cover the cost, and properly designed, you will have a very nice theatre.

BYPASS PATENTS

The Auditorium Conditioning Corporation of New York, of which J. O. Ross is president, announces ownership of United States patents No. 1,670,656, and reissue No. 16,611, known in the air-conditioning industry as "bypass patents," covering the use of air from an enclosure for mixture with conditioned air.

In recent litigation, John R. Hazel, judge of the United States district court for the Western district of New York, is reported to have sustained the validity of both patents. An injunction was granted, as well as accounting of profits, damages and costs.

The company announces the following as licensees under its patents: Carrier Engineering Corporation, Newark, N. J.; Cooling and Air Conditioning Corporation, New York; and the York Ice Machinery Corporation, York, Pa.

AIR CONDITIONING FILM

● The growing use of refrigeration and air conditioning in the developing and printing of motion picture films, is indicated in the announcement that Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., has purchased a complete 225-ton refrigerating plant for its Fort Lee, N. J., laboratories, from the York Ice Machinery Corporation of York, Pa.

The refrigerating equipment will cool the water used in air conditioning systems for 20 film-drying cabinets with a total capacity of 2,000 feet of film per minute. Water will also be cooled and circulated through a cooling coil in the developing tanks where it is desired to maintain temperatures very accurately within plus or minus ½° F.

NEW HIGH-WATTAGE LAMPS

● The Nela Park Laboratories of the General Electric Company announce a new development in simplified construction for high-wattage incandescent lamps that is said to differ radically from the original method of design which has always been followed in lamp construction. The new process is said to be more rugged because of the simplicity of design and construction.

The new construction, using fewer parts, and changing the entire operation of lamp fabrication, includes the use of two copper prongs which serve as a base, and to which a special heat-resisting glass cup is sealed, the entire internal structure being built up from the prongs. The bulb is sealed to the glass cup as a final operation.

stairway; in fact, according to the testimony of a witness who was in a position to know, in the twelve years of his connection with the premises, there had been no previous accident at this stairway."

Oiled Floors Source of Danger

IT IS COMMON observation that oil on a floor is slippery and if this situation exists the floor is dangerous. Therefore, it is the duty of theatre owners and their employes to exercise ordinary care under all circumstances to make a floor safe which recently has been oiled.

Generally speaking, a theatre owner may be liable in damages for an injury caused a patron who slips on an oiled floor, if it is shown that the condition of the floor actually was dangerous and existed for a sufficient period of time that careful employes should have discovered and remedied the defect.

For instance, in Saxton (177 N. E. 219), it was disclosed that a patron slipped on an oiled floor and was seriously injured. He filed suit against the proprietor to recover damages. The counsel for the latter argued that the patron should not be entitled to a recovery because proper and modern appliances had been utilized in oiling the floor five weeks previously, which was sufficient time for the floor to thoroughly dry out. However, since the evidence indicated that the slippery condition of the floor was known to the employes, the lower court held the proprietor liable and the higher court sustained this verdict, saying:

"If the evidence had only shown that there was a small damp or wet place caused by oil on the floor, and that it had been properly oiled weeks before, the jury might properly have held that failure to discover this small space with moist oil on it was not want of ordinary care. But, if this condition of the floor existed, and was dangerous, and it was known to the agents of defendant, it presented a different situation and a stronger inference of negligence against the defendant."

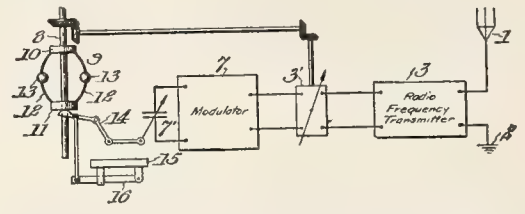
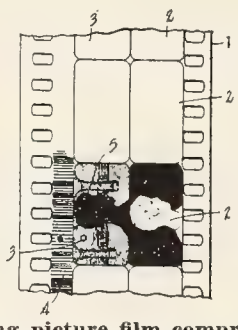
New Inventions . . . illustrated descriptions of devices related to motion pictures and allied crafts, recently published by the U. S. government and selected for Better Theatres by William N. Moore, patent specialist of Washington, D. C.

1,802,099. WIDE-ANGLE PROJECTION. Walter G. Wolfe, Greenwood, Mass., assigned to Wilmot R. Evans, trustee, Boston, Mass. Filed May 16, 1927. Serial No. 191,589. 5 Claims. (Cl.88—24.)



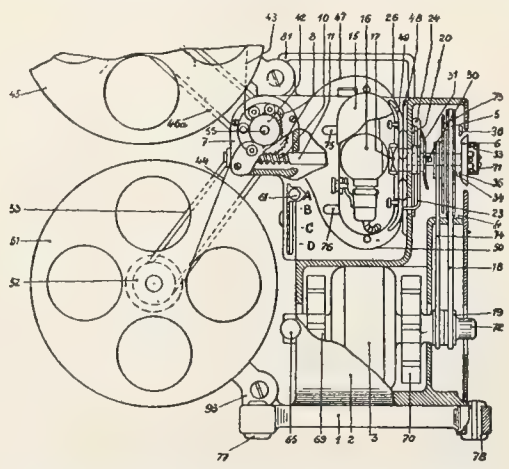
A combination in a projection equipment for back-focusing the projection of abnormal wide angle on a relation to the screen, a projector having a long distance optical system but placed at a fractional distance of the front focus of its system from said screen and a relatively larger negative lens of wide aperture including a concave side having a central spherical surface and a marginal aspheric surface progressively increasing the focal length toward the edge of the lens and spaced from the positive system to receive the normal projected beam therefrom and spead it without substantial change of the back focus of the projector.

METHOD OF AND APPARATUS FOR KINETOSCOPY. Forest Ray Moulton, Chicago, Ill., assignor to Acme Motion Picture Projector Company, Chicago, Ill. Filed Jan. 7, 1920. Serial No. 350,036. 11 Claims. (Cl. 88—18.3.)



In an apparatus of the character referred to, in combination, a frame for a strip of movable material, having an aperture for disclosing a portion of such strip, and means for moving the material step-by-step into register with said aperture including a driver provided with a projection, a star wheel provided with a slot adapted to receive said projection, said slot being provided with a bearing surface which is continuously curved and adapted to be in continuous contact with said projection while in said slot to receive and transmit a uniform rate of movement from said projection to said moving means throughout contact of the projection and slot.

1,801,466. METHODS OF AND MEANS FOR OBSERVING OBJECTS IN MOTION. Clinton Blake Townsend, New York, N. Y. Filed Apr. 3, 1929. Serial No. 352,259. 6 Claims.



1. In a radio communication system, the method of observing relations between a moving object and a fixed observation station, which comprises the transmitting radio signals from said moving object; varying the character of said transmission in accord with one or more characteristics; receiving said transmission from said moving object at an observation station.

MOVING PICTURE FILM. Filed Sept. 18, 1929. Serial No. 393,368. 13 Claims. (Cl. 88—19.5.)

CINEMATOGRAPHIC APPARATUS FOR THE PROJECTION OF FIXED AND MOVING PICTURES. Jacques Bogopolsky, Geneva, Switzerland. Filed Mar. 24, 1927, Serial No. 178,034, and in Switzerland Nov. 2, 1926. 5 Claims. (Cl. 88—17.)

1,801,867. TRANSLATING SYSTEM. Bernard J. Kroger, New York, N. Y., assignor to Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, a Corporation of Pennsylvania. Filed Jan. 16, 1928. Serial No. 247,030. 3 Claims. (Cl. 179—100.3.)

1. In a sound-reproducing system, a source of substantially monochromatic light, means for causing a sound record to move adjacent to said light source, light-sensitive means so disposed as to be influenced by light from the source after it has been modified by a sound record.

PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS. Filed Dec. 28, 1927. Serial No. 243,082.

In photographic apparatus, the combination with a body of a support fixed to said body, guiding means of said support, a mounting element movable on said guiding means and carrying a lens and prism, a copyholder guiding means on which said copyholder is supported for movement toward and from the lens, and means for adjusting the relative positions of said copyholder and lens, said means comprising mechanism associated with said lens and prism guiding means by which said guiding means may be moved relatively to its support.

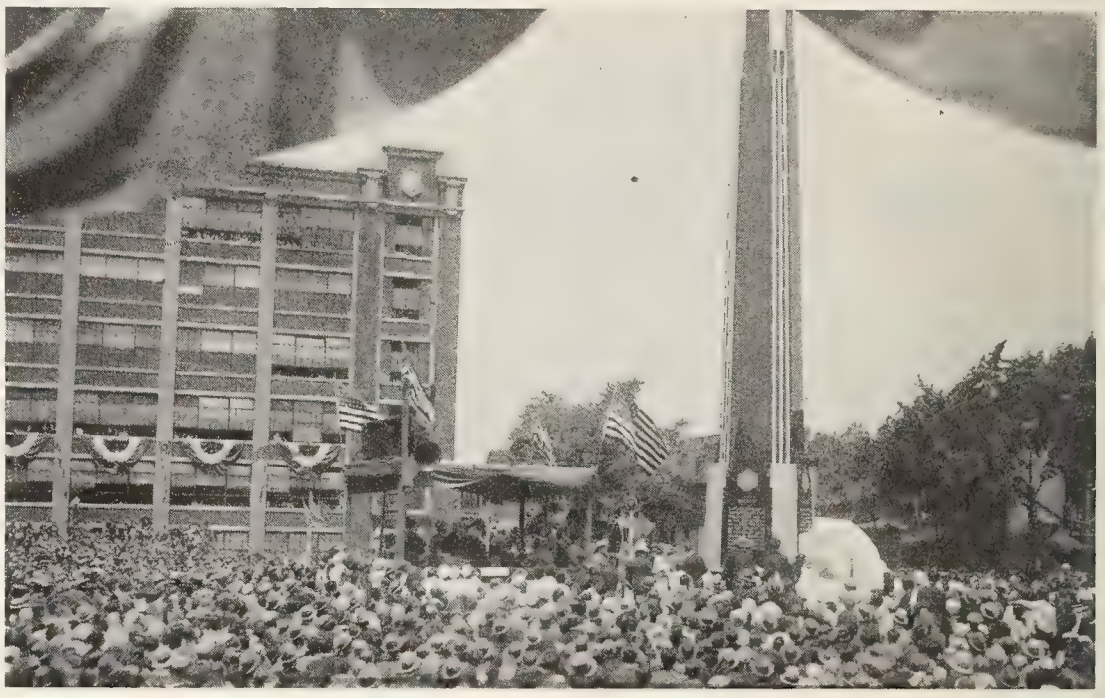
Rochester's Tribute to Henry Lomb

Henry Lomb

A FEW WEEKS ago, the City of Rochester paid unique tribute to the memory of a man who, to these citizens, was a local benefactor, but who to the motion picture industry is one associated with a name—Bausch & Lomb—long celebrated in the record of the cinema's progress.



Henry Lomb went to Rochester almost at once upon his arrival, at the age of 21, in this country. He had come from the province of Hesse-Cassel in Germany, his trade that of a cabinet maker. We are told that he pursued his trade only a few years in this country, becoming associated with J. J. Bausch in the operation of a little optical shop in 1853. Henry Lomb became the firm's "drummer," and often he walked from town to town selling his wares.

All this took place during the years from 1849, when he arrived in New York, and 1861. In the latter year, his adopted country became threatened with partial dissolution. Henry Lomb was one of many Germans to form Company C in the 13th Regiment of the New York State Volunteers.

Henry Lomb returned to Rochester in 1863. Somehow John Bausch had kept the little optical business going, and Lomb resumed where he had left off. The aggressive policies of the company, its scientific as well as commercial interest in the advancement of optics (then largely concerned with eye glasses), soon made it efficacious to have a New York sales office, and to New York Henry Lomb went to assume charge of it. In a few years, however, he was back in Rochester, where he continued to reside the rest of his life.

During the later years, when material success was at last his in good measure, Henry Lomb devoted much time and money to civic works. The Lomb Memorial Monument commands the approach to the Bausch Memorial Bridge in Rochester. It is a shaft of black Minnesota granite, bearing appropriate inscriptions to Henry Lomb as a patriot and philanthropist.

As a grateful city dedicated its memorial to Henry Lomb.

ornamental grilles. Each of these loudspeakers will have a straight directional baffle 63 inches long, and 58 inches by 43 inches at the throat.

THE FORM of the auditorium was determined largely by the seating arrangement, the seats on the orchestra floor being kept within such limits at the sides as to secure as good sight lines as was consistent with the provision of the desired amount of seating capacity, and the side walls being made to follow this line. The curve in these walls permits the placing of more seats and makes the appearance of the auditorium better than if flat walls were used. The back wall of the auditorium is also moderately curved. The sight lines have controlled the height, depth and pitch of the mezzanines and the pitch of the orchestra floor. The following dimensions have resulted: Depth of auditorium at orchestra level from the standee rail to the curtain line is 114 feet, 2¾ inches, measured in a horizontal line. The rise of the orchestra floor from front to rear in this distance is seven feet.

In the first mezzanine the horizontal depth from the inside of the parapet to the wall in back of the last row of seats is 20 feet, 10¾ inches, and the rise in this distance is 4 feet. In the aisles there will be one intermediate step between the seat steppings. The rise from one stepping to the next in the first mezzanine is 9⅝ inches. In the second mezzanine the horizontal distance from front to rear is 32 feet, 4¾ inches, and the rise is 10 feet, 6 inches. There will be one intermediate step between the steppings in this mezzanine. The rise from one stepping to the next will be 1 foot, 2 inches. The horizontal depth of the third mezzanine is 30 feet, 10¾ inches, and the rise is 12 feet, 8 inches. There will be two intermediate steps between the steppings in this balcony and the rise between the steppings will be 1 foot, 2 inches.

The distribution of seating in the various areas is as follows: Main floor, 1,890 seats; first mezzanine (which is about on a level of the cross-over in the balcony of a theatre of the usual type) provides 402 seats (this area affords the best view of the screen); the second mezzanine contains 655 seats; and the third mezzanine, 558 seats.

The first row of seats in the orchestra will be 21 feet from the curtain line. The picture screen will be placed 7 feet in back of the curtain line, and the magnascopic screen will be in the same plane. The smaller screen will be 28 feet by 22 feet, and the large screen will be 45 feet wide by 30 feet in height. The architects state that the angle of projection from the booth located at the rear of the third mezzanine will be 22°. (Refer to accompanying Longitudinal Plan.)

["Theatre Engineering in Radio City" will be continued in the July 30th issue of Better Theatres, and in that installment will be discussed the seating, air conditioning provisions, lighting and other provisions in the engineering of the Cinema and International Music Hall of this tremendous project.]

WHEN first announced, Eastman Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative was used chiefly with incandescent lighting. It was found, however, to be equally valuable under arcs. And now cameramen are finding it ideally suited to daylight shots, particularly when it is provided with the non-halation gray backing. Expert in every branch of cinematography, Eastman Super-sensitive "Pan" is an all-purpose negative, the advantages of which are felt all the way from the lot to the screen. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. WONDER WHAT A MAGAZINE COVER THINKS ABOUT!

"No sooner do I get comfortably settled on this news-stand than somebody buys me. When they put Norma Shearer on a magazine cover it's a quick sale!"

"I'm proud. Honestly I'm proud to display Marie Dressler. The folks come along and say; 'Ah, Marie Dressler. I'll take this one!'"

"Is my face red! I've been stuck here all month and nobody even gives me a tumble. What chance has a magazine cover without an M-G-M star!"

"Greta Garbo gets on more magazine covers than any other star. Gosh, she's popular. I like her in that blonde wig from 'As You Desire Me'"

"Beautiful Marion Davies. She really adorns a magazine cover. They can't help picking me up to look me over. Thanks Marion!"

"I remember when they used to stick Joan Crawford's photo in a little corner inside. She's a real Front Cover Star now. Popularity that's deserved!"

"I get plenty of attention this month with Helen Hayes. And I hear the folks say; 'I loved her in Madelon Claudet I hope she's in a new talkie soon.'"

"All dressed up! That's how a magazine cover feels displaying Jean Harlow. I overhear them raving about her 'Red Headed Woman' hit!"

"Gee, the news dealer is happy this month. A lot of M-G-M Stars on the magazine covers. That guy is gonna buy me. I hope I'm going to a nice home!"

WHAT PRICE PRESIDENT?

FOR a moment of meditation by the motion picture industry, its economists, its critics and its apologists and publicists, it is our pleasure to present some figures on the price of executive ability in another great aggregation of enterprises, the railroads of America.

It is to be admitted, we presume, that the operation of a great rail system involves considerable special skill, considerable plain hard work, and not a little knowledge of many detailed operations of a highly technical character.

A report by the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Senate reveals that two rail presidents, of the Pennsylvania and of the Southern Pacific, each receive $135,000 a year, or rather less than a well connected grade A "Supervisor" in Hollywood. The presidents of the great Union Pacific system and the industrious New York, New Haven & Hartford each draw $90,000 a year, while the executive head of the New York Central, which is also rather well known among American enterprises, gets along with a mere $80,000 president. The New York Central, when laid end to end with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, constitutes the bridge from Broadway to Hollywood, and the president of the great "Atchison" road, which has all the kudos among rail stocks, draws a trivial $67,500; so it costs only $147,500 a year in chief executive attention to cross the nation.

From the presidents the salary curve drops sharply in the rail business, too. The chairman of the board of the Union Pacific draws $36,000 and the chairman for the New Haven only $25,000. Incidentally, the Commission's report indicates that the railroads still consider $10,000 a year a salary rather than clerk hire.

It is to be admitted, on the subject of salaries, that in most any industry the price is likely to be, and may properly be, about what the traffic will bear. If the industry is making vast profits for itself and its investors, it is likely that the executives responsible, or lucky, will properly participate.

However, in an industry which is not making vast profits, which is not making a return to its stockholders commensurate with their risks, it would seem that eventually the natural law would take its course. And this is not at all to be taken as having the least bearing on the question of star salaries in the world of the motion picture. The public, in its fashion, sets the figures. As for the executives, salaries are set by the gentlemen sitting on the status quo of Hollywood. Can the traffic bear it?

Just for the record we set it down here that the term of Mr. Smith Wildman Brookhart in the Senate of these United States will be officially concluded March 4, 1933. He will be missed by the motion picture industry, but not poignantly.

AN ENGLISHMAN SAYS

A POINT of acute significance was touched by Mr. Reginald Smith of P. D. C., Limited, London, when in a plea for screen drama of wholesome simplicity he remarked upon much of the current product as being just "good projection room pictures—because exhibitors like them better than their audiences do." Mr. Smith, long a distributor of American screen wares in Great Britain, appears to find the British audiences minded much as the American masses are. In their behalf he has come over asking for motion pictures as opposed to wordy translations of the sophisticated stage.

Mr. Smith's remarks were made as the guest of honor of a luncheon at Sardi's given by Mr. W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures Corporation. And standing there under the striped marquee at the center of a table lined by representatives of hardboiled Broadway at its boildest, Mr. Smith ventured, too, to suggest that in Great Britain there was a consciousness on the part of the motion picture industry of an institutional responsibility to the causes and needs of the nation.

"We of the amusement business have an obligation to be cheerful and to contribute to a cheerful public spirit."

TAXES VS. DIVIDENDS

FOLLOWING upon Motion Picture Herald's presentation last week of graphs showing the amazing rise in the costs of government, it is of interest to note comment that Mr. Walter P. Chrysler has enclosed to his stockholders along with their dividend checks. Mr. Chrysler states that in the last seven years the Chrysler Corporation has paid in taxes an amount equal to 35 per cent of its net profits and more than half of the total distributed in dividends.

"There is no good reason," observes Mr. Chrysler, "why the government itself should be immune to the necessity or desirability to economize which everyone else has to face, and there is certainly no good reason why the government itself—city, State and Federal—should not refrain from needless expenditures that no business could tolerate and still remain solvent."

TOO MUCH FOR THE MONEY

A RECENT advertisement of the Indiana theatre in Indianapolis offered the cash customers three features and a big stage show for one admission: "Merrily We Go to Hell," feature; "Tabu," added feature; stage show, and "His Woman," encore picture. All that would be required to really complete this offering would be a banner proclaiming "Fire Sale" or "Distress Merchandise."

FEDERAL JUDGE OUTLAWS GROUP ZONING PRACTICE

Youngclaus Wins Protection Suit; Granted Injunction Against Distributors Who Signed Omaha Agreement

A Federal court decision outlawing group or concerted protection and zoning agreements in the Omaha territory was flashed across the country early this week and focused the spotlight of attention on distribution and exhibition. Judge T. C. Munger in United States court at Omaha ruled that zoning and protection of a group by concerted agreement is in restraint of trade and in violation of the Sherman law.

The decision concluded the now famous protection suit brought by William N. Youngclaus, an independent exhibitor of Madison, Nebraska, against exchanges and distributors who signed a group zoning plan for the Omaha territory in July, 1930. Judge Munger granted Mr. Youngclaus a permanent injunction against the distributors who signed the agreement.

The case is the first involving zoning and protection, and while Judge Munger's decision is regarded generally as being of great importance to the industry because of the precedent established locally at Omaha, it is of course subject to appeal. Higher courts must uphold the decision of Judge Munger's United States District court before the decision can become enforceable throughout the nation.

Individual Rights Not Adjudicated

The decision of Judge Munger does not undertake to adjudicate the right of individual distributors to grant protection, but it denounces uniform or concerted moves to place limitations through protection, or to restrict the amount of protection to be granted, by the use or enforcement of a group or uniform zoning plan.

In a series of findings of fact which accompanied the decree and opinion, the Federal Judge said that Mr. Youngclaus was damaged by the operation of the zoning agreement and the public was damaged by the interference with Mr. Youngclaus' right to bargain for films in an open market. It was also said in the findings that the Nebraska Motion Picture Theatre Owners, which is affiliated with the national MPTOA, and C. E. Williams, president of the Nebraska body, are "subsidiaries to and subsidized by Paramount Publix and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America." Publix, leading circuit in Omaha, was a principal defendant in the Youngclaus action.

Mr. Williams, as Nebraska MPTO president, gave testimony which was intended to indicate the strength of independents belonging to his organization. On the other side, Mr. Youngclaus was supported by the independent Allied forces. Unofficially, this phase of the case evolved into a pitched battle between Nebraska's MPTO and Allied States of Iowa and Nebraska. Judge Munger rejected the independent claims of Mr. Williams' association and held that it was not representative of independent owners.

Briefly, 12 findings of fact were listed by Judge Munger. They are:

1. That the zoning and protection agreement was made. (This is admitted by both sides.)
2. That the agreement's purpose was to restrain open competition in the licensing of films and in booking.
3. That the agreement was made for the benefit of the Paramount-Publix Corporation. Publix-Nebraska and the Publix Theatres Corporation. (Most of the large theatres in this territory are Publix-owned.)
4. That the agreement was placed into operation.

Right of Individual Distributors To Grant Protection Not Adjudicated; Uniform or Concerted Moves Denounced

5. That the effect of the agreement was to prevent an open market in the film industry.
6. That a zoning committee was appointed to enforce the provisions of the agreement.
7. That the distributors refused to contract with Mr. Youngclaus except under terms conforming with the agreement.
8. That the intent of the agreement was to establish uniform protection.
9. That Mr. Youngclaus was damaged by the operation of the agreement.
10. That the public was damaged by the interference with Mr. Youngclaus' right to bargain for films in an open market.
11. That the Nebraska M. P. T. O. and C. E. Williams of Omaha, its president, are "subsidiary to and subsidized by Paramount-Publix and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America."
12. That all of the defendants conspired together to make and carry out the protection agreement.

Allied Claims Victory

The Allied forces, generally, evidenced jubilation over the decision. At Omaha, the Iowa-Nebraska unit hailed it as a great victory for independent theatres. Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board and general counsel of the national Allied States Association, wired from Washington, "The decision in the Youngclaus case is a complete vindication of Allied's position that combinations of chain theatres and exchanges, acting through the Hays organization and Film Boards of Trade to impose protection on independent theatres was illegal. The industry could have been spared this further ignominy by cooperating with Allied instead of following politicians who opposed Allied to save their own jobs.

Mr. Myers said "it would be dangerous to comment on the effect of the decision without examining the opinion and decree, which will not arrive for several days." He said "it is clear, however, that the working out of legal distribution and a stabilization scheme for the industry will depend on the full cooperation of all branches with due regard for the rights of all, and that this cannot be avoided or unduly postponed even to save the faces of those who have led the industry into this morass."

M. J. O'Toole, in charge of MPTOA headquarters in New York, would not comment on the decision.

DECISION NOT BINDING NATIONALLY

dent, telegraphed from Memphis that he was unfamiliar with details of the decision, but said, "If Mr. Williams is charged as stated, it is unfortunate. But it is no affair of the national organization. We pay absolutely no attention to politics or to the construction of state organizations," he said, "but merely invite healthy organizations to affiliate and appoint one independent member to our board.

"I guarantee the Tri-State (Southern MPTOA affiliate) would stand the closest scrutiny, as will most other affiliated units," he continued. "I know very little about Mr. Williams' organization except I do know he has many splendid independent exhibitor members."

Mr. Lightman said he believes "a close analysis would reveal that the decision is aimed more at Williams personally than at his membership, which, no doubt, resulted in a bad presentation to the court. Williams is absolutely fair, square and honorable, but I believe he does get a salary from funds paid mostly by circuits," concluded President Lightman.

Williams Would Not Comment

President Williams of the Nebraska MPTO wired from Omaha: "I have been out of the city and I have not seen the decision in the Youngclaus case. I have no comment to make."

Neither officials nor attorneys of the MPPDA would discuss the case or the situations involved.

However, an important executive in New York, who refused to be named, said that "in my opinion, the decision upholds the legality of protection. It does not question the rights of individual distributors to arrange for protection, although it does rule against restricting or limiting protection by zoning plans, and because of this restriction or limitation, it appears to me that the decision will prove to be the opposite of a victory to independents.

"The complaint as filed by Mr. Youngclaus," he continued, "is based on conditions which existed in Omaha in 1930. Since then, zoning generally has been abandoned. There were about 14 territories in which zoning was a practice until it was widely abandoned in the spring of 1930," he said, and continuing, predicted "untold confusion in the minds of many exhibitors as the result of this decision. Many will believe that protection is illegal. This is far from being a fact. The decision will make it plenty difficult for the independent exhibitors because it will give the circuits as much protection as they care to take."

"Brookhart Bill Next": Steffes

Al Steffes, president of Allied States national association, telegraphed from Minneapolis: "For three solid years Allied States have claimed the MPTOA is a subsidized organization owned and controlled by producers. Now that Federal courts verify this, perhaps the producers and the rest of the industry will believe it.

"This decision," Mr. Steffes said, "should arouse producers to the point of discharging Hays, Hess and the rest of that 'gang,' and disband the M P P D A, as this organization under Hays' leadership and guidance will do more to wreck the industry than depression, poor pictures or anything else.

"I have no further comment on the decision until I have had an opportunity to study it," said Steffes. He continued: "Supreme Court of North Dakota ruled contracts illegal in that state. Just another victory for Allied. Watch them pile up. The Brookhart bill will be next in spite of all that Hays and the subsidized crowd can do to stop it. When will the producers wake up and realize they are barking up the wrong tree as independents have a place in this picture—and watch them take it.

"MPTOA leaders are like Republican postmasters. They are going to be out of a job, and then watch the swing to Allied," concluded Mr. Steffes.

Refusal to Approve Contracts a Pivot

Because of the July 4 holiday week-end the decision made by Judge Munger was three days old before the industry, generally, learned of it.

Although the brief memorandum opinion, findings of fact, conclusions of law and decree filed by Judge Munger do not specifically point out the pivotal point of his decision, it seems clear that he laid emphasis on the fact that the distributors refused to approve contracts in which Mr. Youngclaus had inserted the following proviso: "Madison is to have no protection over other towns and no town is to have protection over Madison" (Madison, Neb., is where Mr. Youngclaus' Capitol theatre is located.)

The distributors had freely admitted the agreement signed July 22, 1930, although they had contested Mr. Youngclaus' interpretation of the agreement and his allegations of its effect. To Judge Munger, the refusal of the protection-free contracts constituted proof that the 1930 agreement was a conspiracy in restraint of trade and in violation of the Sherman anti-trust act.

Distributors' Claims Discredited

In branding the Omaha agreement as an attempt to give privileges to Publix theatres, declaring its intent to have been to prevent an open market in the licensing of films in the territory, Judge Munger answered the distributors that the agreement was made in order to curb excessive protection demands of Publix, as owner or in control of most of the large theatres in the territory.

Judge Munger disclaims the importance placed by the distributors of the claim that the protection provided in the 1930 agreement constituted only maximum privileges. He points out that the agreement specifically grants protection and the legal situation is the same whether the full period of protection is granted in any one instance or not.

The findings apparently support Mr. Youngclaus at every point. Point No. 7 is the probable decisive point in the case. Mr. Youngclaus admitted on the witness stand during the trial, which was held during the week of April 18, that protection was not rigidly enforced against him on his 1930-31 season contracts, after he had protested. So, if he had not tried and failed to get protection-free contracts for the next season, he probably would have lost his lawsuit.

No. 11 is the one that is making Allied members particularly happy. Mr. Williams had testified in court that he and other members of M. P. T. O. had helped draft the protection plan and had agreed to it in order to protect their independent members against Publix.

Appeal Appears Certain

An appeal of the case is regarded as certain. This was assured at the time of the trial by Arthur F. Mullen of Omaha, attorney for the distributors. The defense was also represented by Bruce Bromley and George Shea of New York.

Paul F. Good of Lincoln, Mr. Youngclaus' attorney, also hailed Judge Munger's decision as a great victory for the independent exhibitors.

The major part of the 1930 protection agreement dealt with relations between first and second-run Omaha theatres. But the part of it which brought on the Youngclaus suit provided for 10 days' protection for a radius of 15 miles for first-run houses in cities of certain population. The Publix-owned Granada at Norfolk, Neb., met these specifications.

William N. Youngclaus had purchased and had rejuvenated a small house at Madison, 13 miles away, in the early part of 1930. After apparently making fair profits that summer, he ran up against the protection plan that fall, when he was called before the zoning committee at Omaha on complaint of Publix that he was not submitting to the protection plan.

Mr. Youngclaus wrangled with branch managers most of the winter, and was intent on going to court immediately. Mr. Good advised him to wait until he could see if he could get protection-free contracts for the next season. We have already noted how important that proved to be. The suit was late in the summer of 1931.

Mr. Youngclaus, a member of Allied, secured the support of that organization, and about $12,000 was pledged by its members to back the suit. Lester Martin, Allied secretary, assisted Mr. Good in preparing the case. It is understood that, if the case goes to the Supreme Court, the national Allied will conduct that part of the fight.

A complete history of the Youngclaus case appeared in the Motion Picture Herald on May 7.

Kansas City Curious

Exhibitors and distributors in Kansas City are wondering what effect, if any, the decision declaring protection illegal in Nebraska will have on current negotiations in Kansas City pointing toward re-establishing zoning and protection to govern the sale of 1932-33 product.

While uniform zoning based on divisions of the territory and admission prices has been in effect in Kansas City for two years, exhibitors seek a renewal of zoning each year. To this end, participation by distributors in zoning negotiations has been invited.

FAILURE OF CIRCUITS TO AGREE ON TERMS HALTS MOST OF POOLINGS

Few Houses in Three Cities Comprise Total of Major Circuit Poolings, Although Deals Discussed for Sixty

Discussions and widespread reports of theatre poolings, which in recent months have reached a nationwide proportion, have gone little further than the round tables of executive offices. Hardly more than one dozen circuit houses are currently involved in pooling arrangements which are actually in operation across the country.

This information, ascertained by a national check-up involving 33 major theatre situations and verified by circuit executives in New York, would seem to imply that the obstacles to be encountered in attempts to effect theatre poolings are of such nature as to virtually eliminate the pooling idea as an important, or even significant solution for existing problems of theatre operation.

This conclusion is borne out by the fact that whereas a mere 13 circuit theatres in three cities comprise the sum total of major circuit poolings actually completed, negotiations for the pooling of more than 60 theatres in 17 cities have been discussed and abandoned, due to the numerous obstacles confronted by the negotiators. All of the pooling proposals which were abandoned have been given consideration within the past two months, closely following upon the consummation of the five-theatre pool inaugurated at Memphis, late in April. Since that time only eight additional theatres have actually been pooled.

The Memphis pool remains the largest, in point of theatres involved, and the most significant of the three thus far attempted. That first circuit pooling involved the closing of Loew's Palace and Strand theatres, and the operation of the RKO Orpheum, Warner's Warner Theatre, and Loew's State by Loew's through a firm known as the Memphis Operating Co., organized for the purpose.

Four Pooled Each in New York, Denver

The only other circuit theatre pools known to be actually in operation are at New York and Denver, where four theatres are involved in each pool. The New York pool involves sharing of product and splitting of profit in the operation of the RKO theatres, Jefferson and Coliseum, and the Skouras theatres, Audubon and Academy. Each circuit, in this case, continues operation of its own houses.

At Denver, the RKO Orpheum has been included in a pool with the Aladdin, Tabor and Rialto theatres, owned by Harry Huffman, who assumed operation of all four under the terms of the pool.

These three pools represent the actual results of all the proposals, counter-proposals, discussions and rumors involving the pooling of circuit theatres which have been advanced almost without interruption since the inauguration of the Memphis pool on April 21. During that time, actual negotiations are known to have been introduced for the pooling of approximately 60 other theatres in 15 situations. Most of all this number were definitely discarded as pooling possibilities at one stage or another of the negotiations, and the possibilities of any which have not been finally abandoned, materializing in actual poolings are slight.

RESULT OF STAR VOTE AUGUST 6

In the August 6 issue of Motion Picture Herald will be published the final status of the leading stars in the Herald's current poll of exhibitors, taken to determine the "Ten Biggest Money Making Stars of 1931-32."

Mentioned at one time or another as having been proposed for pooling were major circuit theatres at New Haven, Conn.; Columbus, Ohio; Rochester, N. Y.; Tacoma and Spokane, Wash.; Pittsburgh; Syracuse, N. Y.; Yonkers, N. Y.; Rockford, Ill.; New York City (in addition to the RKO-Skouras pool completed there); Lowell, Mass.; Kansas City, Des Moines and Sioux City, ia., and Oakland, Calif.

The New York offices of Warner's, Publix and Loew's Theatres reported that no poolings of their theatres had been effected since the initial pool at Memphis, although it was admitted that several had been considered and subsequently abandoned, and others are still being given consideration. Charles Skouras could not be reached for a statement on the pooling activities of the Skouras circuit. Harold B. Franklin, RKO theatre director, verified the information that only four RKO theatres were actually involved in completed pooling arrangements and that most of the negotiations involving the pooling of other RKO houses have been abandoned. However, he added that several pooling proposals remain under consideration.

Product An Important Factor

Although most of the pooling deals have been advanced in an effort to effect operating economies where reduced theatre attendance has resulted in a serious problem of overseating, Mr. Franklin cited the increase of available product attendant upon pooling as one of the most important advantages the plan has to offer.

"The greatest benefits of a pooling arrangement," he said, "are most likely to be found in the larger selection of product it affords the theatres involved. Any theatre having a choice of the industry's best product will obviously have the best chance for profitable operation. Important economies result in certain situations, especially where there is overseating. Pools may be arranged by which one or more theatres will be closed, and the profits from the increased patronage at the theatres continuing in operation may be split among the pooling organizations."

One of the immediate results of the pooling arrangements between RKO and

Checkup in Key Cities, Verified by Executives, Seems to Imply That Obstacles Eliminate the Idea as Important

Skouras theatres in New York City was to vest RKO with picture buying for both circuits in the territory affected. Contrary to reports, Mr. Franklin said that no reciprocal agreement which would permit Skouras to handle RKO film buying on the West Coast had been made. He said that among the obstacles which were encountered in effecting pooling arrangements, and which were sufficient to cause them to be abandoned, were disagreements on rents, profit-sharings, closings and operation.

Mr. Franklin said that theatre closings, independently of a pool, will frequently solve local problems when engaged in by either the dominating circuit, or by agreement among local theatres. RKO has followed this policy to advantage in several situations, he said.

Circuits which hold advantage in any situation in which a pool is contemplated, he pointed out, are reluctant to make the concessions felt to be necessary by the other parties to the proposed pool. The other viewpoint, naturally enough, is that circuits without a local advantage are considered to ask too much in order to effect the pool. The result is that while many poolings have been and will be discussed, a comparatively small number of them are regarded as being likely to materialize due to the uncertainty of the advantages accruing from terms offered by either party to the pools.

No question of the legality of pooling activities enters into the abandonment of large numbers of pooling proposals, Mr. Franklin said. Legal departments of the circuits have been consulted and have offered the opinion that, from a legal viewpoint, theatre pooling is unassailable.

Following are reports from major cities on the local status of pooling in situations which have been linked by actual proposals or report with pooling activities:

No Pooling in Prospect in Louisville

Rival circuits, that is producer circuits, have not been a problem in Louisville, in that Loew has one house here and all others are owned by independent operators, and have been for two years or more, since Fourth Avenue Amusement Co. took over the Rialto, former R.K.O. house. Therefore there has been no programs for getting together, darkening houses, etc., here.

At Lexington and Ashland, Ky., the Publix has houses, but the only competition is from independents.

In western Kentucky in such towns as Henderson, Owensboro, Mayfield, Fulton, etc., Warner Brothers have virtually all the houses, and what competition there is, is from independents.

Across the border in Tennessee the only town reported as affected is Memphis, where Loew, Publix, R.K.O. and Warner were all entered.

It is reported that in Memphis the managements pooled their interests, and that the management of the Loew house there has been dictating the policy of all of the Memphis houses, and closed some of those, in an effort to give the remainder more profitable business.

In Nashville, Tenn., there are the Loew and Publix circuits, but they are operated separate and distinct in that city it is reported.

Pooling Unknown in Canada

Theatre Holding Corporation is headed by Jule and J. J. Allen who operate 30 theatres in Ontario, and there have been evidences of cooperation between the Allens and Famous Players for many months.

Famous Players has a half interest in Radio-Keith-Orpheum of Canada, the latter having 14 theatres across Canada, and there has always been a working agreement between these two.

Practically the only "pooling" is found in Associated Theatres Limited, Toronto, a co-operative organization for bookings and purchases among 70 independent theatres of Ontario, including the Moorehead & Filman and the M. J. O'Brien circuits.

There is no pooling of rival chain interests in Canadian localities for the purpose of eliminating competition and effecting economies, seasonal or otherwise.

Independents Form Two Circuits

Nearly 100 theatres of the second-run neighborhood class, all operating from central offices located in San Francisco, have been merged into two chains within the past two months.

The first merger was that effected by the bringing of three chains under one general head. The chains were those of the Golden State Theatres, the T. & D. Jr. Circuit, and the San Francisco Theatres, Inc. The Golden State group was the largest, having some 40 theatres. The T. & D. Jr. circuit claimed 23 theatres, and the San Francisco Theatres, Inc., which is operated by the brothers, Sam and Al E. Levin, have seven houses, making a grand total of some 70 houses.

The second merger was on a much smaller scale and was also a merger of three chains, those of the National Theatre Syndicate with eight houses, the Blumenfeld circuit with eight houses and the Petersen circuit with six houses, all totaling some 22 theatres.

No Pooling at Kansas City

There is no pooling in the Kansas City territory. Recently there were reports Fox and Publix might pool in Joplin and Springfield, Mo., and possibly other competitive situations. If negotiations to this end were conducted, executives of the circuits at Kansas City know nothing about them, they say.

Last fall there was a pooling arrangement in Springfield because of a dispute with the projectionists' union over two-men-in-a-booth. Publix-Dubinsky kept the Paramount, Class A house, and the Landers, Class B house, dark, and Fox closed the Plaza, a B house. The Gillioz, an A house, was operated by Fox under a pooling arrangement with Publix-Dubinsky.

Philadelphia Tied Up

Being almost completely a Stanley-Warner city insofar as first runs are concerned, there is very little talk or very little reason for any pooling in Philadelphia. The outstanding competitor is the Fox Theatre, which hardly has enough of its own product to run through its season. Second-run Fox are bought by both Stanley Warner and independent neighborhood theatres.

There has been a rumor from time to time that S-W and the Skouras interests would make a deal whereby Stanley would get Fox in this city in a trade with a theatre in another city, but the talk has simmered down to a mere whisper now.

STUART ERWIN MAKES HISTORY

It has finally come to pass! Stuart Erwin, Paramount featured player, has refused the offer of the company to star him in his next picture. The decision to lift Erwin from the ranks followed his performance in "Make Me A Star." Explaining his refusal to step into the position most desired by all film performers, Erwin said: "There is a wide gap between the work of a featured player and a star. . . . I would prefer to achieve stardom, if that is my destiny, through a series of progressive steps. It's a lot safer and surer that way."

New Orleans Denies Pooling

When division director William Koerner of RKO recently announced the Orpheum here would not drop vaudeville nor would it pool interests with any other houses, he definitely put to rest two year rumors that the RKO vaudeville would go into the Publix Saenger while the Orpheum would play straight pictures.

Loew and Publix here have several working agreements which might come under head of pooling, but which have nothing to do with operations. Loew's State, opposite the Publix Saenger, is owned by a corporation consisting of A. L. Erlanger, Saenger Theatres, now operated by Publix, and Loew's Inc. The three interests are understood to share in profits, but Loew has the management of the house under its control. The Loew house plays Fanchon and Marco units, sharing pictures under agreement with Publix. This agreement gives Publix a call on fifty percent of MGM's product, while Loew gets fifty per cent. of Paramount. Both houses work together in booking Warner Brothers First National sharing about equally.

Publix-RKO Pool at Houston Denied

No pooling of interests by circuit theatre operators has been effected in the South Texas territory, including Houston, to date. For a time it was rumored that Publix would attempt to effect a deal with RKO whereby the former chain would close its class C and class B theatres in Houston, and concentrate on the operation of the Publix deluxe and the RKO Majestic. But negotiations apparently got no further than rumors. Circuit managers declare no such plan is considered now.

Cleveland Pooling Reports Denied

There is no pooling of rival chains in order to concentrate business in definite locations in the Cleveland territory. There has been talk for the past month about RKO and Warner getting together in Cleveland. Everyone connected with both organizations denies that any negotiations are on foot, but everyone not connected with them continues to believe something is doing along that line.

In East Liverpool, an arrangement has been made between William Tallman of the Ceramic Theatre and A. G. Constant, who owns the American and State Theatres, whereby the Ceramic will operate two weeks each month, and each of the Constant houses will operate one week each month. All three are first-run houses.

No New Pooling in Iowa

There is no recognized scheme of consolidation of Iowa theatres on a general scale in Iowa but the darkening of the Orpheum, RKO house at Davenport, and of the Publix house, the Iowa, at Cedar Rapids, was made by agreement and to mutual benefit—still an experiment, however.

None at St. Louis

As far as can be ascertained there has been no pooling of theatres in this section.

Paramount-Publix and Warner Brothers are jointly interested in the Ambassador and Missouri theatres here but that is an arrangement dating back several years and was not brought about by present economic conditions. Those houses are under the Paramount-Publix management although Warner Brothers through Skouras Brothers Enterprises has a half interest.

The St. Louis Theatre at Grand and Delmar boulevards, a RKO house, closed several weeks ago because of a shortage of first run pictures. This closing has helped other first run houses slightly.

Four Pooled at Denver

Pooling activities in the Denver territory have been confined to a deal made between Harry Huffman, owner of five theatres, and RKO, with one house, the Orpheum, built this last year. It is an operating agreement whereby Huffman will operate the pool of the Orpheum, 2,600 seats; the Aladdin, with 1,500 seats; the Tabor, 2,000, and the Rialto, 900. All are downtown houses with the exception of the Aladdin, which is located two miles out in one of the principal shopping centers. The pool is now effective.

There have been rumors that Publix and Skouras might pool interests in this section. Fox West Coast has 32 theatres operating in the Denver district, with thirteen more dark. Most of these have been dark for some time, some of them ever since Fox entered the town and built a new house. Only one has been closed this spring by Fox. Publix owns ten theatres in Colorado, with one of them dark. There is nothing definite about the Skouras-Publix pool but reports insist it will take place, with Skouras installed as the operator.

Economy in operation has been the cause of the Huffman-RKO pool and would be the principal reason for the Skouras-Publix tieup.

None Pooled at Salt Lake City

No pooling arrangements have been broached between circuits in the Salt Lake City territory to date.

Indianapolis May Close by Agreement

There have been no pooling of interests in Indianapolis among the circuits. Two circuits control two theatres each and rumors are that they will close one each and concentrate on the remaining theatre but officials refuse to confirm or deny the rumor.

No Pooling at Baltimore

No plans are under way, so far as can be learned, for any pooling of circuit theatre interests in or about Baltimore.

CANADIAN QUOTA MOVE IS HINTED AT OTTAWA CONFERENCE JULY 21

British Producers Invited to Empire Economic Gathering; Nathanson and Arthur Lee Go to England for Survey

By W. M. GLADISH, Toronto

Preparations are being made in many capitals of the British Commonwealth of Nations for the Empire Economic Conference, scheduled to be held in Ottawa, Ontario, for some weeks following the ceremonial opening on July 21. The Canadian capital will be the mecca of statesmen and industrialists from many parts of the Empire, as well as trade officials and observers from other countries, particularly the United States.

There are definite indications that one of the important subjects will be that of British films. Considerable data on motion pictures already have been collected from various sources and leaders of the British film industry have buckled on the proverbial armor in a move to obtain further privileges and encouragement within the Empire.

Important Producers Invited

The following developments already have taken place:

The Film Group of the Federation of British Industries had invited three representative members, John Maxwell, C. M. Woolf and Isidore Ostrer, to attend the Ottawa Conference to represent the interests of English producers. Neville Kearney of London will accompany the film delegation representing the Federation as a whole.

A preliminary conference had been held at Toronto to discuss the Empire meeting, those taking part in the discussion being Col. John A. Cooper, president of the Motion Picture Distributors' Association of Canada, representing the 10 chief distributors of pictures from all countries; Arthur Cohen, managing director of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, the largest theatre circuit, and Frank C. Badgley, director of the Canadian Government Motion Picture Bureau at Ottawa.

Two prominent film men of Canada had departed for England for a survey of conditions in the homeland's industry. These were: N. L. Nathanson, managing director of Regal Films, Ltd., Toronto, who has brought more British pictures to Canada than any other man, and Arthur A. Lee, Canadian and United States representative of Gaumont-British Corporation. Incidentally, Nathanson was the founder of the Famous Players' circuit in Canada and has negotiated for his return to that company.

F. W. Field of Montreal, His Majesty's senior trade commissioner in Canada, and the Toronto office of the British trade commissioner, had asked the film exchanges in Canada to supply facts regarding the film business in Canada for use at the Ottawa conference.

Further, A. M. Wiseman, His Majesty's trade commissioner at Toronto, recently made a trip to England to gather information for the conference.

At the same time, the recent success of certain British pictures in Canadian theatres has been most appropriate to the cause of British films. "Sunshine Susie" played five weeks at the Uptown theatre, Toronto, and two weeks at the Palace, Montreal. "Michael and Mary" had two weeks at the Tivoli, Toronto, and had four "runs" at the Regent, Ottawa, almost within a month. Going back to last fall, "Tell England" had simultaneous engagements during Armistice Week in six different Canadian cities. All of which is fuel for the conference fire.

The Old Country view of the situation is indicated in the recent comment of a London newspaper, as follows: "The coming conference will offer a remarkable opportunity for urging the claims of British pictures and the event is regarded as of the utmost importance to our home production."

A leader in the motion picture business in Canada offered this comment: "The United States producers are in for a terrific wallop at the Imperial Conference." Every effort will be made, it is known, to facilitate the American marketing of British product.

British Producers Blamed

It has been said that the British producers have been to blame, in more ways than one, for Canada having "gone Hollywood." It was not until 1929, one year before the last Imperial conference, that any representative of a British film company had visited Canada to sell British pictures. This has been stated by Colonel Cooper. The British producer has been inclined to let the buyer come to him.

Credits Quota Act

F. S. Revell of Toronto, Canadian representative of British International Pictures, has declared: "The working of the Quota Act, introduced by the Imperial Parliament in September, 1927, is largely responsible for the present excellent position of the British film industry and the splendid results achieved." He felt that the British producers should be entering upon the most successful period they have ever known.

The situation affords considerable scope to the politician to wave the flag and to offer the somewhat hackneyed expression that "trade follows the film." Women's organizations in Canada may pass further resolutions calling upon their members to support British films by voice and patronage. But there is undoubtedly need for more aggressive merchandising on the part of British film producers and need for a more Canadian flavor in the publicity and exploitation of British pictures. This suggestion is made in the face of some progress indicated by government statistics which show that Canadian distributors imported 1,068,543 linear feet of British films during the fiscal year ending in 1931 as compared with only 553,084 feet during the previous year.

In any case, the film industry has its eyes on Ottawa.

"Indecent" Now "Unholy Love"

¶ The animated series of exchanges of opinion and comment on the proposal of Mr. M. H. Hoffman of Allied Productions, Inc., to issue his forthcoming screen version of "Madame Bovary" under the title of "Indecent," which became a subject of interest among many exhibitor readers of Motion Picture Herald, now comes to a close with the receipt of the following telegram to Mr. Martin Quigley, publisher and editor in chief:

THE VOTE ON "INDECENT" AS THE TITLE FOR THE "MADAME BOVARY" PRODUCTION THROUGH MOTION PICTURE HERALD HAS SATISFIED US BEYOND DOUBT THAT MARTIN QUIGLEY, JAMES R. QUIRK, LOUELLA PARSONS, AND OTHER PROMINENT PERSONS INTERESTED IN OUR INDUSTRY ARE RIGHT, AND WE ARE PLEASED WITH THE OPPORTUNITY YOU GAVE US TO CHANGE THIS TITLE.
THE PICTURE WILL BE RELEASED UNDER THE TITLE OF "UNHOLY LOVE," CARRYING THE LINE, "SUGGESTED BY GUSTAVE FLAUBERT'S FAMOUS NOVEL, 'MADAME BOVARY'." MANY THANKS FOR YOUR COOPERATION AND ASSISTANCE.
M. H. HOFFMAN.

Selling The Motion Picture Short

DOUBLE-FEATURING has long been an indefensible evil of the business.

Now comes triple-featuring, with an occasional instance of a stage show being tossed into the bargain.

This situation reflects a state of desperation on the part of timid and small-minded individuals which poorly becomes an industry which asks the support and confidence of the public.

This practice of selling motion pictures short of a decent price is economically vicious. In an entertainment sense it is the height of folly. A good picture run before or after a poor picture is not made better, but worse. Two poor pictures cannot make a good show but they are enough to cause many persons—and they actually do cause many persons—to look up some other form of entertainment; something less tiresome, less monotonous.

Any person with a trace of showmanship in his make-up should know that the more poor pictures he runs the greater the damage he is doing to his theatre and the greater, also, is the discouragement which he is giving to the public in its theatre-going habit.

A weak picture is not a proper substitute for a strong picture; neither are two or three weak pictures a proper substitute for a strong picture. No one denies this. But where the great error is committed is in the case where someone with sloppy reasoning decides that because a strong picture is not available he will gloss over the difficulty by offering two—or possibly three—weak features. Instead, however, of improving his show he only makes it substantially weaker by failure to follow the showmanly course of putting on the best that happens to be available in the way of a feature and then building, intelligently and shrewdly, a selected program of shorts around the feature so that his show as a whole will have variety, crispness and a broad level of interest.

A few years ago we heard much as to what the great circuits were to accomplish in putting better showmanship into the theatre and in eliminating evils that are characteristic of the theatre branch of the business. Some large portion of the failures that have come about in circuit operation doubtlessly have been due to causes beyond executive control.

But in such a matter as double-featuring it would seem that if centralized operation of theatres can in any way be effective it should be effective in dealing with such an indefensible practice as this business of selling motion pictures short and at the same time cheapening the theatre and discouraging attendance.

Here, then, lies a job which cries insistently for the attention of circuit operators who are or should be in a position immediately to assume a united defensive against this wholly unnecessary, inexcusable and indefensible practice.

Double or triple featuring is not a good solution of any exhibition problem. The practice represents more in the way of a punishment than a bargain for the public. It cheapens motion pictures and it cheapens the theatres. There is no profit in it for anyone, including the public. While disclosing a lamentable lack of showmanship it also betrays a lack of confidence in one's business which is frequently a herald of failure.—MARTIN QUIGLEY.

A. C. Blumenthal Sues Paramount

Paramount Publix Corporation served its answer late last week in a suit which had been started against it only two days before by A. C. Blumenthal, real estate broker. The suit brought by Blumenthal as a holder of 25 of the debentures of the company, attempts to set aside an agreement recently made between Paramount and a group of banks under which the banks opened a large credit to the corporation last March. The theory of the complaint is that the agreement with the banks violated a provision of the indenture under which these bonds were issued.

Mr. Blumenthal's complaint charges that the $13,000,000 bank loan negotiated by Paramount last April was "a bookkeeping transaction which provided the banks with collateral on loans which were already in existence and which were unsecured up to the time Paramount organized the Film Company.

The petition, in addition, asks that the defendant banks, also named in the complaint, be required to return to Paramount the Film Company notes, free of lien and claim; that Paramount be directed to dissolve the Film Company, and that title to the negatives involved be transferred back to Paramount.

Paramount's answer makes a denial of all the major allegations and asks that the suit be dismissed. A hearing will be set for an early date, according to Nathan Burkan, counsel for Mr. Blumenthal.

Ralph A. Kohn, treasurer of Paramount, in commenting on the action, stated:

"Paramount Publix Corporation in March of this year was indebted to certain banks to the extent of approximately $10,000,000. The directors of the company were able to arrange for short term financing with a group of 13 different banking institutions to the extent of $15,875,000."

Two Hundred Free Bookings To Be Made to Exhibitors

A gift of $3,000 in the form of 200 gratis bookings will be given to exhibitors in the next two months by Midwest Film Distributors, leading independent exchange in Kansas City.

The firm takes this step to help exhibitors in straightened circumstances. Numerous theatres in the small Kansas-Missouri towns are reported on the verge of closing because of economic conditions.

Frank Walker Named to Post On Democratic Committee

THE CAMERA REPORTS

THREE MUSKETEERS. (Above) A caption is, of course, unnecessary, but in the interests of accuracy—and space—we give you Harold Lloyd, Charlie Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks, caught in a congenial moment in Hollywood. [International]

EXOTIC BEAUTY. (Below) Gwili Andre, newly come to RKO Radio, appears charmingly as the incense girl in a pose from her current screen debut, in RKO Radio's "Roar of the Dragon," wherein she assumes the major feminine role opposite Richard Dix.

PRODUCER—FLIER. Howard Hughes, producer of note, before his new and, in part, personally designed plane. Hollywood press advices indicate Mr. Hughes as a possible MGM director.

CLOSING A DEAL. Whereby Monte Blue, noted in silent days, will star in four films for Allied Pictures, of which independent concern M. H. Hoffman, in center, is president. Chester M. Franklin, at the left, will direct the pictures.

TO COLDER CLIMES. Colonel W. S. Van Dyke in a brief farewell with Yamma, player in MGM's "Tarzan," before the director and his party take leave of Hollywood for the chill Arctic, where they will film "Eskimo," MGM production, to be released next season.

CHARMING! (Above) Myrna Loy, MGM featured player, indicates undoubtedly the latest thing in feminine headgear. Recently in "New Morals for Old."

FAN-WISE. And well may the fans take an interest, as Gloria Shea gives the "still" cameraman an excellent opportunity on the set at the First National Coast studio. Miss Shea is currently working in "You Said a Mouthful," but at the moment she is considerably "an eyeful."

GUESS WHO? Whether you can or not, it is Buster Keaton, on the set at the MGM studio, where the comedian is busily engaged in "Speak Easily," which Edward Sedgwick is directing. As Professor Timoleon Zanders Post, Keaton chooses a peculiar spot to study the script.

WEDDING BELLS. They will ring in the near future for Jean Harlow, MGM featured player, currently appearing on the screen in "Red Headed Woman," and Paul Bern, an MGM executive. Miss Harlow gave the screen the platinum blonde, and made feminine fans hair-conscious.

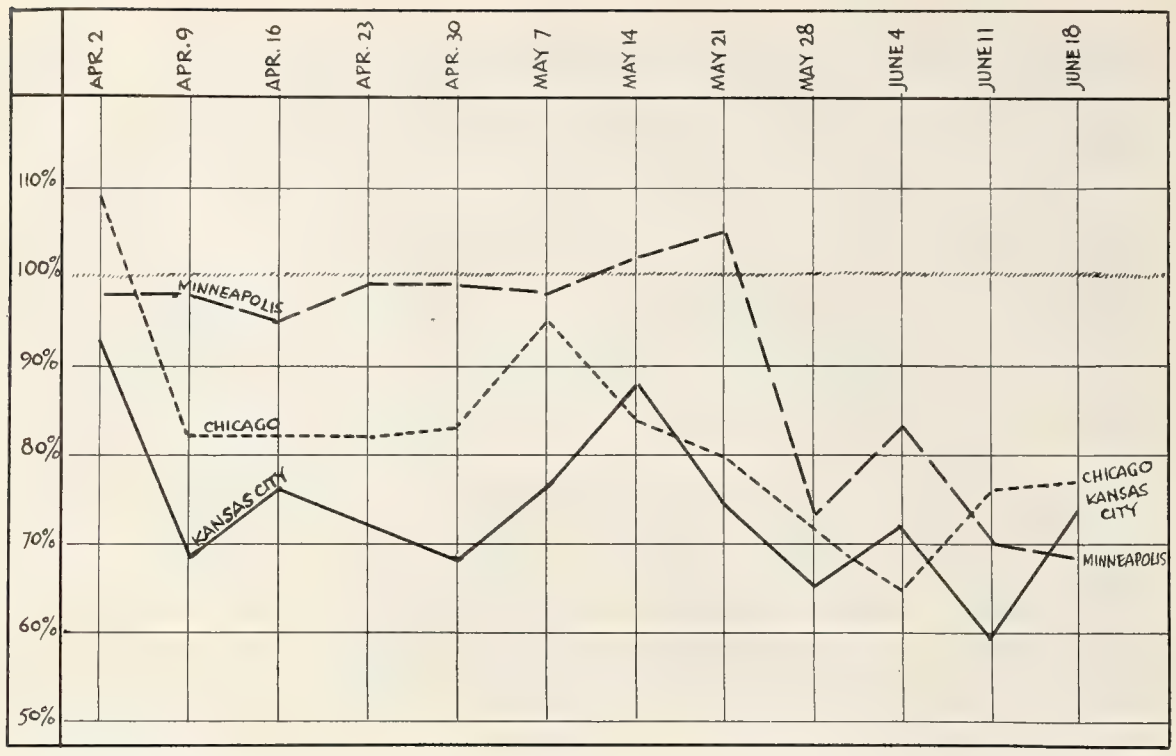
RESTING. Mr. and Mrs. Richard Barthelmess sun themselves on the shore of the Pacific, between working moments, by Mr. Barthelmess, at the First National studio, where he is heading the cast in "The Cabin in the Cotton." They take a mild interest in the camera and its operator.



FROM THE STAGE. Paulette Goddard, coiffured a la platinum blonde, and described as one of the season's socially prominent debutantes, at least temporarily leaves the stage to join the forces of Hal Roach, shorts producer at the MGM studios.

TO SEE ONESELF——. William Powell takes a good look at William Powell before the original starts the day's work in "One Way Passage," in which the Warner player is currently engaged, and starred, at the Coast studio, with Kay Francis in the leading feminine role opposite.

A MOMENT'S CHAT. Stepping out of character, and off the set, Zasu Pitts, comedienne, Thelma Todd, in the center, and Ruth Selwyn converse between scenes of the MGM comedy vehicle for Buster Keaton, "Speak Easily." A glimpse of the darkly active set may be caught.

This chart, based upon the weekly compilation of theatre receipts in key cities appearing in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, represents box office receipts in Chicago, Kansas City and Minneapolis for 12 weeks to June 18, 1932. The 100 per cent dotted line denotes the average weekly receipts in the three cities for the entire year 1931.

KATZ SAYS INDUSTRY MEETING ITS PROBLEMS

Holds Out Hope for an Early Clearing of Industrial Skies, Basing This Hope on Confidential Reports from Theatres

Agreeing that the motion picture business has its full share of trouble, Sam Katz, vice-president of Paramount Publix Corporation, insists that the industry's problems are being grappled with just as vigorously and successfully as are those of other major industries. He holds out hope of an early clearing of the industrial skies—hope based upon confidential reports of Paramount house managers at home and abroad.

Every Paramount Publix theatre manager makes weekly reports upon general conditions in his district. In these reports, of late, Mr. Katz says he is able to detect a growing spirit of cheerfulness. Practically every important city in Europe is covered, as well as 500 American cities with populations in excess of 20,000. Paramount's European business generally is showing operating profits about equal to last year, though there has been some loss due to adverse monetary exchange in countries that fled the gold standard. American business thus far in 1932 approximates the levels of 1926-27, without, however, allowing for the greater number of theatres now in operation, it is said.

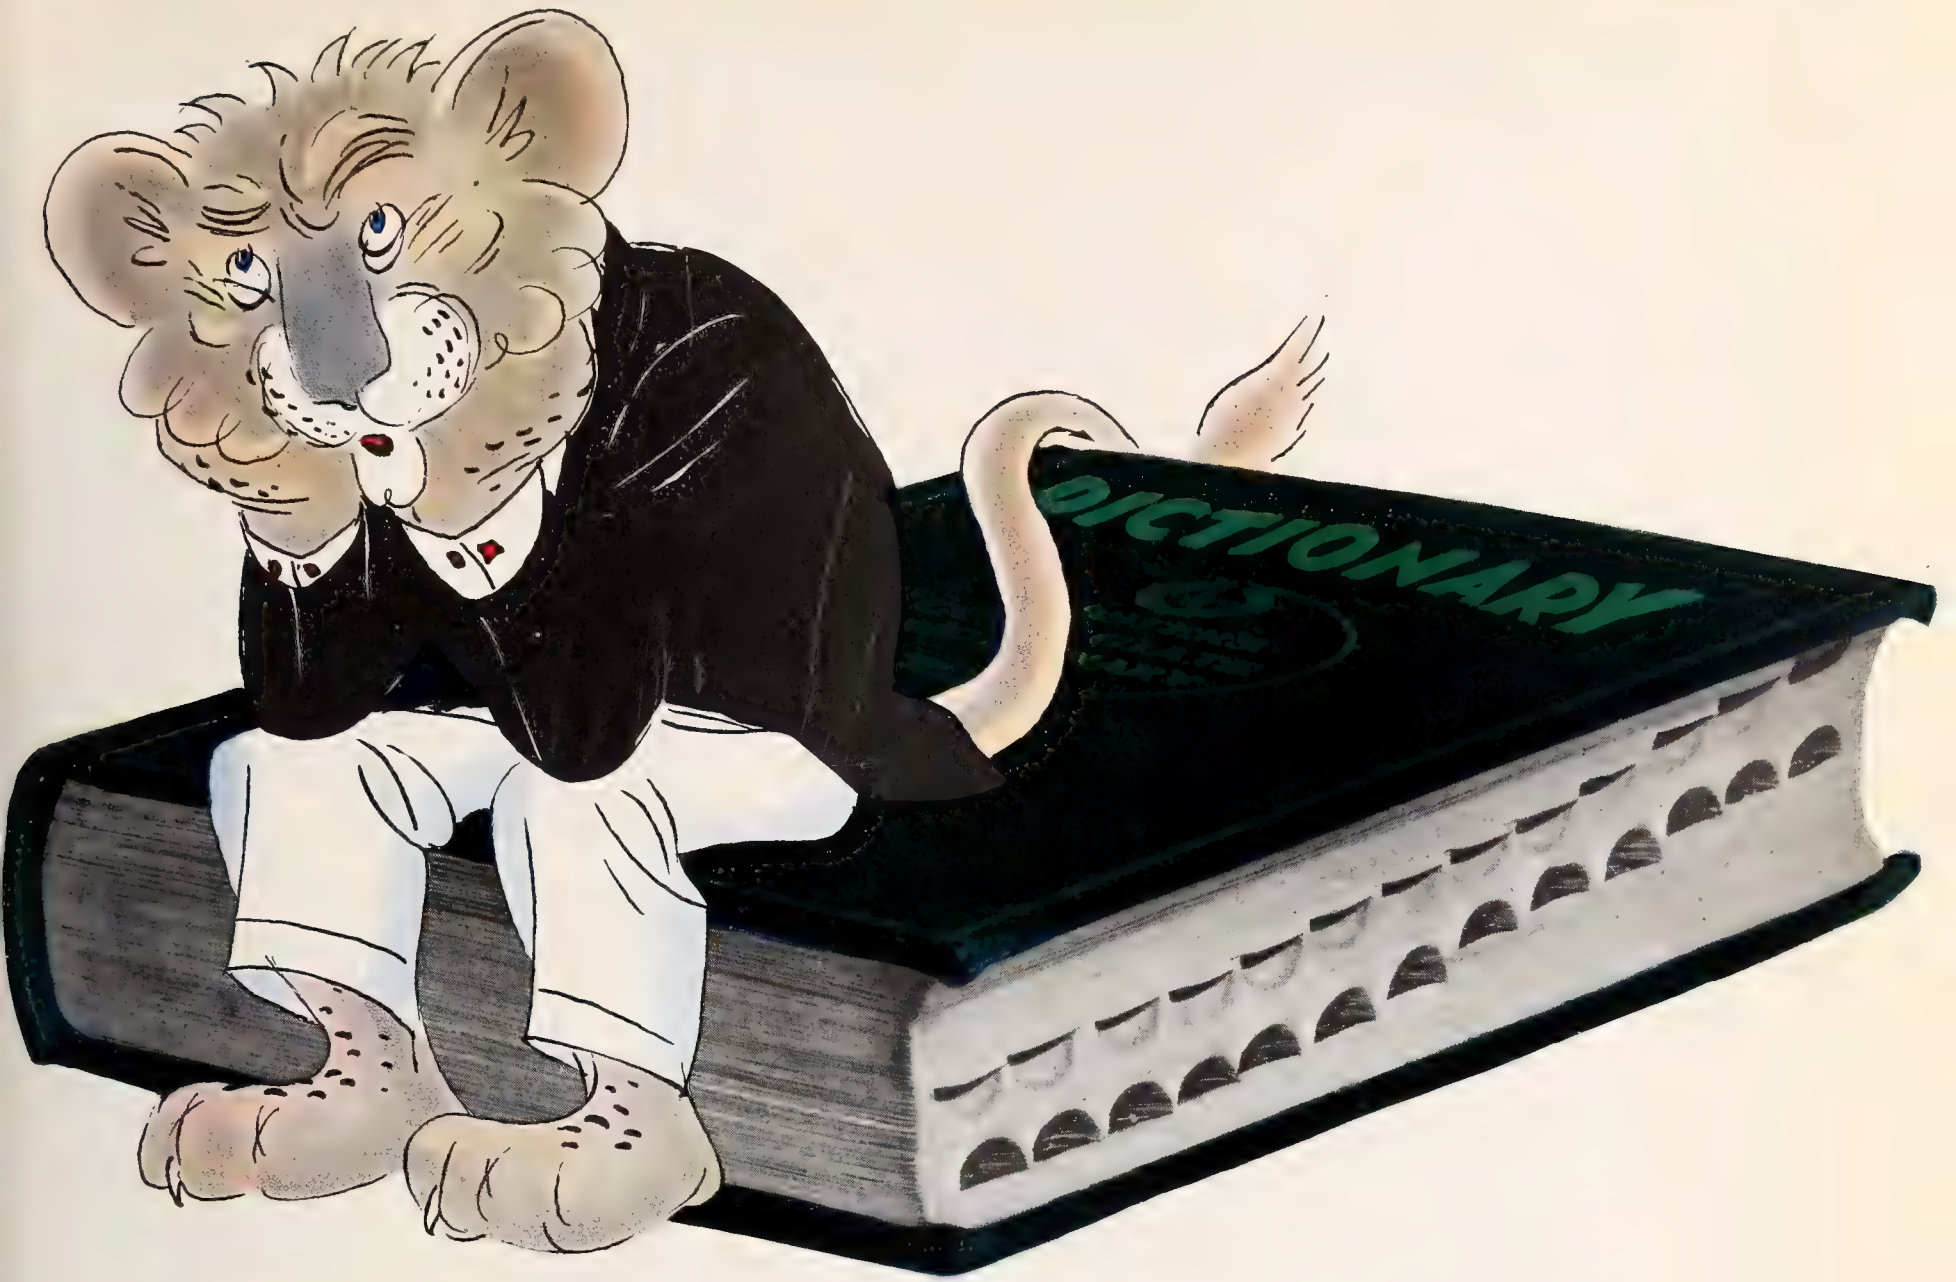
Currently Paramount has cash on hand totaling $6,000,000 and also a $5,000,000 line of credit, the latter four-fifths unused. Assets include a group of completed feature pictures, to be released beginning in August, revenues from which should be reflected in substantially increased earnings, it is said. The corporation and its subsidiaries own some 1,700 pieces of real estate having a value upward of $260,000,000, as shown by independent appraisal last year. Against the properties are outstanding obligations aggregating some $70,000,000. Two issues of debentures total $25,000,000; the first, bearing 6 per cent, matures in 1947; the second, 5½ per cent, falls due in 1950.

Load Has Been Lightened

Bank loans add another $10,000,000 to the indebtedness. The latter amount approximates the stock repurchase liability incurred by the corporation in the acquisition of theatre properties a few years since—Paramount stock being accepted by vendors on the corporation's guarantee to repurchase at a fixed price. Paramount Publix common, listed on the New York Stock Exchange, consists of 3,379,363 $10 par shares. There is no preferred. "There is reason to believe the corporation's statement of results of operations reflects conditions somewhat worse than actual, since heavy charge-offs to depreciation, while actually showing against the record, do not represent cash out of pocket," according to a statement from the office of Mr. Katz, which also said that "Since last February much has been done toward putting Paramount's house in order, effecting economies and increasing efficiency in all departments. Dead timber among the personnel has been discarded and there has been a general lightening of the load to conform with present-day requirements that pictures be produced at the lowest cost compatible with highest standard of quality," it is said.

"Possibly the most radical departure from tradition is the new-born spirit of co-operation now in evidence among executives of the major companies," the statement continues. "Gone is the mad scramble to secure exclusive services of this or that star, director or famous writer—often to hold them in partial or complete idleness to prevent a rival making use of their talents. Since the new day dawned, stars, directors and writers are freely loaned from one picture lot to another. Former rival executives meet frequently to exchange information and ideas; patent processes and rights, owned exclusively by some of the companies, now frequently are made available to others, without charge.

Friendly Cooperation Succeeds Rivalry



The change from bitter rivalry to friendly co-operation Mr. Katz points out, is the result of a recognition, however belated, that mediocre pictures are costly, not only to their producers, but to the industry as a whole. The larger companies, being both producers and exhibitors, stand to lose both ways. Producing a bad picture, they lose as producers and exhibitors; when the other fellow produces a bad one they lose as exhibitors, for each of them exhibits the other's pictures somewhere along the circuit, it is said.

"The get-together policy, too, permits of a more careful planning of pictures and the selection of stars and directors best qualified for the particular work in hand," the company stated. "Since the resources, artistic and material, of all the studios practically are available to any of them, within reasonable limits, there no longer exists much reason for casting players in ill-fitting roles, or assigning directors to distasteful tasks. Since, as Mr. Katz points out, even the greatest among the stars, directors and writers are specialists, the new system of borrowing and lending is calculated to keep every one happy and busy.

Eliminates Costly Conflicts of Releases

"Other advantages of co-operation include the elimination of costly conflicting release dates. Nor will there be seen hereafter, if the new spirit persists, those terrible cycles of pictures—where, when one studio produced a gang picture all the others did one of the same until the public was fed up and groggy. Under modern methods writers will be expected to turn out something new instead of slavish imitations of the latest success scored by the studio across the way.

"An outspoken enemy of waste and inefficiency, the Paramount executive nevertheless believes producers should put into pictures everything that reasonably can be expected to be taken out at the box office," the company declared. "He is impressed with the success of the multiple-star picture—the 'circus of stars' as it is known on the lot, and is by no means opposed to high salaries for those who earn them. He would far rather spend $500,000 or more to produce a first-rate picture than a fraction of that amount to produce one of doubtful merit. With good pictures—and he says the public has demonstrated it will stand for no other kind—Mr. Katz is convinced American pictures, in general, and Paramount Publix in particular, are in position to weather anything short of complete collapse of industry," concludes the statement.

STUCK FOR THE RIGHT WORD!

Can you help him out?

"This is my SHORT SUBJECT announcement for 1932-33.

Frankly the word Short Subject does not do full justice in describing what Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has to offer. After you've read this line-up and noted its FEATURE strength, its STAR power and its DE LUXE production values you'll agree that M-G-M has introduced entertainments of a SUPER-SHORT-SUBJECT classification!"

ONE THING TO NOTICE PARTICULARLY!

M-G-M's experience in feature production has been that Star Names are a strong selling point to a public which more than ever is shopping for entertainment. Therefore we believe Star Names of the Screen in Shorts are equally important. You will notice that in M-G-M Shorts are Feature Players, Stars who are not confined to Shorts but who have won box-office fame in full-length pictures and are therefore doubly valuable in Shorts!

Have you heard the great news about Hal Roach's

LAUREL-HARDY!

TAKE A TIP FROM NAPOLEON!

He was the greatest short subject of all time. Many a kick in a pint bottle!

Last season their feature-length comedy "Pardon Us" was a terrific stimulant for their short comedy releases. In the coming year they're going to appear in two more feature-length attractions ("Pack Up Your Troubles" is the first!), which makes them FEATURE STARS OF THE FIRST MAGNITUDE! You can imagine what increased value they will be to you in their short comedies. And Hal Roach says he's got new story angles for them that you'll approve of with cheers! OKay Hal!

"WHAT WILL YOU HAVE FOR DESSERT?"

Don't ruin the main course with an inferior dessert! A poor short subject sends them away with a bad taste in their mouth! It pays to give thought to what tops off the entertainment menu! And here are Top Toppers!

"GIRLS! YOU MADE GOOD!"

HAL ROACH presents

8 COMEDIES starring ZASU PITTS THELMA TODD

We gave their first comedy of the new season a try-out before a typical audience. The picture is "SHOW BUSINESS." It's a panic. These girls are aptly named "The Dressler-Moran of Shorts." They appear regularly in feature length pictures, thereby increasing their name value in shorts. Here's a comedy series that has established itself by real merit!

The Secret of His Success!

Consistently good comedies! That's the answer. He never disappoints, so his name on your program helps sell the show!

8 CHARLIE CHASE COMEDIES

Comedies like "HASTY MARRIAGE", "NICKEL NURSER" and other good fun films of the current season make Charlie Chase a welcome addition to any program. His style of comedy lends itself to plot structure, which makes his offerings interesting as well as hilarious.

8 ALL STAR "OUR GANG" COMEDIES

Here's how Hal Roach celebrates the 10th Anniversary of "Our Gang"

When we say "All Star" we mean it! Every member of the new "Our Gang" is hand-picked for name value! Dickie Moore for example has appeared in eight feature pictures, and has an important part in Marlene Dietrich's next film. Exhibitors tell us that patrons watch for each appearance of "Spanky" the child wonder. "Our Gang" takes a new lease on life at their 10th Anniversary. You'll approve of Hal Roach's improvements!

"SPANKY" steals the show!

That's what the N. Y. American said! That's what critics and public everywhere say about "Spanky"!

BOUNCY

? What's Hal Roach got up his sleeve now! Listen, it's a swell idea!

JIMMY FINLAYSON

CLYDE COOK

BILLY BEVAN

Well known names only!

The good old days of slapstick are back again! Isn't it the truth that short-reel comedies owe their original development to good, hearty belly laughs, that rock an audience. No polite little laughs in this series. A sock a minute in Hal Roach's Taxi Boys Comedies. And the comedians are screen favorites, Clyde Cook, Jimmy Finlayson, Billy Bevan and more to be announced. Hal Roach estimates there will be 100,000 taxicabs ruined during the filming of this series. That gives you a general idea!

M-G-M MADE AN IMPORTANT THEATRE SURVEY DURING THE LAST YEAR!

—and we're passing on to you the results as we got them from thousands of exhibitors!

Here's how it came about. We browsed around and heard from observant exhibitors that their patrons seemed to single out for applause bits of the program that had a taste of musical revue about them. It seemed to be a welcome change during the course of a program. So we made a more detailed survey, asking the frank opinion of thousands of exhibitors. The result is this series of M-G-M Musical Revues. The public is just ripe for them. And we're giving them the best of this kind that money can buy! These Miniature Broadway Musical Revues are virtually $6.60 worth of Great White Way entertainment in tabloid form. Beautifully produced—four in Technicolor—with sets and trimmings de luxe. Take a look at the Stars of Stage and Screen who appear in them!

WHAT YOU CAN OFFER IN ONE-REEL!

The Importance of 10 Minutes on Your Screen!

How much thought and attention do you pay to that spot on your program that rounds out the show? The day of "fillers" is gone! These days you've got to make every minute of your show count in the total entertainment value, in the total drawing power of your program. M-G-M has given plenty of thought to the importance of those "Ten Minute" spots. We've simplified your problem by bringing you one-reel subjects of quality and variety!

6—M-G-M ODDITIES—By popular demand!

The public wants them. We know it because showmen have told us. For instance, one of a similar series we released called "Fight For Life" had to play repeat engagements all over the country. The material we have gathered for our new series is even more striking than the celebrated "Oddities" series of a previous year.

12—M-G-M SPORT CHAMPIONS—They Clicked!

The ad to the left is from Grauman's Chinese Theatre and shows how one of Pete Smith's Sport Champions is billed on a Road-Show program. We've clipped lots of ads. We have pictures of house-fronts from many cities, showing that the Sport Champions are recognized by showmen as business-builders and are given important advertising attention. Experience in production has enabled us to make even greater improvements in this entertaining series.

12—FLIP THE FROG CARTOONS—1933 style!

"Ub" Iwerks, originator of many leading cartoon series, has added new characters and new ideas to his talking, singing, fun films. You'll be pleased with the innovations!

13—FITZPATRICK TRAVELTALKS—De Luxe!

There's a quality about this travel series that sets them apart from all others. That quality is reflected in the fact that their vast theatre circulation extends to houses of every description from a $2 Broadway Road-Show program to small-town audiences.

104—HEARST METROTONE NEWS—The Leader!

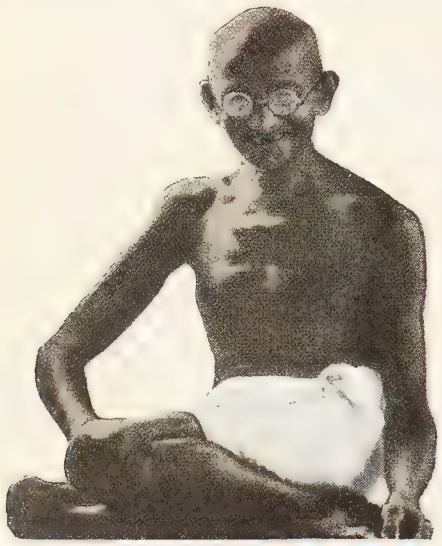
On the Air!

On the Screen!



In the Press!

A triple tie-up that no other newsreel enjoys! It has convinced thousands of exhibitors!

There's a reason why Hearst Metrotone News wins new accounts every week in the year, never remains stationary in its circulation, gets on to more new screens all the time. The reason is that it's a news-reel, and not a screen magazine. News is what they want and this gives it to them. Plus, of course, the promotional angles, the Globe Trotter on the radio, syndicated in many newspapers and in the film. A tie-up no other newsreel enjoys!

Talk about draws! See Next Page!

The STAR POWER in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Short Subjects would do justice to any FEATURE PICTURE LINE-UP of any motion picture company in this entire industry!

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

OCCASIONALLY there develops a bright spot in the lives of all exhibitors. Last week Columbia invited exhibitors to attend a preview of "American Madness" and to eat later as the guest of the company.

Usually a preview for exhibitors is an ordinary affair, but the invitation to eat free and freely proved much too enticing. And so at lunch time last Wednesday, Columbia was faced with the task of feeding a fair-sized army.

Nearly 1,000 filled the large grand ballroom of the new and spacious Waldorf-Astoria Hotel on Park Avenue to witness the screening. Theatre owners from everywhere in and about New York were on hand, many with their families, and when finis was read on the screen the run on and to the Hotel's largest dining room made the bank run in the picture appear so inconspicuous as to cause amazement even to Vice-President Jack Cohn.

All agreed that it was the "biggest" and "best" preview ever staged anywhere, any place, by any one.

Herschel Stuart, an executive of the theatre staff at RKO, recently wrote to managers to discourage the theft of theatre receipts.

"In my 20 years of experience," said Mr. Stuart, "I have only known of four robberies in connection with any theatres under my charge. There have been four more added to the list since my connection here, in a period of less than four months. Three of them can be traced directly to our own folly—the indiscretion of selecting the wrong people for important posts."

In this department, in the issue dated June 25, we wrote: "Leo Meehan sends along the line about Jimmy ('Schnozzle') Durante, who, when he bumps his nose, yells 'Gee, I'm hurt all over.'"

We should have known better in the first place to have accredited this gag to the conservative person of Mr. Meehan, editor of "Hollywood Herald." But having seen it in his Coast publication, we believed that for once the editor had loosened up a bit to engage in some of that humor for which only Hollywood is famous. However, we were mistaken, as proven by this little note received during the week from the Coast:

> "It came as an overwhelming shock when I found I had been credited in your lively department, 'Asides and Interludes,' with having passed on one of those bum Hollywood jokes, particularly about Durante's proboscis!
> "For your information, the lower case 'meehan' you see on those 'Personalities' items in Hollywood Herald is my daughter, Jeannette Meehan, our elegant cub reporter. Papa signs his copy 'LM,' as you will note.

Alright, Mr. Meehan. And it serves you right!

OUR Coast office was checking up the other day on one of those wild reports which tied in Sam Goldwyn's name with a post at Paramount. Nothing to it, of course, but working on the theory that everything must be traced to its source, our reporter asked Mr. Goldwyn about it. "And what could they offer me?" he replied.

"So am I," piped up Jerry Keyser, in charge of foreign publicity.

"Ditto me," sang Ed Selzer, who merchandises Warners merchandising plan.

The trade paper branch of the motion picture industry has succumbed at last to the evergrowing movement to go hatless, thereby weakening, at least slightly, its staid old reputation of conservatism to the nth degree in attire, which always included full regimentals outdoors.

The trend reached the picture business some two years ago when Hal Hode, of Columbia Pictures, braved the film row along Seventh Avenue without headgear. He was immediately followed in this step by others at "729" and elsewhere, and now the movement lists several recruited from the profession of motion picture trade publishing, including our publisher, Mr. Martin Quigley; Editor Terry Ramsaye of MOTION PICTURE HERALD; Mr. Jack Alicoate, who publishes Film Daily; Marvin Kirsch, one of his lieutenants; Mr. Donald Mersereau, Film Daily's business manager; the author of "Asides and Interludes"; Tom Hamlin, of Film Curb; Chick Lewis, of the "Managers' Round Table" section of the HERALD; A. Dash, Arthur Eddy and Winnie Andrus, of Film Daily, and Sherwin Kane, of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Eli Sugarman, editor of Billboard's indoor department, doesn't like the outdoors anyway and he refuses to become enthused over the possibilities of beneficial reactions of ultra violet rays. Others holding out are Messrs. Colvin Brown, Red Kann, James Cron, Don Gillette, Charles Hynes and Don Hancock.

Word reaches us that the debonnaire, handsome and stalwart Bill Adler, formerly of the home office of RKO, promoted transportation to Chicago to promote himself a job of promoting a beauty contest. It is unnecessary to inform his friends along Broadway that Bill is quite fond of the job, and from what we gather we learn he is actually getting paid for the work.

WHILE browsing about a bit with the mosquitoes (extra large) at our home in Pelham Bay, during our recent vacation, we happened across the following bit of information from the pen of Earnest Elmo Calkins. It should be of some interest to all motion picture workers who buy printing; to their bosses who okay the proofs and to their bosses who okay the bills:

"I have spent years buying advertising printing," said Mr. Calkins. "Naturally I have some ideas upon the subject, and they are pretty positive ideas. The chief of these is that you cannot buy printing by the yardstick. I have found that there is only one way to get good printing, and that is to find a good printer and trust him absolutely. When I have such a printer I never dream of asking for an estimate.

"When I suggest such a process to a business man he goes up in the air; but that is owing to his own lack of experience, and not to the fallacy of the theory. Of course, it would be very easy for a printer to get the best of me once or twice on this plan, but if he expected to work for me right along, year after year, he would not sacrifice future orders to any immediate profit.

"In the first place, printing is expensive. Every time you pare down the price you knock out some essential quality to good printing. Good paper costs money. Good ink costs money. Intelligent typesetting costs money. Perfect presswork costs money. You can take any good job of printing and do it for from one-half to one-fourth the price, but you will not get the same job.

"The whole theory of getting estimates upon printing, if it is to be good printing, is wrong. You might just as well get an estimate on a piece of designing or upon a case of diphtheria. The only question to be answered is, 'What printer can do the work?'

"Of course, printers who can be trusted are rare, but it is to the interest of the advertiser to find such, and then to stay with them."

FOX SUED BY FOX FILM; RELATIVE ALSO TO SUE

Film Company Asks $10,000,000, Charging Fraudulent Stock Deals; Mrs. Aaron Fox Claims Husband Forcibly Confined

Complicating the financial and legal difficulties in which William Fox has found himself since the revelations recently before a Senate committee, Fox Film Corporation last week filed suit in Mineola, New York, supreme court, against him for a sum ranging between $10,000,000 and $15,000,000, charging fraud in a series of stock deals.

A petition, also filed last week, was brought by Mrs. Aaron Fox, who charged, before Supreme Court Justice John L. Walsh, in New York, that William Fox had conspired to keep her husband, William Fox's brother, in a Hartford, Conn., sanitarium. She plans to sue for $250,000.

These two legal actions followed by only a few days the suit brought by Fox Theatres Corporation, as a result of the stock transaction manipulations reputed to William Fox in the course of testimony at Washington.

Mrs. Aaron Fox was appointed guardian, upon her petition, of her two children, William, six, and Anne Carroll, four. She will sue in their behalf. In her petition, Mrs. Fox charges that William "entered into a conspiracy with a certain well known New York alienist," forcibly taking Aaron out of the state so that he could not testify concerning William Fox's stock dealings before the Senate banking committee.

Charges Monopoly of Name

According to the petition, it is charged William Fox desires a monopoly of the Fox name in the motion picture industry, and is willing to pay other members of the family "substantial sums to refrain from the use of the name Fox in connection with the manufacture, distribution and sale of film." Mrs. Fox also charges that William Fox withheld "certain stocks and securities" belonging to Aaron.

In the Fox Film Corporation action, several were named as defendants with Mr. Fox. They are Jack G. Leo, former vice president and director, and brother-in-law of Mr. Fox; Michael J. Meehan, Betchel Alcock, James J. McKenna, Esmonde F. O'Brien, J. J. Moyland and M. J. Meehan, all members of the New York brokerage firm of M. J. Meehan & Company.

The corporation asks that contracts between it and Mr. Fox be set aside, that Tri-Ergon patents be turned over to it, that it be relieved from further payment of $500,000 annually to Fox, and that Leo be required to return to it, with interest, the $500,000 paid to him at the time Fox relinquished control of the corporation.

Judgment is asked against Mr. Fox and Mr. Leo and the members of the Meehan firm and an accounting is sought for all of the Class A stock of Fox Theatres Corporation belonging to the plaintiff and "misappropriated by the defendants in or about the year 1929."

"Fox," it is charged, "with the knowledge, connivance and cooperation of Leo and the defendant members of the Meehan firm, entered into a secret agreement with a certain pool or syndicate organized for the purpose of trading in Class A stock of the Fox Theatres Corporation."

Mr. Fox, it is alleged, turned over to the pool an option granted him by Fox Theatres Corporation for the purchase of 500,000 shares of Class A stock at prices from $25 to $26 under an agreement by which he was to receive a large percentage of any profits the pool might make.

Made False Entries, Charge

"Fox," it is further charged, "concealed, or attempted to conceal, his misappropriations and fraudulent acts by making or causing to be made false and misleading entries respecting such transactions in the books and records of the Fox Film Corporation and the Fox Theatres Corporation."

The plaintiff seeks to have set aside a release and indemnity agreement dated August 14, 1930, by which the Fox Theatres Corporation expressly recognizes and agrees that 210,300 shares of Class A common stock of the Fox Theatres Corporation and 223,400 shares of the capital stock of Loew's, Inc., were lawfully and validly purchased by Mr. Fox for the account of the theatres corporation, and by which the Fox Film Corporation indemnifies and holds Mr. Fox harmless in connection with or relating to any suit or action resulting from any transaction relating to the conduct of the business of the film corporation or of its subsidiary or controlled corporations.

Ask Stock Accounting

An accounting of certain stock obtained by Mr. Fox in what the plaintiff claims was "a breach of the fiduciary duty owing to the film company by the defendant Fox," is also asked by the plaintiff. This stock includes 25,000 shares of the common stock of the Fox-Case Corporation and 250 shares of common stock of the Fox-Hearst Corporation.

It also asks specifically for $1,875,000, caused by Fox to be paid by the plaintiff to the Fox Theatres Corporation on account of 75,000 shares of Class A stock in the Theatres Corporation. This 75,000 shares, it is alleged, was part of a block of 300,000 shares issued to Mr. Fox in February and March, 1929, on his promise to pay $25 a share for it.

The papers allege that, when the market price failed to rise in accordance with his expectations, Mr. Fox, on or about May 6, 1929, caused to be returned to the transfer agent of the corporation 200,000 of the said 300,000 shares, including the 75,000 paid for by the film corporation, and caused the transfer agent to register said shares on the books of the corporation as cancelled. It is alleged that Fox used the certificates in stock market transactions.

Louisiana Owners Reported Banding For Mutual Gain

Rumors of an alliance between United Theatres, Inc., a circuit controlling 19 subsequent run neighborhood houses in New Orleans and one first run in Hammond, La.; Allied Theatres of Louisiana, Inc., an organization of independents which numbers about 90 theatres, and the unorganized independents, to fight legislation against theatres, procure better film rentals and conditions, as well as settle intercine strife in the subsequent run field, are gaining credence.

The circuit and independents are understood to be preparing an organization to fight Mayor T. Semmes Walmsley's amusement tax bill, now before the legislature at Baton Rouge, which would allow municipalities over 10,000 to tax 10 per cent on all amusement admissions over 10 cents, the revenue to be used to aid the unemployed.

The Fortier bill authorizing the commission council of New Orleans to levy a 20 per cent tax on amusements for a period not to exceed two years for welfare purposes has been passed by the House of Representatives by a vote of 54 to 21. As this is an administration bill there is no doubt that it will pass the Senate and be signed by the governor.

Commons Passes Sunday Measure

The House of Commons in England, by a vote of 146 to 56, last week passed the new Sunday opening measure, which provides, for the most part, for local option on the matter of motion picture theatres opening on Sunday.

In the communities where theatres have previously been in the habit of remaining open on Sunday, the measure provides direct permission to continue. Under the law, a certain proportion of the gross receipts from the Sunday performances will go to local charities, while a percentage will go to the formation of a fund designed to establish and maintain a National Film Institute.

Stockholders Plan to Save Circuit by an Assessment

A meeting last week of 225 of the 625 preferred stockholders at the Victoria theatre, Mt. Carmel, Pa., resulted in the adoption of a plan to raise $150,000 to pay outstanding obligations against the circuit of seven houses, controlled by the Chamberlain Amusement Enterprises, Inc., and thus save the properties from a pending sheriffs sale.

The fund would constitute a loan which would come next to the first mortgage held by the Penn Trust Company, Reading, Pa. The proposal would assess stockholders holding less than $1,000 to the amount of $150, and those holding more than $1,000 to the amount of $300.

"Open Forum" for Pennsylvania Meet

Dates for the 18th annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware have been set for Monday and Tuesday, July 18th and 19th, at the St. Charles Hotel, Atlantic City. The convention will be an open forum to which all theatre men will be invited. The tentative schedule includes:

1. First meeting of the National Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.
2. Debate on the Brookhart Bill, "spokesmen for the negative have already been selected and attempts are being made to induce Allied to designate speakers for the affirmative," according to the Pennsylvania M. P. T. O.
3. M. A. Lightman: "The Washington Platform."
4. David Barrist: "The Sick Exhibitor."
5. Open Forum: "Problems of the Little Exhibitor."
6. George P. Aarons: "Credit and Debits of the Past Year." A resume of what the organization has accomplished.
7. P. S. Harrison: "Analysis of the Coming Year's Product."
8. National Speakers. The names of these will be announced when definite acceptances are received.

Concluding the two days' business sessions, there will be a banquet on the night of July 19th.

Mayfair Completes 1931-32 Schedule Two Months Ahead

Mayfair Pictures has completed its 1931-32 production program on the Coast two months ahead of schedule, with the completion last week of "Destruction's Trap." The company, with production supervised by Claude Macgowan, used three producing units to push studio work.

Mayfair is beginning immediately on the features for 1932-33, starting with "Her Resale Value," one of the company's specials for the new season. Following the special, two melodramas, "Malay Nights" and "Heart Punch" will go into work.

Eastman Importing Cameras To Supplement Regular Line

Eastman Kodak Company has begun the importation of European cameras produced at its recently acquired Nagel Works at Stuttgart, Germany, supplementary to the American line. Servicing and repair work on the cameras will continue to be done at the Rochester, N. Y., plant.

The company has indicated that should future sales warrant it, consideration would be given to the manufacture in the United States of the European line for the American market.

Canada Raises Ad Matter Tax

The Canadian government has imposed a dumping duty on all advertising material on pictures imported from the United States. The duty increases levies on posters, heralds and photographs from 54 to 130 per cent.

MGM COMPLETES LINEUP OF 89 SHORT SUBJECTS

Diversified List Includes Five Comedy Groups and One Each of Cartoon, Travel, Novelty, Sport and Music

Comedies will again predominate in the short subject lineup of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation. In the new group of 89 one and two-reelers and 104 Hearst Metrotone Newsreel issues, there will be five series of comedies, one cartoon series and one series each of travel subjects, sport reels, novelties and musical revues, these partly in Technicolor.

F. C. Quimby, general manager of the company's short subject division, this week announced details of the new short reel lineup, and in this connection he said that "Never before in the history of the show business has short feature buying been as financially important to exhibitors as it will be during the coming season. Generally speaking," said Mr. Quimby, "in the past the feature buy has received the exhibitors' whole consideration, with little or practically no thought about the importance of the type and quality of the short features to be used in completing the program. This plan may have worked during the boom days, but right now there is very little booming. Today the successful operation of a theatre requires keen business management and smart showmanship. Every possible entertainment inducement is needed to get people into the theatre and to this undertaking short features, if properly selected and handled, can be made to contribute materially," said Mr. Quimby.

Fred C. Quimby

"Last season," he continued, "it was definitely demonstrated that the public shopped more for picture entertainment than ever before. They spent their money at theatres where they could get the best show values. In thousands of instances outstanding short features on the program were the deciding factors in drawing them in.

"Ordinary, and in many instances, unattractive theatres presenting outstanding programs are doing a successful business, while beautiful theatre palaces with elaborate surroundings, but presenting weak shows, are starving. Today, as never before, it's the show that counts. And the show that counts always includes quality short features which were made to meet the need for added attractions," he said.

Bracketed in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's short line-up for the coming season are 46 two-reel subjects and 43 one-reel films. These include the Hal Roach "Our Gang," Laurel-Hardy, Pitts-Todd, and Charley Chase comedies, Flip the Frog cartoons, Fitzpatrick Traveltalks, and Sport Champions. The new series of releases in the short subject division next year will be a new Hal Roach series, The Taxi Boys; a group of two-reel musical revues, several of which will be filmed in Technicolor, and a group of releases to be known as M-G-M Oddities. As previously announced, in addition to their designated feature-length comedy, Laurel and Hardy will make four two-reel comedies. Charley Chase will be represented with eight, "Our Gang" will make eight, and Zasu Pitts and Thelma Todd, teamed by Hal Roach last season, will contribute eight new co-starring comedies. There will be 12 releases in the new Taxi Boys series, running along the lines of slapstick comedy.

Thirteen releases are announced in the new group of FitzPatrick Traveltalks. Various sports are covered in a new group of 12 Sport Champions.

Six two-reel musical revues will be released next season, four of the group being filmed in Technicolor. Featured in this series are Marie Dressler, Bing Crosby, Albertina Rasch Ballet, Jimmy Durante, Weber & Fields, Willie Collier, Cliff Edwards, Duncan Sisters, Dodge Sisters, Ethelind Terry, Fay Templeton and DeWolf Hopper. Twelve single reel Flip the Frog cartoons are on the schedule and six M-G-M Oddities.

Paschal Will Run 46 Publix Houses

Publix has closed a deal with W. E. Paschal, whereby the Texas exhibitor has taken a 50 per cent interest in the circuit formerly known as Publix-Dent Theatres of Texas and will operate the 46 houses involved individually as Paschal Texas Theatres, Inc., which will be incorporated. Mr. Paschal will be president and general manager. Publix de luxe theatres in Class A Texas cities are unaffected by the deal.

Although Publix retains a 50 per cent interest, it will virtually withdraw from "B" and "C" towns in the state. Twenty towns are represented in the deal, ranging in population from 52,848 to 4,648. Mr. Paschal was at one time associated with L. L. Dent. His headquarters will be in Dallas. Several of the theatres taken over by Mr. Paschal are dark at present.

The towns and the number of theatres in each involved in the deal are: Abilene, five; Amarillo, four; Breckenridge, two; Brownsville, two; Brownwood, two; Denison, one; Denton, two; Eastland, one; Harlingen, two; McAllen, two; Mercedes, one; Mexia, two; Paris, two; Ranger, one; Temple three; Tyler, three; Vernon, two; Waco, three; Weslaco, one; Wichita Falls, five.

"Iceberg" Group in Greenland

News reached Universal this week, by wireless, that its expedition to Greenland, to film "S.O.S. Iceberg," had reached its destination safely. The whaling vessel Borodino, chartered for six months with a complement of 65 players, mechanicians, scientists and seamen, arrived on July 4th at Umanak, S. W. Greenland. The expedition is in charge of Dr. Arnold Fanck.

Phraseology An Obstacle to 5-5-5 Contract Adoption

The phraseology of the 5-5-5 contract is seen by some sales managers to be an obstacle in the way of its adoption, despite the fact that many of them favor the standard form of contract in principle.

This is the reaction obtained from company sales executives by the sub-committee of three lawyers who are preparing a formal statement on the present attitude of distributors toward the 5-5-5 contract form and its adoption this season. The sub-committee is composed of Louis Phillips, of Paramount's legal department; Willard McKay, of Universal, and William Bromberg, of MGM.

The proposal to have the standard contract form available to "exhibitors in good standing" only is regarded by some sales executives as confusing and likely to have an unfavorable effect on sales and collections. It was pointed out that no definition is given of what constitutes the "good standing" of an exhibitor, nor is provision made for authority to determine this rating in individual cases.

Allied States Association reports that it endeavored to learn from Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film Corp., and one of the original sponsors of the uniform contract, "just when the 5-5-5 contract will be put into effect, in what respects it will conform to (or depart from) the draft agreed to, and who will be classed as approved exhibitors (and therefore eligible to receive the contract) and who will not?", but was unable to obtain any of this information. Allied relates that it is now addressing similar letters of inquiry to individual sales managers in the hope of obtaining this information.

Settlement of Cleveland Suit Off, Horwitz Says

Samuel Horwitz, attorney for Cleveland independent exhibitors in their monopoly suit against Loew's, Inc., and large distributors, indicated late Wednesday that negotiations for an out of court settlement of the suit had been definitely abandoned and that he would resume the taking of testimony by deposition in New York, Monday, July 11. It had been reported earlier that, influenced by the Federal Court decision in the Youngclaus suit at Lincoln, Neb., new attempts to effect an amicable settlement would be made.

Schnitzer Lunch Postponed

The luncheon planned for Eddie Schnitzer, recently named Educational-World Wide New York branch manager, at the Astor, has been postponed from July 6 to July 12, since several Educational executives are not due in New York from the Coast until July 11.

Lee Marcus on Coast

Lee Marcus, vice president of RKO Radio, is on the Coast on his regular liaison trip between the home office and studio. At the plant he is conferring with B. B. Kahane, president, and David O. Selznick, in charge of production.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Lady and Gent

(Paramount)

Drama

This is the best picture George Bancroft ever made. It's the finest production that has come from Paramount in many, many months. If it fails to do business in record breaking or near record breaking proportions the fault is entirely yours.

It's got everything that a good picture needs. Drama, romance, thrills, action, wonderful dialogue, great acting, comedy, suspense. It is full of laughter and there is more than one moment when your audiences will be choking back a sob and reaching for the old handkerchiefs. It's down to earth entertainment with a lot of human interest. It's a great tribute to Grover Jones and William Slavens McNutt, who wrote and prepared a thoroughly believable, easily understood story. It is a greater tribute to Stephen Roberts, who directed it with a feeling and understanding that brings out even the most inconsequential detail of action and dialogue with telling effect.

Furthermore, it's a feather in the hat of Wynne Gibson, who, playing opposite Bancroft, acts in a manner that brings out all the good qualities that have long been dormant. She amply shares honors and through her much of the fine appeal of the picture is generated and maintained.

Best of all, it's a revelation of the real George Bancroft. In "Lady and Gent" he makes up for everything. He turns in a performance that surpasses anything he has done before. You will have to convince yourself of a great George Bancroft and a great George Bancroft picture before you can convince your patrons. You have a money making picture in "Lady and Gent." You will have to whip off your coat and go to work on this one with every bit of showmanship knowledge and ingenuity you possess. It's not going to be easy to sell the picture.

Here is your tip on Bancroft. The qualities the public would like to have admired in him are all there—vividly real. Conversely those things that some people didn't like about him are conspicuous by their absence. All the cocky mannerisms, the roaring laughs, the swagger is gone. In its place is a real fellow, dumb, a little punch-crazy (he's a "has-been" fighter), but a thoroughly human sort of man that gets mixed up with people and events that are just a bit beyond his comprehension, but which he understands in a dim, bewildered sort of way. We will leave the critical reviews of Bancroft and the picture to others—confident in the belief that they will be raves. If you have a Paramount deal, you have a picture that should make considerable money.

You are not going to sell this with any degree of success with the ordinary stereotyped methods. Everything you do must carry the ring of truth and sincerity. To best get over the idea it looks as though the most effective way of capturing universal attention is through a personal endorsement. A guarantee on which you stage your reputation as a showman and a judge of good pictures that this is one of the best from every entertainment, production and acting standpoint that you have ever presented.

It is suggested that in line with your personal endorsement lead tell them that in "Lady and Gent," your patrons are seeing the real, human George Bancroft; that no matter how many times they have seen him before, they are now seeing him as he really is for the first time. Tell them that here is a picture that is a triumph of inspiration and genius—beautifully human with all the emotional elements that constitute perfect entertainment. The story of a "pug" who was past his peak, but who was looking for some of the happinesses of life. The story of a hard man and his girl who dropped into a little town to stay for an hour and remained forever. The story of a wisecracking queen of the night clubs and her boy friend, who lived their lives with his old manager's boy, his grammar school days until he was an all-American football hero. It is climaxed by a series of sequences that are whimsically sweet and vividly dramatic. The picture concludes with a scene that will mingle tears with laughter, for the last thing this strangely lovable couple thought of was marriage.

Get that shot of human appeal in every line you write—in every word you say—about "Lady and Gent" and you should more than clean up with it.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Stephen Roberts. Story and screen play by Grover Jones and William Slavens McNutt. Photographed by Harry Fischbeck. Release date, July 15, 1932. Running time, 80 minutes.

Forbidden Company

(Chesterfield)

Drama

If you are looking for good, clean, wholesome entertainment to offer your patrons, "Forbidden Company" will just about fill the bill. It is one of those family pictures. It has plenty of the fire of youth, with a whole lot of the ripeness of maturity supplied by John St. Polis and Myrtle Steadman.

The story is taken from the lives of a medium well-to-do family, where the father, John St. Polis, wants his son, John Darrow, to marry a girl of his own class. But John Darrow has fallen in love with a girl, Sally Blane, who was injured in an accident, and John's mother, Myrtle Steadman, is on his side.

The real value of "Forbidden Company" is that it is sincere. No high heroics, no stark drama. Just the picturization of one of those problems that sometime or other enter into the lives of almost every American family.

It is romantic without being sexy. It is clever without trying to be ultra-smart. There are plenty of laughs in both action and dialogue. The only thrills it has are those of suspense. The audience waits to see who is going to be the victor in the battle that will determine the future lives of a boy and a girl.

It is nicely directed. There is no attempt at pretentiousness. No striving for lavishness in settings that might have cheapened the production. Yet it is a good looking picture. It's finely acted, with Sally Blane and John Darrow just being a couple of modern young people like the young folks who come to your theatre. The film is natural, untheatrical and sincere.

Put in a little extra work on this picture. Don't worry about the absence of smash names. You have a good story and a good cast to sell. None of the more highly publicized stars could have done better work than Sally Blane and John Darrow. If you're trying to sell entertainment and you build up an advance campaign that stresses quality and merit in cast, story and production values, you will find that your patrons will have plenty of complimentary remarks for "Forbidden Company."—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced by Principal Pictures. Distributed by Chesterfield. Directed by Richard Thorpe. Story by E. T. Lowe. Photography by M. A. Anderson. Release date, June 1, 1932. Running time, 67 minutes.

Roar of the Dragon

(RKO Radio)

Drama

Here is a vivid story, bristling with action, tingling with dramatic suspense, roaring with the sound of machine gun and rifle fire. It details the pulse-quickening experiences of a little band of white men and women battling their way to safety through a horde of maddened Chinese bandits, with a vein of emotional romance and a sweet tinge of Zasu Pitts' comedy as a side dish. Manchuria is the setting and all the headline newspaper stories that have come out of that country for the past few years form the atmospheric theme.

It graphically portrays all the worldly emotions of fear, courage, love, avarice, intrigue, terror. The photography is excellent. The dialogue is satisfactory with not too much of it to destroy the sense of illusion. Direction is typically Wesley Ruggles with the sequences following one another in such a manner that wide play of the imagination is permitted.

Additionally, it introduces a new and much ballyhooed star to the screen, Gwili Andre. She has much of the mystery of Garbo and much of the fascination of Marlene Deitrich, yet at the same time an individuality that is distinctly her own.

You have plenty to sell in this picture. No one is going to overlook the cast. Richard Dix has given some fine portrayals before and he ranks high in fan estimation, but in "Roar of the Dragon," he seems to be quite a bit better than ever before. You can talk all you wish about Gwili Andre along the lines suggested above. She is new, and has not hit her full stride yet. But it is almost certain that her work in this one is going to stimulate a demand for more pictures that feature her.

In addition you have Zasu Pitts, who is nearing top-notch favoritism by leaps and bounds; an Arline Judge who amply demonstrates that she is more than a wisecracking playgirl and an Eddie Horton whose role takes him out of his sophisticated comedy character to make him highly dramatic.

There are heroes to love and a villain that the audiences will love to hoot and jeer. There is a subject in which the interest is keen, even though things are pacific in the great Chinese whirlpool at the moment.

Sell entertainment with a punch on this one. Realism, action, drama, romance are the real keynotes. Danger, suspense, events that play on every emotion run through it continually in both sequence and dialogue. You do not have to worry that its appeal will be confined to one particular class. It is going to stir youngsters to red hot enthusiasm, and if you can fix it so that you have plenty of youngsters present at every showing, you can be fairly sure that they will transfer their enthusiasm to the adults. The title is a natural for all sorts of advance teaser gags. And if a sensational news story should happen to break out of China just about the time you have it booked into your theatre, use that news to further concentrate attention on "Roar of the Dragon."

But under any conditions, you have a picture which, considered from the viewpoints of cast, theme and plot, together with the debut of a new star, should lift your box office grosses quite a bit beyond average figures.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Pack Up Your Troubles

(Hal Roach-MGM)

Comedy

A feature length Laurel and Hardy comedy that presents the fat and slim funsters still as the screen's ace laugh provokers, but introduces them into a story that has plenty of appeal to emotions other than the funny bone. In fact their sentimental carryings-on more than once approach the dramatic. A departure in which they are finely aided by a little three-year-old miss, Jackie Lyn.

The toughest part of putting this picture across to your patrons will be to convince them that it is a feature length production that moves with all the rib-tickling speed of a short subject, yet has a serious objective. That is, if the laughable antics of Laurel and Hardy can ever be dignified by the term seriousness.

Because of its different construction, "Pack Up Your Troubles" lack much of the spasmodic hilarity that roared through their last extra long featurette, "Beau Hunks." But that should cause no worry.

Maybe you can best stimulate the interest of the fans outside the Laurel and Hardy army by telling them that you have Stan and Oliver in a picture that features all the uproarious foolishness, plus a story that has more than one tug at the heart strings. You can't bill it as anything dramatic or romantic unless you make the idea of comedy predominate over everything else. Nor can you feature it as a carnival comedy and still get over the whole picture. You can safely shout it as a different Laurel and Hardy, capitalizing on the feature length plus the idea of two clowns who try to make good their promise to a buddy who dies on the battlefield that they will see that his little girl is delivered safely to his father and mother. Better submerge as far as possible the war angle, even though the first reel of the picture is given over to the typical Laurel and Hardy style of dodging enlistment and their subsequent career as rookies. There's a load of laughs in those sequences. Laughs that will put your audiences in the proper mood for the heart interest that is to follow.

Playing this up as a real feature, with the names of Laurel and Hardy dominating everything, plus the idea that it is different than anything they have ever done before; that howling laughter gives way to throat-tightening human interest and you should send your box offices soaring with "Pack Up Your Troubles."

The title itself is grand for all sorts of gag lines and stunts. You can safely tell your patrons to pack up their troubles in all sorts of ways from exploitation to straight advertising.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Unholy Love

(Allied Pictures)

Drama

This is the picture about which so much controversy raged for weeks. When M. H. Hoffman announced "Indecent" as the title for the picture which was suggested by Gustave Flaubert's novel "Madame Bovary," the industry press and newspapers burst forth with all kinds of objections and arguments against the title.

But for the picture itself—it is vivid romantic drama, admirably put together, capably acted and keenly directed. Hoffman and director Albert Ray have taken prototypes of the Flaubert characters and set them down in an atmosphere of 1932. Thus the picture is modern, interesting, presenting the story of Sheilla Bailey, who took her love where she could find it, with little regard for marital obligations. Yet it is worked into a climax that leaves no bad taste. One that will make your audiences admire the audacious girl herself as well as all those to whom she has brought trouble and tribulation.

There is plenty to sell in "Unholy Love." It is a good modern story of more than modern people, treating a theme that is fascinatingly interesting to the main body of motion picture fans—modern marriage and modern life.

Besides the timeliness of the story, you have names to talk about. H. B. Warner, Lila Lee have been before the public for years, consequently they are familiar to your patrons. In Joyce Compton, who plays the part of Sheilla Bailey, you have a young lady who looks to be destined for big things. She has plenty of appeal for both men and women. Don't overlook Beryl Mercer and Ivan Lebedeff, as well as Lyle Talbot, whom Warner Brothers are grooming for stellar roles.

There is heart interest that gets right down under the skin. Plenty of realistic suspense and thrills enough in both action and dialogue to satisfy the most discerning. There is nothing in the picture which could be criticized from the standpoint of morals. It is vivid and daring, but that daring is nothing with which people in every hamlet in the world are not familiar.

Capitalize on unusual romance and drama, together with personalities of the cast. But don't "dare" your patrons to see this picture. Don't mislead them with promises of shocks and surprises that will bring blushes and gasps. Promise them pretty good modern entertainment and "Unholy Love" should do business for you.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

My Pal, the King

(Universal)

Comedy-Drama

Another sweet box office surprise from Universal, chock full of new and different entertainment elements that should mean busy times for the box office cashier. Richard Schayer's story takes Tom Mix to the capital city of a mythical little European kingdom called Olvania. A happy idea, one that gives Mix the opportunity to retain all his western glamour and color, but transfers the settings to new and unusual places and makes possible a story and picture that not only promises a sensation with the youngsters, but more than that, has plenty of downright good entertainment for the grownups as well.

The entire story centers around a boy king, little 10 or 11-year-old Mickey Rooney, who is going to be the envy of every boy in your town once they get a glimpse of him in "My Pal, The King." Like all small boys, even a king wants to see a wild west show when it comes to town. The manner in which the little king gives his counsellors the slip, and unrecognized by the other urchins, manages to be picked up by Tom to ride in the parade, will stir the youngsters to wildest enthusiasm and give the adults many a laugh.

The wild west show that is put on with the king and his aunt as special guests is a riot of thrills and excitement. Plenty of riding, roping, bronco busting, Indian fighting, the proverbial stage coach robbery. Then when the little kid and his party are treated to a ride in the stage coach, a run-away and a nerve-tingling rescue by Tom follow.

Villainy has its place as the false premier seizes the reins of government and puts the little king on the spot. Heroics with a punch as Tom and his cowboys and Indians rescue him. Then a touch of pathos as Tom and the circus move on to the next town and the little king is left wishing that he could change his kingdom for the career of a cowboy.

There is but little romantic interest—no love making to dull the enthusiasm of the youngsters. Good, clean, wholesome entertainment without a vestige of anything that could stir objections from anyone. Primarily it is a kid's picture, but if you can realize all the diverse entertainment that is contained in it, you certainly can whip up interest among the adults.

Between the difference of its story construction, the personality and pull of Tom Mix at the box office, the added angle of the youthful appeal of Mickey Rooney (and that's a name

Dangers of the Arctic

(Explorers Film Company)

Travel Film

The exhibitor will perhaps understand best the nature of this more or less privately produced film, and appreciate more fully just what may be done with it as a feature to be presented, when to it is attached the descriptive explanation of "glorified travelogue."

It is neither much more nor any less than that. Though it contains numerous bits of excellent photography, graphically pictures the natural surroundings and the habits of the human and lower animal native inhabitants of the Arctic country, the film is nevertheless definitely not to be classed with the regular plotted, action-containing feature for exhibition purposes. There is no reason why it cannot be shown to advantage in numerous situations, though hardly on the best nights, as a pictorial record of the lives and habits of the population, of the unusual geographic conditions of a comparatively little known people, and country, the far Northern Alaska of the Eskimos. If played later in the year, there is, of course, the considerably valuable possibility of school tie-ups on the basis of the geographical worth of the effort. Lacking that angle temporarily, it would be best to sell the film along the lines of the unusual, indicating a glimpse into a strange territory, a glance into the lives of the Eskimos.

Earl Rossman, explorer, handled the complete production of the film, prepared and renders the dialogue, and is assisted in background by an appropriate and well executed musical score. At times it intrudes somewhat into the rendition of the sparse narrative, but not seriously. Fortunately, Mr. Rossman's explanation is smooth, clear and to an extent interesting, and is free of attempts at alleged humor. Naturally, there are no cast names, giving no exploitation opportunity in that direction. Eskimos themselves are the players.

Highlighting the film are shots of salmon catching, in great numbers; huge blocks of ice thunderously dropping from northern glaciers into the sea; the manner in which the Eskimo, caught by a blizzard, constructs for himself a small igloo for shelter during the storm; the annual roundup of reindeer for food and as sledge animals, and a splendidly photographed and dangerous flight over the continent's highest, most rugged peak, Mount McKinley.

The film has a certain wide appeal, similar to that of the exceptional travelogue and may well be sold to certain of the patrons with a reasonable degree of satisfaction, but in no sense should it be sold for more than it actually represents. The RKO Cameo in New York drew street and lobby attention with a display of certain of the paraphernalia of such an expedition, always an effective bit of exploitation.—Aaronson.

Presented by Explorers Film Company. Direction, photography and dialogue by Earl Rossman. Music by Michael Hoffman. Running time, 58 minutes.

Aren't We All

(Paramount-British)

Comedy

For the better classes, "Aren't We All" will find a welcome audience, but we suspect that the average film fan off the busy streets of the key cities will be more than a trifle bored at this thoroughly English production. Even the sincere efforts of Gertrude Lawrence fail to lift it into the money class.

Title, plus Miss Lawrence, may attract business for the larger key spots. Added to these, you have some spicy catch-line material all well designed for b.o. purposes, but like the picture itself it will only appeal to the intelligencia.

The audience values may be gauged the same way and in the same proportions. Extremely heavy English dialogue is its chief handicap for average audiences, because such dialogue and accents do not go well off Times Square and the Loop.

While this production deserves a good rating as entertainment it must be kept in mind that such a rating holds good for only the high class type of film-goer. To suggest a wide variety of selling angles would be a mistake because showmen catering to the type of people who would get the maximum of enjoyment out of this picture will find ample merchandising and advertising angles to dwell on when framing the campaign.

Others who play it will have to be guided according to their best judgment and with a full knowledge that they have twenty-five story stuff to sell to a street level audience.

Boring for the children but quite harmless for Sunday showings.—Lewis.

American Madness

(Columbia)

Drama

Here is a powerful screen play with an endless amount of audience appeal plus innumerable selling angles. While it waxes "preachy" on the depression slant once or twice, it nevertheless represents what ought to be swell box office medicine for run down theatres and a strong stimulant for those not too run down. The direction is certainly worthy of Frank Capra and adds another great picture to his already large list.

The title in itself can make a very strong bid for patronage; add to it some worthy catch-line copy dealing with the powerful influences of the story and you have as close to a foolproof show as you could ever hope to sell in your community.

To further assist in the selling of this picture you have such b.o. and marquee names as Walter Huston, who, as always, gives a splendid performance; Pat O'Brien, Constance Cummings; who, as always, is charming and capable, and Kay Johnson whose recent long absence from the screen made us very sad. This quartette certainly contributed their best, and when you stop to consider that the best from Walter Huston means almost perfection then you will surely agree that your customers are going to enjoy this production.

Audience value is as fine as you could hope. There is dramatic suspense, love interest, the usual misunderstandings between husband and wife, (which of course turns out O.K.) mob scenes which should bring a hearty round of applause from the patrons and all the other ingredients necessary to good entertainment.

The bank background provides you with something really different in the way of local selling slants and tieups. The "kick-depression-in-the-pants" gospel of Walter Huston should be greeted with much emphasis by the local editor and others on your newspaper, and ditto for the Kiwanis club, civic and Chamber of Commerce officials. The authenticity of the vault shots can not be denied and is a welcome relief from vault doors which seem to close and open with such difficulty when to all appearances the party doing the opening and closing is just staging a hard-work act. Incidently, those vault shots and the working of the big combination held a peculiar fascination for me,—maybe I should have been a safe-cracker by vocation.

Although the finishing sequences showing the men making deposits in the face of a terrific bank run sounded rather over-melodramatic, we were quite willing to forget it. Too many other fine points remained in our mind and crowded out all else that might have been considered not quite in keeping with such a fine picture.

We wish we could convey our enthusiastic feeling regarding the merchandising possibilities of this picture to every showman in the country. To be able to do so would be equivalent to insuring a box office landslide. Sufficient to say that here is money in your pocket if you are willing to back it up with a campaign just a wee bit as powerful as the story itself. Take it and make the most of it.—Lewis.

Reviewer Looks Over Hoffman Films; Bestows Week's Honors On Universal and Paramount

By LEO MEEHAN, Hollywood

This scout for things new in celluloid has had a busy week. Seven pictures, phew! Consulting an occulist today. Sixty thousand feet of it in a week is hard on the orbs.

Particularly interesting was a special showing for us by M. H. Hoffman of two of his opening guns in the independent producers' campaign for bigger and better pictures for 1932-33. If these are samples, there's no bunk in the promises made by the genial and astute head of Allied Picture Corp., who also, by the way, is president of the Independent Producers Association.

"Unholy Love" is the one M. H. started out to call "Indecent," and you HERALD readers talked him out of it. An extremely liberal and modern treatment of the Flaubert novel, "Madame Bovary," it is an intensely dramatic story of the failure of a poor little girl who tries to become the society wife of a wealthy doctor, enters into an illicit love affair, and ends by taking her own life in a spectacular automobile smash-up. Under the capable direction of Albert Ray, Mr. Hoffman has assembled a cast that is just about perfect and up to the standard of most any company, large or small. Performances by H. B. Warner, Lila Lee, Joyce Compton, Ivan Lebedeff and others are excellent. Frances Rich, eldest daughter of Irene, appears attractively in a minor role. Frances has started her film career.

Monte Blue in Four

Monte Blue is starred in "The Stoker," first of a series of four which M. H. Hoffman, Jr., will make for Allied with the old silent favorite. It is a rip-snorting melodrama, with all kinds of eye-filling Central American settings, scenes in the hold of a liner, and a supporting cast which includes Dorothy Burgess, Noah Beery, Natalie Moorhead, Richard Tucker. We hear Monte has been studying voice diligently. Whether he has or not, he certainly rings the bell with a first rate performance in this one, voice and all. It is an auspicious start for the Blue series.

Yes sir, the Prexy of the Independents, has done his associates proud. M. H. has a right to demand that we all forget that old word "quickie."

Production honors of the week among the majors may be divided between Universal's "Tom Brown of Culver" and Paramount's "Lady and Gent."

Two Which Rate High

Trust the Laemmle school every now and then to do something different, away from conventional formulae. Remember "Spirit of Notre Dame" last season? Well, just as that was a fine exposition of the life of young men in a men's university, so this one is equally as good in delineating the life of boys in one of America's best known prep schools. Filmed largely right on the spot at Culver, Indiana, (these Hoosier schools have a way of getting into the limelight, it seems), it includes the entire personnel of Culver Military Academy, as well as a fine bunch of Hollywood juvenile and veteran actors. The story is dramatic, colorful and an informative revelation of how such schools make real men from pampered boys.

"Lady and Gent" stars George Bancroft, with a clever little lady named Wynne Gibson coming along and almost stealing the show. In fact, she would have if Bancroft hadn't delivered one of the best performances of his screen career in the role of a tottering, punch-drunk prize fighter, taken in tow and saved from the sewer by his sweetie, and their joint affection for the orphaned son of the ex-fighter's manager. This ought to boost the Bancroft stock, and certainly it should definitely register Miss Gibson as one of the best players on the Paramount roster. The story of how the cruelly beaten pug and his hard-boiled (heart-of-gold) girl friend, who operates a cheap night club, go to the country and there find quiet contentment, home and a new viewpoint, is good, substantial hokum, convincingly done under the smart direction of Stephen Roberts from an original story by Grover Jones and William S. McNutt.

Wheeler-Woolsey Nonsense

"Hold 'Em Jail," from Radio, is premised upon a great farce idea: intense rivalry between two penitentiaries over football, competition so keen that "alumni" of the institutions round up prospective star gridiron material by the embarrassing process of planting evidence against "candidates" in such a way as to have them railroaded into their respective lockups! Into one of them, good old "Biddemore," are sent Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey, who claim to be better footballers than Rockne's best. They find Edgar Kennedy as warden and Edna May Oliver as his sister. Of course they move right in on the warden and his family, and after winning the prison football championship (the game is even broadcast), the governor pardons them and Bert gets the warden's comely daughter. All a lot of very funny nonsense, done under Norman Taurog's direction. It's the last one made by these two comics before they began throwing rocks at each other and split up. It is rumored they may make up. They will do one for Columbia if that happens.

"Unashamed," from the MGM lot, is another very talkative and mostly quite unbelievable murder-courtroom mixup, this from the typewriter of Bayard Veiller, who should know better. The jury, and court attaches, act like comic opera characters. Helen Twelvetrees, borrowed from Radio for the lead, is asked to make herself a pretty impossible person whose father should have spanked and sent her to bed. Robert Young, Lewis Stone, Jean Hersholt, John Miljan, Monroe Owsley and a promising MGM newcomer from the New York stage, Gertrude Michael, struggle through the morass as best they can. Harry Beaumont's direction didn't help matters.

Newsreels An Issue in First Convention Tilt

All the world knows now that Governor Roosevelt won the battle of Chicago for the Democratic nomination, but few know that his first victory in Chicago was fought and won on behalf of newsreels.

The fight was waged as to who should install and pay for the lighting of the Democratic convention hall, an argument which has always arisen at conventions in the past and which in every single case has resulted in the conventions providing the lights necessary for the newsreels just as they supply similar working facilities for the press and other news agencies reporting the event to the public.

In the case of the Democratic convention this year the newsreels went to work in February trying to get the matter straightened out as to who was to light the convention hall. The proposition of paying for the lights was turned down first by the committee on arrangements. Then an appeal was made to executive-secretary of the National committee, Jouett Shouse, who turned down the proposition. Later the newsreels went to work on the members of the Democratic national committee and canvassed each committeeman. It was found that a majority felt that the lights should be installed to permit the making of pictures. The proposition was then brought up at the general meeting of the Democratic national committee. Chairman John J. Raskob took a quick raised hand vote and declared that the proposition had been turned down. Then Stephen Early of the Paramount News brought the matter before Governor Roosevelt personally and enlisted his sympathy.

The result was that in their first committee battle the Roosevelt delegates went to "bat" for the newsreels. At a last minute midnight meeting the Democratic national committee moved to reconsider the previous motion. The Roosevelt delegates came through to a victory on the first matter that was really made an issue of. The Democratic Convention agreed to pay for the lights. And once again the newsreels fought their way through to a picture.

St. Louis Owners Consider Dropping Double Features

St. Louis theatre owners are considering the elimination of double feature programs on penny nights or shows at which two persons are admitted for one admission price. In recent weeks the penny night evil has grown to such proportions as to endanger the entire industry locally.

Some of the neighborhood shows are now holding as many as three and four penny nights weekly and have also added an extra feature picture to their programs. These tactics have forced competing houses to follow suit. The independent exhibitors have about reached a decision to eliminate the double feature if the St. Louis Amusement Company, operating some 22 houses, will fall into line. An answer is expected from the circuit shortly.

YOUR PUBLIC

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

WITH summer definitely upon us we find the sharp narrowing down of organized club and group activities in behalf of the motion picture. There is, however, a lively interest among the small committees engaged in preparing extensive programs for September's opening schedules. In each day's mail we are receiving heartening letters which bring the outlines of tentative plans of influential club groups. They are unfailingly constructive, wise, fair in their viewpoint on the theatre manager's problems. They bear promise of important helpfulness.

Perhaps the most amazing single development among organizations in this past year is the growth of the Film Council idea. It is such a very little while ago that Councils were unheard of! Now we are counting them with a gasp of surprise, for these are the groups with ramifications of real power. They have become the combined club expression of the community; the unification of little clubs and greater ones reflecting the thought and purposes of varying creeds, the schools, the fraternal organizations as well as all of the women's clubs.

Film Councils Increase

During the past few months we have attempted, through these columns, to gather complete information on new Film Councils, their membership and specified purposes. At the present accounting there are 3,000 in this country. Within the past month we have learned of new units in the following communities:

California: Covinam, Gilroy, Huntington Park, Livingston and Westmoreland.

Florida: Miami and St. Petersburg, both working under the guidance of the Parent Teachers' Association.

Long Island: Freeport and Hempstead—working under the direction of Mrs. John Hansfield, Garden City; also Forest Hills, L. I., and Flushing, both of which are now aiming to complete their organization during the summer months when their committees will develop contact with the theatre managers in preparation for a practical fall working schedule.

In the following communities groups are at work at present on the same idea and toward the same objective: Buffalo, N. Y.; Moline, Ill.; Morris, Ill.; Sheridan, Oklahoma. These groups are being guided in their activities by local study clubs.

The California Council

Within the past year Illinois and California have developed state wide councils of enormous power. The California Council will not be a year old until August. In this short time it has drawn into its ranks the western representatives of the National Previewing groups, the Boy Scouts, the Girl Scouts, Campfire Girls, Girl Reserves, Y. M. C. A., Librarians and a number of groups interested in civic work and child welfare.

A pregnant editorial in the June issue of Motion Picture Reviews, published by the American Association of University Women, defines the Council's purpose:

"A unity of purpose and cooperation between organizations having the same objective is always essential for success in any undertaking, and the work of Better Films Committee is no exception to this rule. In fact, in no work are definite plans and unified opinions more necessary, because the appeal for children's matinees and family night programs must come from the community, and the exhibiting end of the motion picture industry must be assured that the public will be whole-heartedly behind such an experiment."

Southern California, because of its location near the source of motion picture supply, and the great local interest this creates, has had its Better Films Committees over a period of many years, Junior Matinees have existed for ten years, with varying degrees of success. The Council has been organized to draw together more closely all groups working along the same lines.

Mrs. John Vruwink, president of the Council, representing the Women's University Club of Los Angeles, Branch A. A. U. W., assisted by Mrs. William Burk, vice-president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and Mrs. Leo Hodges of the California Congress of Parents and Teachers, have drafted and placed into practical operation the following sound and definitely constructive platform:

Aims and Purposes

"The California Motion Picture Council is an impartial group of representative organizations especially interested in child welfare, working together for better motion picture programs for children and adolescents, and cooperating in educational programs to stimplate a realization of the necessity for selective entertainment for youthful audiences.

Method of Operation

"It is a clearing house for available information on current releases. Reports of this Council are the consensus of opinion of the groups previewing through the courtesy of the Association of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, at the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood. These reports are accepted and used by the members of the Council not having the facilities or privilege of previewing daily.

"Bi-monthly reports are available to community councils upon receipt of stamped, addressed envelope sent to Mrs. David Ray, Preview Chairman, 1235 South Furst Street, Arcadia, California.

"As these reports are the only lists of films (in California) which are the united judgment of all of the previewing groups, it is suggested that they be accepted and used by communities sponsoring junior matinees and family night programs. It will eliminate discussion, satisfy the theatre managers, and present a united opinion on pictures. Assurance is given that the greatest care is taken in the compilation of the recommended lists.

"Suggestions for organization and procedure of community councils follow:

"Membership should consist of representatives of all local organizations, i.e., civic, educational, patriotic, religious, welfare organizations, libraries, etc. (Men's groups as well as women's should be included.) These representatives should be officially appointed by the organizations they represent.

"Officers should include president, vice president, secretary, press chairman, chaperone chairman. The office of treasurer is dependent upon the organization procedure. The Executive Committee requires great care in selection. It should represent all the organizations most actively interested in the work.

"Meetings of the Executive Committee should be held frequently and regularly to handle the problems which constantly arise, to plan or supervise the programs, and to plan for stimulating interest and cooperation.

"Meetings of the official representatives forming the Council should be held periodically to keep the cooperating groups informed and interested. Failure of these members to attend the meetings will indicate a lack of interest and the Executive Council will be justified in requesting a successor to replace the delinquent representative.

"Open meetings should also be held less frequently, with speakers selected to arouse public interest in the project. These are a very successful method of publicity.

"Meetings with theatre managers are, of course, a required procedure.

"The purpose of the Junior Matinee is not to attract children to the movies. It is to safeguard them and to educate parents in selective entertainment. A standard for these programs which has proved practical through years of experiment is as follows:

"Length of program should not exceed two hours. (The obvious reason for this relates to children's physical, nervous and emotional endurance.)

Type of Program

"One feature length film approved by the National Previewing Committee of the California Motion Picture Council. (No film is appropriate for the child under eight or nine years. Parents of younger children must realize this.)

"Approved short subjects. Comedies, cartoons, newsreels and educational shorts.

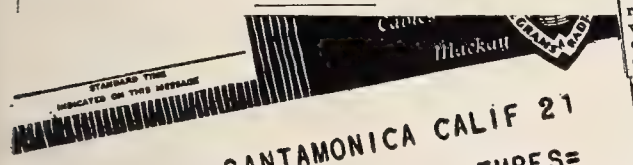
"Publicity may be obtained through each organization represented; through bulletin boards of libraries, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., clubs,, etc.; through published channels, such as recommended lists of films, news stories of the activities of the Council and the matinees; by trained speakers to go before service clubs, women's clubs, P. T. A. groups, etc.

"Tactful mothers should be in regular attendance. Their duties depend upon the attitude and wishes of the management of the theatre.

"Theatre managers are usually more than willing to cooperate in any constructive movement which represents the wishes of the community.

"An avoidance of censorship in discussion or practice is necessary in order to obviate an impression of intolerance and to secure cooperation in this respect in bringing the attention of the public to the finer films and to encourage attendance for these pictures.

"Family night programs for Friday or Saturday nights make possible a wider range of film selection and are to be encouraged because they meet an even greater need in reaching adolescents. In many communities they are in greater demand than junior matinees."



MOTION PICTURE HERALD, through this department, is particularly interested in building up the whole Film Council movement, and will be glad to answer questions, share material or make practical suggestions to those engaged in their organization.

"THE MIDNIGHT PATROL"
Produced by C. C. Burr. Released by Monogram Pictures.

This picture is interesting not only because of its value as entertainment, but because it illustrates, from an economic angle, the possibilities in the field of independent production.

While this film cost its makers considerably less than is ordinarily spent on a picture from any of the major companies, it rates closely with the average feature from the old line studios. It has good story, direction, production quality and a cast composed of a dozen or more well known names.

Burr Returns

Incidentally it marks the return to the feature field of C. C. Burr, pioneer producer who, during the past few years, has confined his efforts to short comedies.

"The Midnight Patrol" is the first of a series which Burr will make for release by the Monogram organization.

"THE MIDNIGHT PATROL"

When RKO-Pathe produced "Holiday" everyone said it was what they figured a perfect talking picture. Well, we just ran across the first of this species of the present day independent pictures in "The Midnight Patrol." It is a natural. It is a director made perfect picture, for the director caught the spirit of the author, George Jeske, with dialogue by Charles Edward Roberts, and he watched every movement and detail of the actors until he brought to the surface the emotions and feelings of the very life of the story, and thereby hangs the tale of this perfect entertaining picture, and a boost for the independent producers of today. C. C. Burr produced this one, and Monogram Pictures are to release it. The musical score by Lee Zahler, Brown and Spencer, helped the picture in a great measure. Photographically the picture equals any of the major picture. It is the work of Louis Physioc.

To start with, it was a case of real actors and actresses in every part, no matter how small. That puts this over so convincingly. For instance, Regis Toomey and Robert Elliott just naturally walk away with the picture. Their parts could not have been better written. Did the authors start out with them in mind? Bringing in public characters known to the sport world and to the cinema sphere and introducing them by their real names and talking about their accomplishments is one of the unique angles of the story. Mack Swain, known the world over for his funmaking antics, came through in fine shape. You have to hand the palm and the glad hand to James J. Jeffries, and to the greatest jockey of all time, Tod Sloan, for their appearance in the activities.

Getting back to the regular cast, you will like Betty Bronson, Earl Foxe, Mary Nolan, Edwina Booth, Eddie Kane seen too little, scored; you will fear Mischa Auer, as he gets out of prison and does a sort of Frankenstein about town. Ray Cooke, with his funny pan, was there now and then. Snub Pollard ained a hearty laugh or two. Wm. Norton Bailey Wilfred Lucas, Jack wer, Barry Oliver, J. C. Fowler and many others helped command attention. t dances by Arnold Hocht were beautifully staged.

hristy Cabanne directed this picture like he would have one of the major productions. In fact, you can put M-G-M, Paramount, Fox or a Warlabel on this one and you wouldn't know the difference.

If independent producers could consistently release features like 'Midnight Patrol,' exhibitors would have no concern for block booking and protection. But 'Patrol,' so far, is only one of a few real pictures which have come from the indie ranks, and exhibitors should waste little time in speculation. It is an action picture, exceptionally well cast with names that are known.

"Midnight Patrol" with Regis Toomey
(Monogram Pict., April 12; running time, 60 min.)

A good program picture. It revolves around the efforts of the hero, a newspaper reporter, to solve a murder and in that way get a scoop for his paper. There is fast action all the way through, and the audience is kept in suspense.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts from 106 theatres in 19 major cities of the country for the calendar week ended July 2, 1932, aggregated $1,379,449. During the preceding seven-day period ending June 25, 1932, the grosses of 172 theatres in 31 cities totaled $1,853,520. One new high individual theatre figure was established during the more recent week, at the Astor, Minneapolis, with "When a Feller Needs a Friend," while nine new low individual house records were noted. This compares with one new 'high" and 14 new "lows" recorded during the previous seven-day period.

ADVERTISING AGE has sponsored a contest for definitions of advertising. The committee at last accounts was considerably divided, considering a number of entries:

GILBERT T. HODGES, president of the Advertising Federation of America, favored this:

"Advertising: The written, spoken or pictured representation of a person, product, service or movement, to influence sales, use, votes or endorsement."

HARRY CHANDLER, retiring president, American Newspaper Publishers Association, voted for this:

"Advertising: The art and science of bringing to people's attention information designed to create or stimulate interest in or a desire for a service or thing."

LEO H. BRISTOL, president, Association of National Advertisers:

"Advertising: The dissemination of information concerning an idea, service or product to impel action in accordance with the intent of the advertiser."

GEORGE W. KLEISER, president of the Outdoor Advertising Association of America, selected this:

"Advertising is the art and science of turning people's attention, by any means available and suitable, toward an idea, product or service and creating in their minds a desire to accept the idea, possess the product or use the service."

HARRY SHAW, president, National Association of Broadcasters, picked this:

"Advertising is the art of making known."

WABASH AVENUE

It was a "blue" sad Tuesday along the Row last week when the Congress Trust & Savings Bank closed its doors. Located in the film colony's back yard this bank has for many years been the repository for film employes' savings and the closing left a lot of folks mighty gloomy.

Sam Gorelick, of RKO, is hieing himself out into the territory these days contacting exhibitors. There are any number of spots, Gorelick reports, where conditions are comparatively favorable.

Balaban & Katz have closed the United Artists theatre for an indefinite period.

Jack Osserman of RKO is watching with interest the business at the State-Lake theatre being done by "Bring 'Em Back Alive." During the early part of opening week the Frank Buck animal film was eclipsing the business of "Frankenstein," the house's record breaker. That is, it had played to more people although the box office take will necessarily be smaller than for "Frankenstein" because of present reduced prices.

Columbia will soon undergo remodeling at the local quarters which will make the Chicago exchange about the swellest on the Row, Bill Brumberg said.

Sol Lesser, head of Principal Pictures, dropped in on Henri Ellman and Dave Dubin, local Principal distributors, on his plane jaunt from the West Coast to New York.

Cress Smith, southern and western sales manager of RKO was in Chicago for conferences with Eddie Silverman at the local exchange.

Harry A. Lande, who has been in the motion picture industry for many years, has taken over the Powers Pictures exchange which he will operate, succeeding Roy Alexander.

McConnell Completes RKO Van Beuren Serial Unit

Fred McConnell, general manager of the Van Beuren Corporation, has completed the organization of the production unit which will make the serials for RKO Radio's 1932-33 program, he reports in a wire to Amedee J. Van Beuren, president, this week.

Spencer Bennet has been signed to direct and Tom Storey will co-direct. Mr. Storey is production manager and his assistant will be George Curtner. Richard Heermance is business manager. Edward Snyder and Gilbert Warrenton are the cinematographers. Oliver Sigurdson is still man.

Paramount Cameraman Films The Famed Buddha of Japan

Edward Venturini, who recently returned from Japan where he filmed 10,000 feet of background scenes for Paramount's "Madame Butterfly," Sylvia Sidney-Gary Cooper vehicle, "shot" the great Buddha, the Daibutsu of Todeiji, at Nara.

Permission to photograph the figure was obtained through the aid of a Buddhist monk, Venturini reported. The Buddha is cast in bronze, weight 500 tons, is 53½ feet high.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

IT MUST BE THE HEAT!

HERE WE ARE IN THE MIDDLE of one of those famous (or infamous) hot waves which seem to hit New York at regular—and all too often—intervals. There is one thing about New York heat waves that differ from heat waves elsewhere. Out West when it's hot you just don't feel like working; here in New York when it's hot you won't work. At least that's our present feeling.

If we had a spark of ambition (perish the thought), we would douse our head in ice cold water and buckle down to earning our salary by pounding out a masterpiece (no wise cracks solicited) for our millions (we'll settle for much less) of readers to use for inspiration—and points west.

As a matter of fact, we did plan to use our editorial page this week to tell you how grand the reaction has been on those Ken Long advertising layouts. And we also wanted to tip you off that for next week's issue we had Ken write a special article dealing with type faces and a lot of other important composing room information that smart showmen should know about.

But, considering the weather and my rotten goluff, you will have to overlook our inability to discuss such matters. After all, one is allowed to loaf on occasions, and what better excuse can one find than the heat and the humidity. (Some day I'll find out what this humidity business is all about.)

Our memo pad also discloses the fact that we wanted to say something about the latest circuit wrinkle of forcing the managers to take vacations without pay. There is a subject we could talk (or curse) about for weeks at a time. As near as we can figure out, it is equivalent to the company sticking its hand into the manager's pocket and taking some hard earned cash right away from him. My, oh my. Such soup-er-efficiency. Just think, the poor sucker manager works fifty weeks, seven days in each week and about fourteen hours in each day. Then, to cap the climax and stimulate his desire to battle for profits (in which he gets no look-in), they send him on a vacation (I've got a better name for it) for two weeks at no pay.

But, as I said before, it's too hot to try and write anything today, so you'll have to get along without our weekly pick-me-up. (Or, maybe, lay-you-down.)

Hoping that the heat wave would break up, we kept a letter on our desk from J. R. MacEachron of West Helena, Ark., a former circuit manager, who made a doggoned wise move and took over a small proposition of his own.

How we wish we had enough ambition to tell you how he is slowly, but surely, building up a swell business despite all sorts of handicaps and hardships. It's a fact. "Mac" found plenty of trouble when he went into West Helena. Kids ripping up seats. "Cake eaters" congregating in front of the house and wisecracking when girls went by. Noise inside the theatre. These and the dozens of other petty annoyances all hurt a theatre and take time to eradicate. But "Mac" cleaned up the works and is now heading for some local recognition from the natives who are beginning to appreciate a playhouse in their own town.

Being up against the extreme heat, however, we cannot tell you about this aggressive showman. Too bad, too. He does deserve some mention for his hard work.

Another swell thought we wanted to convey in this issue was how you could duplicate an idea worked successfully by several railroads. They sponsored "Mystery Excursions," meaning: you buy a ticket but don't know where you are going. This gag pulled a big gallery for three separate excursions. From reports, it is going to be made a regular feature during the summer months.

There is something fascinating about buying a railroad ticket to a destination you know nothing about. Maybe, as showmen, you fellows can work a good "Mystery Show." You know, all the trimmings, secrecy, and mysterious allusions to what they may see, and so forth.

This can be made decidedly different from the old "Take-A-Chance" show idea of several years ago, by surrounding it with much mystery and veiled suggestions of what may be in store for them. Including, if logical, free drinks, smokes, etc.

It ought to be a marvelous box office idea and with a good audience picture to back it up, so that they won't feel as though they had been roped in, could be turned into several hundred welcome dollars where perhaps you might have had but a usual low summer's day receipts.

These and many other thoughts were supposed to be the body of our editorial this week, but the heat got the best of us and so you'll just have to charge it off to laziness or anything else. It is impossible to try and write anything with the temperature hanging somewhere around 86 in the shade, and while Terry Ramsaye can find inspiration by looking down into the park below us, the best we can do is to perspire some more every time we gaze out of the window from these "dizzy heights." "CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Just to prove that Englishmen can see the humorous side once in a while, we had Kirschbaum make up a cartoon from the suggestion of Harry Harris in London. Maybe with this as a starter some of the other British showmen will come through with some suggestions. We hope so.

FARMERS STILL HAVE MONEY SAYS VAVERIS AND HE'S AFTER THEM

A drive for rural patronage is being made by "Gus" Vaveris, who, with his partner, C. Fourgis, operates the Grand Theatre, Mount Pleasant, Pa.

Some time ago, with cooperation from the local Chamber of Commerce and several other organizations in town, the theatre held a "Farmers' Institute," playing to about 1,000 farmers and showing a program of agricultural pictures, shorts and a feature comedy. His mailing list now includes the names of all farmers living within a radius of 25 miles and he is getting very good results by circularizing these prospects with special letters, pointing out the refreshing qualities of a good movie show for hardworking people. A letter we have at hand also carried a coupon requesting name to be put on regular weekly program mailing list.

Although we've been told again and again by politicians that all farmers are dead broke, Vaveris holds that they're the only ones who yet have the price of theatre admissions tucked away under the mattress. At any rate, he informs us that he's getting results and building up a substantial trade from the rural districts. The Club thanks him for passing along the reminder to other members and it would appear that the "Institute" idea, with its special program for the farmers, was an excellent means of getting under way.

MORROW'S AD SHOWS WHAT CAN BE DONE WITH A CIRCLE MAT

A short time ago we had an opportunity to look over a series of ads made up by Floyd D. Morrow, manager of the Kenosha Theatre, Kenosha, Wis. The ads were particularly interesting because of showing what can be done with an ordinary circle mat, obtainable at any newspaper office. Segments of the mat effectively set the ads apart from others on the amusement page.

Morrow holds that a trip to the newspaper files will prove a profitable investment, as far as picking up odd borders and layouts is concerned. He is the kind of a showman who is ever trying to strike an original note in ads, basing this on the theory that ad style can be as individual to a theatre as front, lobby, etc. The simple but effective use of the circle mat described above well illustrates the thought he wishes to pass along to his fellow Round Table Club members. Some ads of this type will be reproduced in a future issue.

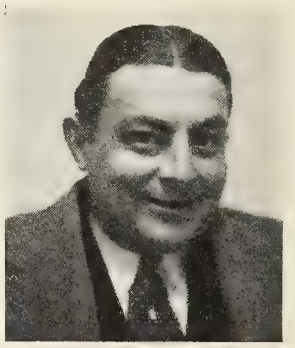
VISITOR FROM OHIO

S. S. Solomon, city manager for Publix theatres in Youngstown, Ohio, recently paid New York City a visit on a trip combining business and personal affairs, and contacted Club headquarters while in town. The Round Table hopes to return the courtesy to this well known showman at an early date.

J. STODEL RIGGED NOVEL ADVERTISING SIGN ON SAIL BOAT

Managers in seagoing towns may be interested in a stunt pulled by Jack H. Stodel, branch manager of African Consolidated Theatres, Ltd., Cape Town, Africa.

When playing a recent feature he engaged a power boat, rigged with a mast and dressed with numerous pennants, to run along the coast for eight or ten miles. In place of a sail banner netting displayed the title of picture and name of theatre. The boat plyed its course along the residential areas.



Many little gags used here in the States are popular down Stodel's way, such as distribution of peanuts in small bags when playing "Cracked Nuts," and small packages of chewing gum on another picture. The only suggestion we could make to Jack is that he tie-up some local merchant for an ad to take care of cost of bags, etc.

Horoscope cards were also used to excellent advantage on "The Lottery Bride," which covered all months of the year. One side carried theatre and picture ad and the other the horoscope. This gag generally gets attention since people never seem to tire of fortune telling, etc.

GONE— BUT NOT FORGOTTEN

Here is the picture of none other than Ed Cohen of Omaha, Des Moines and other points in the grand and glorious West, where men are men and some get foolish selling fillums.

Ed was perfectly (or otherwise) rational until he decided on his first trip to New York and the sights which go with it. Packing his wife and suitcase into the family chariot, he headed east and took Noo York by storm. Or maybe it was less spectacular. Be that as it may, we are mildly curious to learn what happened to him since shaking the dust of this vicious city from his aforementioned chariot.

Both Ed and Josephine seemed to be having a swell time and storing up many wild and weird stories to take back to the family firesides in Omaha and other quiet places. No doubt their experiences at a certain dance hall in Harlem will remain stamped on their minds for many years and the telling of that unusual affair will bring many doubting glances from those within earshot.

But they departed from New York and here we sit waiting for word from them, but all we get is silence and plenty of that. Maybe we sent them home with indigestion, or perhaps the big town was a wee bit too much for the quiet souls from Omahaha. We shall be patient and see whether this little reminder brings forth any word from the wanderers.

Incidentally, the photo used with this little blurb was just one of a strip taken for the sum total of 25 cents and we were gentleman enough not to use the funniest one of the lot. How's that, Ed?

SLEPYAN OBTAINED EXCELLENT RESULTS BY A NAVAL TIE-UP

An atmospheric display atop marquee, across front and in the lobby and a special preview for the personnel of a nearby Naval air station produced gratifying results on "Hell Divers" for Nathan Slepyan, manager of the Sheridan Theatre, North Chicago, Ill.

From the airport he secured a 26 foot airplane wing, a fuselage, propellors and a motor. As you will note in the photo, the wing was painted with the title and hung across the front of the theatre, fuselage and propellors placed atop the marquee, while the motor and other propellors were used inside the lobby. On the opening day of the picture he held a special showing for the airport force and in return received a fine letter from the commandant. Pressing appreciation from the men and praising the excellence of the production.

Slepyan is one of two brothers who operate the Sheridan Theatre and the above is his first contribution to this department. It is evident that he knows how to make the right sort of contacts when the opportunity arises and we hope he will send along other accounts of his activities.

VOGEL GETTIER BUSY PROMOTING BIG TIE-UP FOR HIS CIRCUIT

Vogel Gettier, city manager for Fox theatres in Sedalia, Mo., has been working out a corking tie-up between houses on the circuit and the State Fair, an event held every year at Sedalia.

He has arranged for other theatre managers to hold local beauty contests, with winners to participate in a free trip to the Fair and enter the main contest for the state title. The Fair Commission has gone for the stunt in a big way, even to the extent of honoring Gettier with a Commissionership for letting them in on the idea.

We'll pass along further details of the above just as soon as we receive them, but for the information of those who may be able to start a similar move in the near future, we believe we're on the right track when we state that these stunts are generally put over with the aid of local merchants. Advertising has to be paid for and we know Vogel is not standing for any when he can get a storekeeper to sponsor a goodlooking contestant and pay his share of the cost of the beauty show.

This one looks like a great set-up for any circuit with a house in the town where a fair or similar event is to be held. We will await with interest complete details of the plan.

HENRY SANTOS HAS BRAND NEW THEATRE IN HAWAIIAN ISLES

From 'way out on the island of Kauai, city of Lihue, in the Pacific ocean, we are advised by Henry G. Santos, of the Tip Top Theatre, that the reason we haven't heard from him lately is because he's been very busy supervising the construction of a brand new house.

And here's a picture of the front of the new theatre, fellow Round Tablers right before your eyes. Henry has moved out of the old Tip Top into a house practically double the capacity of the old one and modern in every respect. In appointments, he tells us, the theatre compares with most any of the two or three thousand seaters in this country. And Santos ought to know, for he had wide experience in them before moving over to the Hawaiian Islands.

When Henry wrote us he sent along greetings, Merry Xmas and a Happy New Year, and while these may have been a trifle late we're going to go him one better and send along our greetings for next Xmas and New Year now—just in case he has to supervise the building of another new house. However, we will hope to hear from him again in the meantime concerning what he is doing to sell his shows.

STILLMAN PROMOTED A POPULAR AMATEUR REVUE WITH SCHOOL

Both local newspaper and high school organ, "The Dickinsonian," recently published glowing accounts of the "Dickinson Follies of 1932," an amateur show promoted during May by William A. Stillman, manager of the Ritz Theatre, Jersey City.

The papers wrote of the show as one of the best amateur events ever held in the city and gave credit to Stillman for his untiring efforts in the matter of pruning off the rough edges. Dancing, skits, songs and other entertaining numbers featured the event.

Apparently the town, students and all concerned got a big kick out of Stillman's "Follies" and he is to be congratulated for making such an unqualified success of the occasion. We venture the opinion that his efforts will be well reflected at the box office in days to come.

McCurdy's New Division

J. J. McCurdy, formerly manager of the Hippodrome Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, has been placed in charge of the RKO division embracing houses in Pittsburgh, Akron, Youngstown and Cleveland. He replaces John Firnkoess.

EDWARD STOFFER NOW AT MARCY AND DOING A LOT OF HARD WORK

The last time we heard from Edward Stoffer he was in charge of the Stadium Theatre, but recent information discloses that he's now at the Marcy, one of the Randforce houses over in Brooklyn, N. Y.

The accompanying photo dates back to when he managed the Stadium and shows a kiddie parade and bally arranged in connection with "Huck Finn," proving beyond a doubt that stunts of this kind can still be pulled where there's a will.

Activities at the Marcy include a tie-up with Lifesavers (arranged by Monty MacLevy) for distribution of 3,000 envelopes containing a sample of the confection; distribution of a neat little folder cutout in the form of a taxicab, with cut of Cagney and snappy copy inside; the promotion of bookmark style heralds with ad of "Goody" shop on one side and theatre copy for "Delicious" on the other; a plug for Saturday matinees among school students by way of card, which, along with 10 cents, admitted holder, and use of the familiar card with "red spot" (you know, if it turns blue you see a doctor; if it doesn't, see the picture). He also made a drive for Spring trade by having front of the theatre dressed with pennants, etc. Special heralds were issued for the occasion.

Stoffer is one of a number of active men on the Randforce circuit and we're mighty glad to hear from him again. Keep up the good work, Bob, and let us hear further about your work. This one may be a little late getting into print, but if you could get an eyeful of the material that comes into Club headquarters, we're sure you would understand why we're a bit tardy.

When selling "So Big" out in his territory, M. R. Blair, manager of the Regent Theatre, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, waged a poster campaign that soon let the whole town in on what show was due for appearance.

He plastered several trucks with huge "So Big" posters and also made use of all available poster space in suburban districts. In addition, he painted all empty store windows with appropriate copy, play dates and name of theatre.

In spite of the smallness of his lobby he made it very attractive by using large cutouts and 14x17 frames with scene stills from picture, proving that a food display can be accomplished with minimum space.

RUTHE PLUGGED JOE BROWN PICTURE WITH MOTORIZED BALLYHOO

Word of a ballyhoo made by Ray A. Ruthe, manager of the Illinois Theatre, Macomb, Ill., reached this office to late to be included in the "Fireman, Save My Child" contest waged some time ago by Warner Bros., but it's never too late to describe a stunt that brought home the good old bacon.

Everything you see in the accompanying photo was made by Ruthe, except the auto and the regulation hats borrowed from the local fire department. A suit of red pajamas was made for one of the ballyhoo crew and the others wore Joe Brown hats and carried horns. The car was equipped with a real siren whistle and hood, wheels and sides were decorated with cutouts and banners. It presented a spectacular appearance as it ballyhooed its way through 20 odd towns, arresting the attention of all and even causing the cattle to stop, look and listen. All the noise that could be made was extracted from the various accessories.

Trade had been considerably below normal at Ruthe's house, but he advises us that the above bally brought the box office up to a record-breaking take for the engagement. We're sorry that the material arrived too late to submit it among the regular entries and hope this will not deter him from sending along other news of his activities.

CIRCUS STUNT HAS STRONG APPEAL FOR CHARLES S. EDWARDS

Like Charles S. Edwards, manager of the Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas, many Club members have attended a circus and seen the "Spider Girl," and listened to the barker explain that " this living head without arms and body was captured 90 miles from land or water," etc.

Charles has had this gag filed away for use on a picture it would fit, but since none has come along recently, he's shooting it in for the benefit of others. Here's the way he doped out the gag after going backstage and looking it over:

The illusion was apparently constructed by building six or seven steps, top and bottom exactly alike, and the fitting of a highly polished mirror in the top step at a 45-degree angle. The mirror reflected the lower steps, making a duplicate set and giving the effect of 12 steps instead of six. The top of the mirror should be covered with some sort of blind or stops to completely hide the edging and aid in the carrying out of the illusion. On top of this is placed a collar of wood to fit the neck of the man or woman used for the display. This set of steps should have side walls so that the top mirror (covering blind) appears to be only for support of the head. And, of course, a wall should be built in front about waist high so that the top wall will reflect the same as bottom wall. The subject may be masked, with an usher in attendance to bark the story. Soft lights will help the display.

Well, there it is, just as it was set down in Edwards' letter, and we hope that those who may be interested in this gag will be able to follow the plan outlined above. There's a picture coming along with new product called "The Invisible Man" (U.) and our associate down in Pilot Point thinks that the display would be a corking one to use.

MAC WATTERS TURNED CARPENTER AND BUILT FINE 24 SHEET STAND

It may be a bit late to offer exploitation stunts on "Frankenstein," but L. T. MacWatters, of the New Essex Theatre, Tappahannock, Va., secured such good results with a sign he constructed for this occasion that we've got to set it down in print.

Mack was due to play the picture on a Monday and Tuesday, his two weakest days, and in order to start something he got out his hammer, square and saw, some nails, etc., and built a 24-sheet stand on the lot next door to the theatre. The 24-sheet pictorial he put on the board one week before play-date carried a large head of the "monster." Holes were cut in the board directly in back of the eyes and paper pasted over same. Then a 75-watt lamp was placed behind the eye and a piece of red gelatine paper between the lamp and board, giving a striking effect at night time.

At any rate MacWatters advises us that his receipts on this picture were about 250 per cent in excess of any previous Monday and Tuesday and attributes a good sized portion of the increase in sales to his board. It only cost him $10 and he's passing the idea along in case some other Club member may yet have to play this picture, or, perhaps, adapt the same idea to some similar poster.

A BROADWAY SMASH!

Mayfair's Jungle Marquee Responsible for S. R. O. Business on Times Square!

IT IS claimed among knowing showmen in New York film circles that the strikingly unique marquee display constructed for the Mayfair Theatre, where "Bring 'Em Back Alive" has been hanging up pre-depression grosses, is directly responsible for attracting a major portion of the extra-fine business this picture has been enjoying since it opened.

Since work began on the largest simulated jungle ever built for a Broadway showhouse, or elsewhere as far as this writer knows, pliable-necked Manhattanites passing Longacre Square have been engrossed in its construction. It was designed by Terry Turner and made by Messrs. Messmore and Damon, with 25 men working for three weeks on the display. The front of the theatre and the lobby were transformed into a jungle background, and in the realistic atmosphere some 20 animals, reproduced to life size, were motorized so that they moved automatically with life-like action. The group included an elephant, a rhinoceros, a tiger, a giant bear, an ape, a gorilla, a huge python, a panther, a crocodile and a leopard. Squeals of the cat animals and the roars and snarls of others added to the realism of the scene.

The ushers were dressed in African helmets and khaki shorts, further contributing to the atmosphere of a hunting expedition. The lobby was disguised as a clump of jungle foliage, with the box office enclosed in a bamboo hut. The two photos reproduced in this page, while not at all doing justice to the realistic effect, will give readers a fair idea of the outside displays.

The balance of the advance exploitation, advertising and publicity campaign, mapped out by Robert F. Sisk, RKO advertising chief and his force, including Terry Turner, S. Barrett McCormick and Martha Wilchinski, featured a number of result-getting activities. This portion of the work consisted of a newspaper animal coloring contest, department store and sport store displays and a cooperative newspaper publicity campaign.

The animal coloring contest was arranged through a tie-up with the Daily Mirror and ran for 20 days. The animals chosen for reproduction in the paper were copies of those appearing in the display advertising, thereby maintaining direct connection with the film. A daily story, about a half-column long, accompanied each drawing. Six-sheet posters heralding the stunt were carried on all newspaper delivery wagons. Valuable awards and guest tickets were offered for the best examples of coloring.

Frank Buck's second book, "Wild Cargo," came off the press simultaneously with the arrival of the film, which resulted in arrangement of cooperative window displays with the Womrath Book Shops, Lord & Taylor's and Gimbel's. Buck appeared at several stores for the autographing of his book and a layout of stills and equipment used by the expedition was moved from store to store during the campaign. A number of well known sport stores tied up with the picture by using windows for displays of picture stills, portraits of Buck and hunting paraphernalia.

Buck was also featured in two broadcasts over the NBC networks, the first being held two days prior to opening, with a group of New York schoolboys interviewing the hunter and dramatization of picture highlights by studio players. The following evening Buck was interviewed by Raymond Ditmars, head of the Bronx Zoological Gardens. Both programs were of 30-minute duration.

As on other animal pictures opportunities for exploitation appear to rest with the showman as far as limitations are concerned. Practically all of the stunts executed in New York can be duplicated on a smaller scale in other cities, where traffic problems are not near so great. Schools, natural history societies and other organizations can all be contacted and numerous tie-ups for essays, reviews and other gags can be cut over by enterprising managers. RKO has prepared an elaborate 12-page press book, newspaper size, which contains many helpful suggestions.

MINIATURE AIRPORT MADE A GOOD LOBBY DISPLAY FOR MILLER

A foyer display of a large showcase containing a miniature airport was the means of attracting a lot of advance attention on "Lost Squadron" for L. Miller, manager of the Ashland Theatre, Kansas City, Mo.

The small photo shows how the interior of the case was arranged, but will hardly do justice to the attractiveness of the display on account of its size. The hangar was made out of mat board and title of picture was painted on top. The field was made of fine sand. The white portion in lower back portion is another piece of mat board and represented concrete for the take-off of the several miniature planes parked there. The dirigible, suspended by invisible thread, planes, fuel trucks and erecto set for mooring mast, were all promoted from a neighborhood hardware dealer, who, subsequently had considerable demand for the little planes. Three 11 x 14 photos were placed at the top against a blue background and at the bottom two billboards carried cast of picture, playdate and credit for the hardware dealer.

A glance at the original photo shows that the display described above was compact, attractive and well arranged, and as far as cost is concerned it must have set the theatre back very little.

IMPROVING YOUR NEWSPAPER ADS!

By KEN LONG

The theatre name, or signature cut, is a most important part in an advertisement. It is desirable that it be designed to attract the immediate attention of the reader, and yet not detract from the rest of the ad.

Great care should be used in designing a sig cut. The lettering, whether black on white, or white on black, should be clean and clear cut. Once a style is adopted, the basic design should never be changed. It is through the adherence to a specific design that the sig cut will eventually have the same identity in your town as has, for instance, Coca-Cola or Goodyear the world over. In other words, through the continuous use over a period of years, the signature cut establishes a trade-mark value, whereby at a glance, the THEATRE will immediately register in the reader's mind.

This being the case, it is not practical to incorporate as part of the signature cut, slogans, address, telephone number and such institutional information which changes with changing conditions. In fact, it is really an advantage to type-set this information in the proximity of the sig cut as it will stand out in contrast to the theatre name.

The cut should be sufficiently flexible to lend itself to a variety of positions in the ads, and for this reason, a cut less than the full column width is desirable. It should also be designed to take up as little depth as possible, without, of course, interfering with the readability and design.

From daily use, the sig cut often becomes nicked and ragged looking and it should not be used in this condition. Keep it in good shape by having the newspaper re-cast it FREQUENTLY.

Tom Arthur in Charge

Consolidation a short time ago of the Cecil, Palace and Strand theatres, the latter Blank houses, has placed Tom Arthur at the head of all Mason City, Iowa, theatres with exception of the Iowa and brings to a close a rivalry which has existed there for several years. Clare Mosher, formerly assistant manager of the Cecil, will have direct supervision of the Palace and Strand.

PRESTON FEATURED REALISTIC FRONT

When Lew Preston, manager of the Ridgewood Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., and supervisor of other Randforce houses in his zone, played "Tarzan, The Ape Man," an atmospheric front contributed largely to the successful week's engagement of the picture. Note the attractive arrangement of stills, posters and atmospheric accessories. Incidentally, Randforce men do not buy any finished displays. They construct everything themselves.

BILL LEVEY IS STILL GETTING HIS STORIES IN LOCAL NEWSPAPERS

That William ("Bill") A. Levey, manager of the Beacon Theatre, Port Washington, L. I., and one of the Club's distinguished Regional Chairmen, still has the knack of extracting front page and otherwise space in his local newspaper, is evidenced by a couple of clippings we have at hand.

One of the stories was headed "Motion Picture Council of Port Washington" and called attention to occasional lateness of the preview film lists recommending certain pictures many of which are current or forthcoming at the local theatre, thereby making it impossible for the newspaper to carry data on a picture playing at the time. It then went on to state that frequently the theatre showed a program, part of which was suitable for juniors and part for adults and advised patrons who wished to take children to call the management in order to ascertain starting time. The last two paragraphs boosted the current attractions.

On the strength of a Paramount Pictorial containing several hundred feet of scenes taken on Clyde Eddy's Colorado River expedition, Levey secured front page space for photograph and caption on Eddy. The caption carried name of theatre, mention of the reel and playdates.

We're glad to hear from Bill Levey again after a short period of silence and trust that some other Club members confronted with the same conditions regarding the publishing of previewed lists of pictures will find same instrumental in securing a similar story. Levey is constantly thinking up some little scheme to keep the name of his house in public print and from our observations he does this most consistently. And it's those consistent plugs that count, we think everyone will agree.

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

CUTTING EXPENSE (Illustrated Above)

Now, for an effective way to cut down the light bill. After many years of research with the kind cooperation of all the big shots in the business, I have perfected a simple way to cut down the juice bill. I realize as well as you do that there are several places around the theatre where light is necessary. But why not attach a mirror to your lobby light as picture No. 1 shows and let it shine light into your office? This mirror idea will save you from 15 cents down per month instead of using the 10-watt globe you now have in your office.

Please do not go off half-cocked on the above idea. Do the job right. Don't pay Woolworth a dime for a mirror. If you are any good as a theatre manager you should be able to promote the mirror. Take Picture No. 1 to your local power company, tell them just what you plan to do. Maybe they will furnish the mirror. (Then again, maybe they won't.)

Picture No. 2 shows one of the greatest inventions ever perfected for cutting down carbon expense. Take a tomato can (pork and bean can won't work for this purpose), punch a small hole in the bottom that will allow water to drip out in small drops. Next fill the can with water and hang it in the lamp house over the carbon. The small drops of water falls on the carbon, keeping them cool so they won't burn up so fast. (Patent ought to be pending.)

Take a peep at picture No. 3. It shows how to avoid the expense of buying brooms. Take a couple hundred of those orders, commands, bawling outs, that you receive by mail from headquarters, insert them in a clamp with broom handle attached to the clamp. You can get at least 10 minutes' sweeping service out of a broom of this sort. Of course, 10 minutes isn't so much service for 200 leaves. But, why let that worry you, even if you only got five minutes of service out of them. You've got enough on hand to last you three years, haven't you?

It is a great pride of mine that I am able to invent things like the above. I like to pass them on to others who have more time to make them work. Again, ideas like the above may be the means of causing some one to get a promotion or maybe a vacation—without pay.

Don't get the impression that I am a tight guy just because I offer suggestions for cutting expense. I figure that every little thing helps. For instance, if you put the above ideas to work and the big shot gives you another 20 per cent cut that will be money in headquarter's pocket. See?

"GUY"

HAROLD C. LEE STILL ON THE JOB SELLING SHOWS AT BATH, N. Y.

It's been some little time since the Club has been informed on activities of Harold C. Lee, manager of the Babcock Theatre, Bath, N. Y., but we've been able to pick up a few notes about him and are able to let his friends know that he's still carrying on at the same old stand.

He's been busily engaged putting his house in order for the summer and has everything spick and span, even if he did have to pull down the icicles on the marquee when a cold wave hit town a short time ago. A thing like that might happen to any Round Tabler.

Just as soon as we can get a line on some exploitation work turned out for the Babcock by Lee we'll shoot the information along. Incidentally, we hear that his public is quite pepped up on musical shows and that this kind of picture is scarce. What to do about it, etc. . . . Page Hollywood is the only thing we can think of right now.

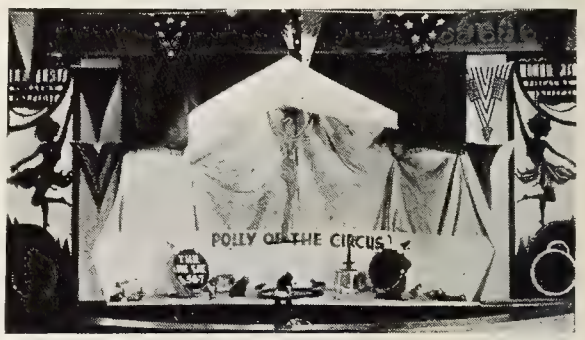
Notice to Members:

PLEASE be sure to notify the Chairman of any change of address.—THANK YOU.

BOLE AND VIDAVER SOLD NEW PICTURE BY POLICE TIE-UP

A special preview for all members of the California Bay Counties Peace Officers Association resulted in some splendid police cooperation and much extra publicity on "Radio Patrol" for Manager George Bole and Publicity Manager M. S. Vidaver, of the RKO Orpheum Theatre, San Francisco.

Main effort was concentrated on police angles and the local chief gave the theatre some real cooperation. The department's radio cars were instructed to park in front of the theatre at regular intervals during the entire engagement of picture and a 40 by 60-inch enlargement of the chief's commendatory letter to Universal was used as a lobby exhibit. The chief also endorsed the picture in his regular weekly radio broadcast.



To keep the radio police steamed up and add to word-of-mouth publicity, department announcers were instructed to broadcast the following message to all radio cars during the run: "Calling all cars—all cars—all men—Radio Patrol—the first motion picture to show the part you fellows play in law enforcement—is showing at the Orpheum this week."

To all appearances there is much public interest in the radio cops, the new branch of law enforcement, and we believe that most departments will offer the same spirited cooperation obtained by Bole and Vidaver. At any rate, your police tie-up is a natural on this picture and many splendid exploitation stunts should result. We trust that other Club members will submit their methods of selling this attraction.

DAVIES RIGGED LOW COST DISPLAY WHEN SELLING CIRCUS FILM

Showmen who still have to play "Polly of the Circus" may be interested in a cheap but effective display made by Harry Davies, manager of the Lefferts Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The tent effect you see in the accompanying illustration is nothing more than one of the old banners stored away at the theatre and properly draped to suit the occasion. The circular base was made from a barrel hoop, or any piece of moulding will serve the same purpose. Animals, clowns, etc., were promoted gratis from local stores. The cost was approximately one dollar.

The snapshot we have at hand to illustrate this display is rather shallow for reproduction in Club columns and we doubt that it will do full justice to the display itself or the attractive silhouettes on either side. However, it will suffice to get across the idea, and even if you have played the picture mentioned above, perhaps the same scheme can be applied to another of similar theme.

WE OFTEN WONDER

By LOUIS SYLVESTER

We'd like to answer this one for Sylvester, but we are afraid that only time will do that. However, it will be interesting to note the box office reaction to the tax question. Ask us some more, Lou.

ATMOSPHERIC FRONTS AIDED SHAFFER SELL TWO RECENT PICTURES

Displays of various accessories of airplanes and autos were effectively used by Gerald Shaffer, manager of the Luna Theatre, Lafette, Ind., when selling "Sky Devils" and "Crowd Roars."

The small photo shows results obtained with a marquee display on the former picture, much credit for same due to the efforts of Assistant Manager Reddish. The airplane wing and fake fuselage were lighted by a 500-watt spot at night time and could be seen for several blocks. Parts were obtained from a local airport and the title letters on wing were chiseled out of beaverboard, no cutawl being available for this work. A foyer display consisted of a shadow box with title and dates, in front of which were suspended two model American and German 'planes in a manner to represent actual combat. Photos of many fighting 'planes were placed below this display.

For "Crowd Roars" he promoted a dirt-track racing car, four silver cups and one large marble and bronze trophy, the latter valued at $2,000. The car was placed in front of the theatre one week in advance, with banner plugging the picture. It was also driven around town during playdates. Mr. Frederickson also secured a window tieup with a sporting goods store in connection with the display of cups and pictures of the 500 mile race, secured from a local lad who won the big event in 1927. This picture played at the Mars Theatre, another house in the Fourth Avenue Amusement circuit.

Shaffer is one of the Several Club members contributing interesting material from the ranks of his company and we hope he'll keep up the good work. We will look forward to hearing what he is doing to boost summer trade.

Dickinson Changes

Recent changes in the ranks of Dickinson theatre managers in Kansas-Missouri territory include the appointment of Harry Wren as manager of the Dickinson at Chillicothe; the transfer of A. B. Cantwell from Chillicothe to Marceline, Mo., and the transfer of John Moulder from Marceline to Ossawatomie, Kas.

ROSENTHAL AT NIAGARA FALLS!

Morris Rosenthal, until recently manager of the Jefferson Theatre, Skouras house in Auburn, N. Y., has been appointed manager of the Strand Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y.

He advises his friends that the Niagara continues to fall the same old way, just the same as when he and the Missus spent their first honeymoon at this mecca of newlyweds. The pair will make it a second one this time, says Morris.

DRASTIC CHANGE OF POLICY FOR SUMMER MADE BY ROSENTHAL

Instead of getting weak-kneed and closing down for the hot weather months, Jake Rosenthal, manager of the Iowa Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, resolved to offer his patrons a real honest-to-goodness incentive to attend. The following message was circulated via the medium of a mammoth Western Union telegram:

To Every Man and Woman in Waterloo,

Hello Summer!

Beginning June 5 we offer our mammoth 2 For One policy for June, July and August only. Eddie Cantor sings "Tomatoes Are Cheaper"; Jake Rosenthal says, "Prices Are Cheaper! Who can afford to stay at home afternoons—2 For 25c—Evenings. 2 For 35c—Sundays, all day 25c. America needs to keep happy as never before. You can do it by getting the Iowa habit and seeing the best motion pictures at one-half the price. Two For One. Save Your "Mon." Ain't we got fun? Prices are the only thing be reduced. The quality of our entertainment will remain the same. Keep Rosy with Rosenthal!

We'll be anxious to hear how Jake Rosenthal's sweeping two-for-one for the summer months turned out at the close of the season, and we predict that the results will be interesting. He is sure to pick up patronage which never before attended his theatre, and it is logical that he should retain a fair percentage of the new trade when the advance goes into effect. Even if he succeeds in only holding the majority of his regular trade during the summer, it's quite an accomplishment.

MacKrim, manager of the Lasky Theatre, Detroit, Mich., recently used a bally on "Hatchet Man" that attracted plenty of attention in the business district of his neighborhood.

Five days prior to opening he had two ballyhoo men dress in Chinese costumes, one carrying an axe such as used in the picture. When a crowd would gather the axeman would lean the other Chinee over a tree stump and bend his pigtail in position for striking; in fact, it might appear as though a beheading operation was in process. The victim at that point would jump up and run from one store to another in the district, the Hatchet Man on his trail.

A special beaverboard front with Chinese and English lettering, a hand-painted head of Edward G. Robinson, and cutout figures of Chinese, were also used to dress entrance and lobby of theatre. Ten thousand pink folder-heralds were given wide distribution throughout the district.

Mac sent along some snapshots of the Chinese hatchet man stunt, but all three are much too faint for reproduction. Next time, maybe he'll see that we get close-ups, or use a larger and more powerful kodak. We're glad to hear, however, that his efforts on the above-mentioned picture yielded such gratifying returns. By the way, Mac, how is the business of "socking" coming along? Will you make that Olympic team?

BLAIR MADE DRIVE AMONG STUDENTS IN SUMMER UNIVERSITY

One of the first guns fired in behalf of summer trade by Merle R. Blair, president and general manager of the Regent Theatre, Cedar Falls, Iowa, was the sending of blotters to all students taking the summer course offered at a local college. The coolness of the theatre was stressed in the copy which read, "Let the Cool Sea Breezes from our Arctic cooling plant help you relax, to forget these warm evenings, to enjoy our shows." Mention of coming attractions followed with bottom line reading, "Every Seat a Cool Retreat at the Regent." Two small cuts also plugged the cool idea.

He also used a throwaway a short time ago on "So Big" that was in the form of a "Western Telogram." This "Telogram" was folded twice and announced an "Urgent Message" on the outside. Inside it was addressed "To Every man and woman in Cedar Falls," and went on to list the fine points and cast of the picture, playdates and best regards of the theatre management.

DAVE DAVIDSON IS TRYING OUT STOCK IN DETROIT HOUSES

The May 31st issue of "Motion Picture Daily" carried a front page box headed "Trying Stock With Films" and went on to state that Publix neighborhood de luxe theatres in Detroit were trying out a new gag to increase trade by presenting a three-act play between the first and second shows. A stock company was recruited in New York and it was planned to route the show from one house to another.

So, lo and behold if we don't get a note from our old friend and able showman Dave Davidson to this effect: "Results very satisfactory. . . . Sunday and Monday broke terrific publicity and reviews on the stage page . . . let's see what happens."

So we'll wait and "see what happens," as Dave suggests, and maybe he'll find time to gather up the details of the campaign and shoot them in to headquarters, if it pans out as well as it appeared to be doing at the time we last heard from him.

BLUMENTHAL'S SWELL BALLYHOO!

One of the Club's old time contributors, Harold Blumenthal, comes to life again and this time from the Liberty Theatre, Elizabeth, N. J., a house he's managing for the Skouras Brothers. He sends the Club two photos, both of which are herewith reproduced as graphic evidence that this Round Tabler has been turning out his typically attractive work.

One of the photos, as you will readily note, shows a sidewalk bar used for "Wet Parade." Beer kegs flank either side of this relic of the past and the enthusiastic expressions on the bystanders almost lead one to believe that the bottles and decanters contained the "real McKoy." An attractive sign was stretched on two uprights and scene stills were tacked on ends of kegs. Other familiar accessories, such as a brass rail, non-tippable cuspidor, sawdust and cigar stand, served to carry out the idea. The lead line of copy on sign read: "Can America Enforce the Prohibition Law?"

The other photo shows a float-ballyhoo constructed for "Explorers of the World," as the bannered portion of the truck plainly points out. Some weird looking figures of animals, presumably made of papier-mache, were placed on the platform and surrounded by jungle atmosphere. An elephant, alligator, gorilla, hippo, ox and a native bushman completed the ensemble. We imagine these were obtained from a local taxidermist or prop man.

Without a doubt both of the above displays attracted a lot of attention over in Elizabeth. Blumenthal is passing them along with the hope that they may prove of service to others. Now that he's back again on the active list, we'll be looking forward to receipt of other material in the near future and we won't be disappointed either because past records show that "Blumey" is one dynamic show-seller.

Club Index for Month of JUNE

Herewith we list the many items of exploitation, etc., which appeared on the Club pages during the month of June. By keeping this issue close at hand you can refer to it whenever necessary as a means of locating some particular form of show-selling. We hope our members and readers are finding this service useful. The Club would welcome suggestions to improve it.

DON'T GET PANICKY!

Don't Get Scared at the First Sign of Poor Business; That's the Time to Work Your Hardest!

By RICHARD L. MOSS
R.K.O. Orpheum Theatre
Los Angeles, Calif.

I THINK one of the faults of present-day theatre operation, as it is being practiced by many managers, is the instantaneous panic experienced as soon as business takes a drop, or the opposition makes a move. There is no reason in the world why the self-same methods that brought business into theatres a few years ago will not do the same today. I will admit that the methods can be improved on and that the efforts expended in the execution of these methods can be increased, but the basic ideas are the same, and radical deviation can mean only one thing, panic.

De Luxe—or What? ?

I have never seen a successful theatre run by radical methods; I have never seen a really successful theatre resort to some of the outlandish brainstorms that are now being passed off as showmanship. Giveaways of every description; prices cut beyond reason; ridiculous policies; and nonsensical stunts. Several years ago the only theatres that resorted to any such methods were called shooting galleries. Now, we're making shooting galleries out of our once proudly named "de luxe" theatres. Theatres that are cluttered up from the moment you get near the lobby until the time you get seated, and even then, when you think you are going to see the show that you paid to see, suddenly find yourself annoyed by a mess of trailers, etc. Is there anything "de luxe" about that? Is there anything "de luxe" about selling merchandise in a theatre; displaying furniture, automobiles, hardware; and goodness knows, what else? Does an operation of this type increase the respect of the public for the theatre business? Are they apt to feel that they are "going out" when they find themselves surrounded by such cheap tactics? Is the atmosphere encountered in some of today's theatres, conducive to "having a good time"?

When a prize-fighter gets panicky, he's licked. When an army gets panicky in battle, it's routed. When a business man gets panicky, he's through. That's what is happening to many of the present-day theatres. They've been hit a little, and they just don't know what to do. They've forgotten all about what used to bring people into the theatre, and they are trying to devise new means. But, they're not working on the right angle. If they want to devise new means to increase business, let them find ways to increase the prestige of the theatre. Let them find better entertainment. Let them find new ways to advertise; and a better code of courtesy, service and house management. Isn't that what always drew people into theatres? Isn't that what brought this business from a despised, ill-reputed peep show to the fifth largest industry of the country? We've got the greatest medium of entertainment the world has ever known. And what are we doing? We're dragging it down; making it look cheap in the eyes of the public; and making them believe that our show is not good enough and that is why we need artificial stimulation.

Don't Spoil Good Pictures!

We've been yelling for the studios to turn out good pictures. But, what is being done with the good pictures? They're being saddled down with an extra feature; an opportunity night; a country store; or some other such idea. The good pictures are being made to look cheap. Isn't it a crime to program a picture like "Arrowsmith" with the giveaway of a set of dishes, the kind that you see in the bargain basement? But, it's being done.

I don't mean to ridicule, but it is very evident that the methods that are being used by a majority of the theatres are not in keeping with the standard and prestige of the industry. Henry Ford isn't giving away a full-dress suit with every car and Tiffany is not giving away two strings of pearls for the price of one. They're trying to present the best article they can for the best possible price. They're advertising in every possible way and trying to hold a certain amountof importance around their product. And, it is the same with every other important industry in the country. Why should theatres resort to cheap methods?

Try Showmanship!

Of course, this business has its problems. But, I don't think they're going to be solved by dishes, groceries, double features, or radical policies. The basic idea of successful theatre operation is to get the best show possible, advertise it in the best possible way, and then please the patron after he buys a ticket.

Let's keep our eyes open, our minds clear and our feet on the ground. And, not get panicky.

(NOTE: This article was contributed by Dick Moss while he was managing the Paramount Theatre in Los Angeles. Before it was ready for publication he had moved to the Orpheum Theatre in the same city. Dick originally was located in the east with Loew's, moving to the coast as an assistant manager for Fox West Coast. He left that outfit to join the Hughes-Franklin Circuit until H. B. Franklin took over the two Publix houses.)

Great Lakes Notes

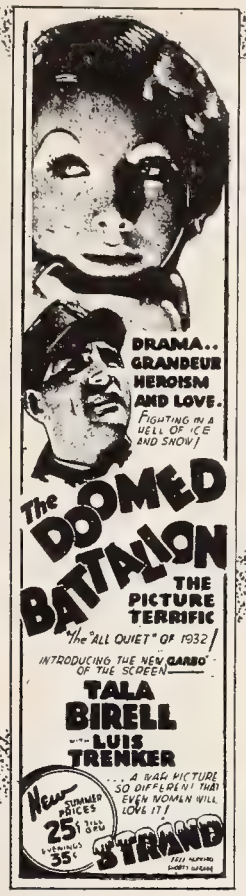
S. D. Weinberg, publicity director for Great Lakes Theatres, Inc., Youngstown, Ohio, advised us a short time ago that Mel Caldwell, formerly of the Metropolitan Scenic Studios, had entered the managerial end of this business and replaced Edwin Oliver as manager of the West End Theatre, Uniontown, Pa. Oliver was called to the home office to await another assignment.

Great Lakes has also acquired a 20-year lease on the Hartman Theatre, formerly a legit house in Columbus, Ohio, which will be operated on straight motion picture policy until further notice. This addition marks the twelfth link in the chain, of which Harry Schwartz is president and general manager.

NEW GANGSTER FILM WAS PUT OVER BIG BY WALLY CALDWELL

Wide distribution of "reward" heralds, extensive use of paper, a striking window display of gangster weapons in a leading store window and radio and newspapers, were highlights of an effective campaign waged recently on "Scarface" by Wally Caldwell, manager of Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, Ohio. He was assisted by Charles Baron, of the U. A. exploitation department.

Special exploitation included 5,000 "Scarface" tabs distributed in residential section; 1,500 "Scarface" $5,000 Reward heralds wrapped in packages of 60 agencies of dry cleaning company; 500 reward heralds in packages sent out by local laundry; 1,000 reward heralds in packages sent from retail markets; 200 special "Movie Classic" half-sheet cards in 200 retail agencies' windows, tying up with "Scarface" magazine story; 100 copies "Move Classic" rubber stamped and distributed exclusively to doctors and dentists; 100 half-sheet parking cards in parking lots garages and double-faced on trolley poles; 200 one-sheets in merchants' windows; 15 public drays placarded on both sides; special three-sheets in important neighborhood locations; 100 taxi streamers on all cabs of a leading firm; special window in department store, and 24 displays of 14 by 17 deluxes mounted on theatre backs in special downtown locations.



The newspaper campaign included a tie-up for best answers on "What Shall the Nation Do With the Gangster," special cuts, art work and stories in dailies and mid-week editions of all papers; special stories in 18 rural newspapers in 15-mile radius; special day before opening stories and the regular run of effective display advertising.

The accompanying photo shows a collection of firearms obtained from the city police department, depicting the evolution of gang weapons up to the present. Over 40 models, including the gangster's favorite "typewriter" (machine gun) were displayed in a huge window in the heart of the city.

No doubt at all that Caldwell put over his usual wide and effective assortment of exploitation and advertising he has at his command in Toledo. Many of the suggestions will be practical for scaling to suit local conditions and we're obliged to Wally for making it possible for us to pass the information along the line.

TERRY McDANIEL, former manager of the Fox Theatre, Spokane, Wash., has been made district manager of the Spokane-Yakima-Wenatchee-Pendleton territory. He will continue to make his headquarters in Spokane.

ANOTHER PAGE OF NEW CLUB MEMBERS

EARLE WILLBERN hails from 'way down South in Seguin, Texas, which, he tells us is "the biggest little city" in the whole state. Okay, Earle, we'll do just as you ask us to do—"keep our eye on the Seguin postmark in the mails"—and you can shoot along any ideas you may have right now. Willbern manages the Palace Theatre in his city and we're mighty glad to include his name on the Club roster. We hope he'll do his full share in the task of keeping these pages alive.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. CLIFFORD BOZMAN is the assistant manager of the RKO Palace Theatre in Columbus, Ohio, and we are also in receipt of his application for a seat around the Table. Cliff has the job of helping Thomas Davis sell shows and just as soon as he wins a promotion to the next rung up the ladder we'll include his name among the full-fledged members of this organization. In the meantime we will be glad to have him keep in touch with headquarters.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY G. BLACK is the managing director of the Palace Theatre, a big RKO house up in Albany, N. Y. He is another newly elected member of the Round Table Club and we're mighty glad to add his name to the ever-increasing list of showmen in this organization. He operates on a vaudeville and picture policy seven days per week and from what we know about Albany a manager has to be on the job to grab his share of patronage. We trust Black will let us know what good show stunts he's using to bring the folk around his way.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MILTON S. HARRIS is the advertising manager of the Fox-Grand Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., and we are also glad to record that he, too, is a newly elected Club member. We've heard about Harris' work before and now that he's joined the gang it is our sincere hope that he'll find time to keep us informed on what he and his associates are doing to boost trade at the Grand. Look through that pigeonhole, Milt, and see if you can locate one of those trade-building gags you used. The rest of the fellows will be grateful for any suggestions you can shoot along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

STAN KRUEGER has joined the ranks of the many assistant managers now listed among the members of this organization and we are glad to announce this connection. He has the job of helping Ray OConnell operate the RKO Orpheum Theatre out in St. Paul, Minn., and filling the 2,200 seats of that house is enough to keep any two fellows busy. We hope that Both Krueger and his chief will do their share toward sending in contributions to this department.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

F. M. A. LITCHARD is the manager of the Morse Theatre, Franklin, Mass., and his name will be familiar to many readers of this department. Only an issue or so ago we carried a story about how he promoted a big cooking school stunt over in his town and some time ago we printed another story of his entitled, "Brick and Mortar." The only fault we can find with Litchard is that we don't receive as many of his articles as we'd like to have. However, now that he has signed up as a regular Round Tabler, maybe we'll hear more from him.

LAURENCE J. DORAN manages Smalley's Theatre up in the ritzy little town of Cooperstown, N. Y., where William Smalley, head of the circuit, makes his headquarters, and we're also glad to record that he's another new Club member. This department has been fortunate in the past in having several of Bill Smalley's managers for contributors, for they're a live bunch of men. The season must be in full swing up Doran's way right now and he should have plenty of material to make up some interesting yarns for his fellow members. Shoot them along, Laurence.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY SCHLINKER does publicity and exploitation for the RKO Orpheum Theatre down in the city of New Orleans and he's another new member in line for introduction to the other boys in this large organization. Welcome to the Table, Harry, and let's hope you'll come through with a lot of stories which will help your brother showmen put over their shows. Remember, that's the spirit of this Club—you help them and they'll help you.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MILLARD M. BLAETTNER is located in Dayton, Ohio, where he manages the RKO Colonial Theatre, an 1,800-seater running straight through the week. He tells us he's glad to join our showman's organization and that he has a spot already picked on the wall to hang his certificate of membership. We're just as glad to have him with us and hope he will do his utmost to keep up the good work of his fellow Round Tablers. Shoot along some show-dope, Millard.

There's a lot of enthusiastic Round Tablers out in your territory. Give them all our best regards when you meet and remind any of the delinquents that headquarters will expect to receive the usual contributions to this department.

GEORGE BOLE is another RKO man to hook up with this organization of live showmen and he manages the Orpheum Theatre in San Francisco, Calif. A cordial welcome is also extended this new Round Tabler and we will hope to see much evidence of what he and his staff are doing to put over the big vaudeville and picture house out on the Coast. We'll be on the lookout for some good show-selling gags from this member.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARL A. WOLEVER manages the Paramount Theatre down in Newport News, Va., and he's another Publix man to join this hustling group of showmen. Meet the rest of the fellows, Harl, and send along some evidence that you intend to do your part in keeping this section full of interesting yarns on show-selling. Just what is taking place in the business down your way this season? Drop us a line and tell us what methods you are using to boost the box office during the hot weather.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ROBERT G. HAINES has the job of assisting George Bole with the management of the Orpheum Theatre, big-time RKO vaudeville and picture house out in San Francisco, and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in this Club. Okay, Robert; you're in the army now and we'll look forward to the day when we can send you a regulation certificate. Both you and George Bole ought to have plenty to do selling shows for your big house and we'd like to know what's going on. Tell your chief to keep in touch with us; and if he's too busy, take care of the job yourself.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HENRY W. BROWN hails from down in Greensboro, S. C., where he manages the Imperial Theatre for the Publix-Kincey Circuit. He's another Publix man to pull up a seat around this ever-growing Table and we're mighty glad to have him with us. Greensboro is a new town for him, as he was located only a short time ago at the Colonial Theatre in Winston-Salem, N. C. Just as soon as he finds his way around town we know he'll tell us what he did to start the ball a-rolling.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ALVIN K. LAVENDER is the assistant manager and publicity director of the RKO Hollywood Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, and he's next in line for introduction to his brother showmen. He helps the well known Louis Hellborn run this first-run house and with the sort of coaching he's receiving it probably will not be long before we'll be sending this new member a regular Round Table certificate. Action resulting from a change of picture twice every week should furnish this department with many good show-selling tips—and we'll be looking for them.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHANNES BRANDS SCHOTBORGH sends us an application of membership for the Round Table Club from the city of Willemstad, State of Curacao, Dutch West Indies. That makes it perfect as far as the Dutch Indies are concerned, as we now have representatives in both West and East Indies. We hope that Johannes will do as well as E. R. Lim over in Samarinda, and send us some interesting photos and stories about how shows are sold over in his country.

TECHNOLOGICAL

DO YOU WHISTLE AT WORK?

By F. H. RICHARDSON

"The man who whistles at his work is apt to be a good workman." One of the secrets of success is contained in that little quotation. If a man is found cheerful, smiling, whistling or singing on the job, and is found that way frequently, that man is happy in his work. He cannot be happy in his work unless he has very close interest in it, and the man who has interest in his work is at least far more likely to succeed in it, and to do his work well, than is the man who has no interest except quitting time and payday. Think that over for a little while and see if you do not conclude it is just about right.

We have mediocre results in sound and pictures in a great number of theatres because of the fact that in the projection room of these theatres are men who regard their work merely as something they are compelled to do in order to live.

Pride in Results

In other theatres we find men who, while perhaps they would rather be out making whoopee, don't regard their work with repugnance. As a matter of fact they find considerable pleasure in it because they are interested in its problems. They are interested in and have pride in producing superior results. They are interested in the many very real marvels contained in the equipment they are handling. True, they do not perhaps make very rapid advancement in life, but in the end such men at least have a far better chance of getting ahead than has the clock watcher; also it is pretty nearly a cinch that those who pay in money at the box office of the theatre in which this manner of man is employed are going to receive better value in amusement and entertainment than will patrons of the theatres in which men having small interest in their work are employed.

If they receive better value it automatically follows that the theatre will receive larger patronage than it would were the value received by the patrons less. Surely it requires no argument to support such a proposition as that, and if we grant that what has been said is logical, then it also automatically follows that careful, intelligent work in the projection room of the theatre means additional revenue at the box office.

Value of Good Projection

It should be interesting to dig under the surface of this argument just a little. I believe no attempt has ever yet been made, by myself or any one else, to express the value of high grade projection work in dollars and cents, although it seems to me that the thing should not be very hard to do.

As an example for consideration, let us assume the average admission price of a theatre to be 25 cents. Let us also assume its average daily attendance to be 2,000. Suppose, for example, that the Projectionist in one theatre is able to and does produce such excellence in sound, and such sparkling beauty in the picture itself, that the audience receives a 25 per cent greater value in entertainment than do the patrons in another theatre in the next block, in which projection work is not what it might and should be. This is surely not at all a difficult situation to find as between two theatres. We will not discuss the reasons for the failure in one of them, except to say that it may be attributable to lack of knowledge, or to carelessness on the part of the Projectionist, or to poor equipment or to equipment in a poor state of repair, or to faults in the auditorium itself, or to a combination of any or all these various things. We are not at the moment interested in fixing the responsibility, but in considering the result.

Proceeding upon the reasonable assumption that the box office will, when a space of time is considered, be to a large extent influenced by the excellence of the show, the thing in this case figures out somewhat after this fashion. Admission price is 25 cents. The show in the theatre with faulty projection has 25 per cent less entertainment value. Twenty five per cent of 25 cents is six and one quarter cents. Patronage per day 2,000, six and one quarter cents times 2,000 is equal to $123.00, therefore we surely are entitled to believe that the show in the theatre having the better projection is, in this case, worth $123.00 more to the box office than is the .show in the other theatre.

Suggestion to Managers

Now, gentlemen, please do not get the idea that I am assuming these figures to be anything more than approximately accurate under the set of conditions assumed. I do, however, firmly believe that, taking an extended period of time, say one year, it would actually work out just about on that basis, assuming however that the two theatres book productions of equal merit.

I would respectfully suggest to theatre managers who are inclined to "save" money by considering cheapness in wages as against projection skill and knowledge and ability, or who "save" in overhead expenses by forcing the Projectionist to let the equipment fall into a state of dis-repair, that they examine very carefully the argument I have laid before them.

After 27 years in this business I am more firmly convinced than ever that high-grade work in projection, or in other words that beauty in the projected picture and excellence in sound, has very large box office value. Years ago, when I advanced that argument I was just laughed at. Such an idea was regarded as foolish almost to the point of being silly. Today it is acknowledged and admitted by every high-grade exhibitor or theatre manager that I know anything about.

This writer lays these matters before you in an honest effort to secure for them your careful consideration, to the end that Projection, both in sound and picture be improved and box office and income of the theatre be brought up to as near as possible a maximum.

Answering a Question On Rear Projection

From Herman T. Happy, Traverse City, Mich., comes the following: "Will you please tell me how to make a screen for rear projection? I expect to project my picture from the rear. Also what size lens would I have to use? I am starting an Airdome between two buildings. The projection room will be in the alley."

Well, that's a new place for a projection room. It is possible to project pictures through cheese cloth, but if you must make your own screen the best thing is drawing linen. The seams, however, will bother you. You will have to sew the linen and the seam will show more or less. I do not know where you can get drawing linen of suitable width. Better apply to some big dealer in architectural supplies in Chicago. I think on the whole, everything considered, you will perhaps do well to be satisfied with a screen made of thin cheesecloth, but you must set your projectors lower than the screen and shoot up a little or the audience will see the bright spot of the lens.

It has been such a long time since I have had such a question asked—this sort of thing is seldom undertaken these days—that I can not remember all the details through the years.

If you want to purchase a transparent screen I would recommend you to take the matter up with the TransLux Daylight Picture Screen Corporation, 247 Park Ave., New York City. It will cost you considerable, but you will then have a really good screen.

As to the focal length of lenses, I can offer you no advice, not knowing either the projection distance or the size of picture you propose to have.

JENKINS' COLYUM

DEAR HERALD:

Theatremen tell us wherever we go that their Saturday night business has dropped off to 50 per cent, or less, than what it has formerly been. In some cases they claim Saturday night to be their poorest night in the week. We have heard a number of reasons advanced for this condition.

H. E. Hoag of the Momence Theatre at Momence, Illinois, gives it as his opinion that the decline is due to the financial condition of the farmers, since Saturday night is usually considered farmers' night, and since but few farmers are found in his Saturday night crowd.

Frank G. Kresler of the Palace theatre at Renssalaer, Indiana, says the is unable to get action pictures for his Saturday night crowd that will draw the farmer business, and without action pictures but few farmers can be interested. Both Mr. Kresler and Mr. Hoag have fine theatres and both in towns supported largely by farmers and the Saturday night business heretofore has been their life-saver.

Our theory is that when it takes over a bushel of wheat or corn to buy a theatre ticket, even at the reduced admission prices, neither the farmers nor merchants are going to buy many tickets, and that's what it will take at present prices of wheat and corn and present reduced admission prices.

A. F. Gravel, of the Gravel theatre at Goodland, Indiana, gives it as his opinion that an automobile seat appeals to the public today more than a theatre seat, since they are more often seen in auto seats, and A. F. is a pretty close observer of humanity. He's in favor of the towns offering a premium for vacant auto seats between the hours of 7 and 11 each evening.

We doubt if this would bring the answer because he has been offering all kinds of premiums for occupied theatre seats until he has exhausted every known remedy, and still they prefer the autos to his theatre.

Too Much Vinegar

He claims that selling entertainment is like selling any other commodity, if the customer wants syrup and you sell him vinegar he is apt to get sore about it, and he claims he has had to substitute too much vinegar, which has soured the public stomach. A. F. is a funny guy; we always like to call on him. He always tells us a lot of things we had surmised but were not just sure about. There is one thing we do know, and that is that too much vinegar fills auto seats instead of theatre seats.

We have made a resolution that hereafter we are not going to miss Monon because of A. W. Howard, who operates the Strand theatre. We called there two years ago and found him out of town, which was tough on both of us.

Mr. Howard is our kind of an operator because he says he will keep his theatre open until the town goes back to the government in spite of T. & H. W. and we like that kind of grit, and it takes grit nowadays, and Mr. Howard has it. We stayed and visited with him longer than we intended just because he's that kind of a fellow. When Mr. Howard throws up the sponge it is going to be mighty tough on the rest of 'em, but he isn't going to throw it up.

About as fine a theatre as we have ever seen in a town of its size we found at North Judson, operated by John Woytineck and William Murphy. This theatre has been in operation for about 18 months and is, considering the financial condition of the country, still doing a fair business, which we attribute particularly to the excellent sound the theatre has, but most likely it is due in no small measure to the popular management. We had a delightful visit with Mr. and Mrs. Woytineck and North Judson is another town we have placed on our permanent visiting list.

Victor Woytineck is opening a new house at Culver. The engineers were there installing Western Electric sound when we called. It takes nerve to build and equip a new theatre these days, but Victor has it, and here's hoping he wins.

Boosting Buck Jones

Buck Jones ought to hand it to E. S. Rees of the Gem theatre at Plymouth. E. S. has organized a "Buck Jones Ranger Club" consisting of 125 members, 30 of which are girls, and the club is growing every day. E. S. hopes to reach the 200 mark before he is through. The club has a constitution and by-laws, elects its own officers and formulates rules governing the club and provides penalties for any infraction of the rules. It is similar in personnel and operation to the Boy Scouts and functions very similar to that organization. If you have any doubts of the popularity of Mr. Rees just ask any boy or girl in Plymouth. And if you think that kind of an organization isn't an asset to a theatre you are badly mistaken.

If Buck Jones will do the right thing (and we know he will if his attention is called to it) he will write Mr. Rees, care of the Gem theatre at Plymouth, Indiana, and thank him for the interest he is taking in putting him over with the Plymouth kids, for he has sure put him over.

The biggest asset a theatreman can have is a stand-in with the kids of the community because they are the REAL advertisers, and when a kid is for you the WHOLE family is for you, pa, ma, and sister Susie, and in this case Uncle Jake and Aunt Hannah are strong for E. S. too, and that makes it pretty nearly unanimous. Here's a tip for some of the other of you theatre boys. better follow it up.

We had a very delightful visit last evening with Mr. P. C. Schram of the Orpheum at Kalamazoo. He operates two theatres in Kalamazoo, the Orpheum and the New. There are three other theatres there owned by Mr. Butterfield of Detroit. One being closed at this time. Mr. Schram says business is off considerable from what it once was but he is getting by and doesn't seem inclined to make much fuss about poor business but does do some kicking about poor pictures, which seems to be a universal complaint.

We found Mr. Schram to be mighty well posted on what the industry needs to bring it back to normal and a little of his judgment might go a long way toward that end. His knowledge of what the public demands in entertainment might be helpful in the production field. Kalamazoo, like all other communities, is feeling the depression, but if celery will cure it she ought to be 100 per cent normal soon, for there is enough celery grown around Kalamazoo to feed the world, and, Gee Whiz, how we love celery!

Good Pictures Demanded

The Reveria at Three Rivers is another of the Butterfield circuit of houses, and is operated by Mr. L. H. Warner. We had a very pleasant visit with him. Mr. Warner says the time was when the theatres and merchants told the public what to do, they could sell them almost anything in reason and make them like it, but today it is different. If they don't like what you have to offer they tell you to go and pick out a deep place in the lake and jump in. He keeps three or four suits hanging in his office for emergencies.

We would like to be optimistic and report business as being good but truth is stronger than fiction and we choose to tell the truth as we find it, and the facts are that we have yet to find the first spot where they reported business anywhere near up to normal. It may improve. We hope it does.

Include Films in Venice Art Exhibit First Time

The International Exhibition of Art, opening on August 1, at Venice, Italy, for the first time in its 40 years, will recognize the cinema as a distinct art form this year. An "International Artistic Cinematographic Exhibition," backed by the city of Venice and the Italian Ministries of Education and Corporations, will be held at Lido.

Outstanding films by leading producers, both American and European, will be shown each night until August 15. Prizes will be awarded, and each group of films will be preceded by conferences of leading cinematic authorities of various countries. American committee members include: Hiram S. Brown, R. E. Cochrane, Earle W. Hammons, Carl Laemmle, David Sarnoff, Joseph M. Schenck, Nicholas M. Schenck, E. R. Tinker, Albert H. Warner, Harry M. Warner and Adolph Zukor.

Story Editor Believes No Lack of Material Exists

There is no shortage of good story material, but on the contrary, the supply is plentiful, according to Mrs. Florence Strauss, Fox scenario editor, in an address before the AMPA at the regular weekly luncheon in New York last week. The fault lies with the fact that the people who do the buying are in less direct contact with material than those handling it, she said.

Walter F. Eberhardt of Western Electric acted as master of ceremonies, introducing Jacob Wilk, Warner scenario editor; Harriet Henry, author, and M. Harpon of William Morrow & Company, publishers. A committee, named to select candidates for office next year, includes: Vincent Trotta, Paul Benjamin, Al Sherman, Charles Barrell, Hal Horne, Ray Gallagher and George Harvey.

New Union Gets Charter

A charter has been issued to Kansas City Local 777, Independent Motion Picture Operators Union, Inc., according to W. V. Anderson, organizer and business representative for Missouri and eastern Kansas. The union is not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and its wage scale is lower than that of the established IATSE local.

State to Use Film at Fair

California plans to sponsor a theatre at the Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago, in 1933, in which will be shown motion pictures advertising the natural wealth and scenic beauties of the state. Theodore Hardee, San Francisco, is in charge of the display.

Horwitz Gets Appeal Stay

Attorneys for Will Horwitz, under sentence of 18 months at Houston, Texas, for conspiracy to evade United States lottery laws in connection with his radio station at Renosa, Mexico, have been granted an additional 15 days to prepare appeal. A new hearing has been set for July 15.

MGM Exchange Head Resigns

T. A. Little has resigned as manager of the M-G-M Charlotte exchange and has been succeeded by H. Margolis. Mr. Little has not yet announced future plans.

FOR PICTURE THEATRES

NOVELTY

Dick Powell
Philadelphia Mastbaum

Dick Powell, formerly master of ceremonies at Warners' Stanley in Pittsburgh, made his bow as master of ceremonies at the Mastbaum and proved to be a versatile and clever entertainer with an attractive stage personality. His clever wisecracking and impersonations of radio announcers were well received. In addition to acting as master of ceremonies and leading the stage band, he played a saxophone solo, sang and welded the various acts into an attractive unit.

Joe Moss & Orchestra
New York Palace

This orchestra has nothing to offer in the way of novel entertainment, relying mainly on the rendition of popular numbers in a fairly pleasing manner. The act is aided fortunately by the Bachelors, a male quartette; a duo, Gracie Smith and Charlie Herbert, and Audrey Marsh. Radio is the band's forte.—H. P.

Lee, Port and Dotty
Detroit Fox

This trio, two sailors and a girl, offers a round of slapstick, gags and dance steps. One bit of comedy that is especially well handled brings the two sailors on the stage with boxes of marshmallows, ostensibly for audience giveaways. One of the sailors does this straight while the other, after making one gesture toward handing out a marshmallow, proceeds to stuff the contents of the box, a piece at a time, into his mouth until a large creamy mass of the candy protrudes from his face like a billowy cloud. The girl, with a fast rhythmic step, helps to give the act a fast finish.

Keating
New Orleans Orpheum

Fred Keating's act is slight of hand; but it's also fast moving comedy, the nimble fingered Keating depending as much upon the swift chatter between him and his assistant, "the great Alexander," as upon his bag of tricks, all of which have been seen before in one form or another. He opens with the fast ones which have the audience on his side at once, works a rather clever card trick with a borrowed cigarette, mystifies the audience and keeps it laughing, winding up with the pin trick, first shown here by the late Houdini. After swallowing pins with a glass of water, he brings them out fully threaded. It still is a dandy stunt and Keating's tactics of impressing the audience with the fact that he doesn't take his work too seriously is delightful. "The great Alexander" also deserves a hand for his gagging.

Nick Long jr.
New York Capitol

Acting as master of ceremonies for this bill, Nick opens with a dance bit featuring novel kicks and spins. He later makes an appearance as a foil for an acrobatic act, providing comedy, finally doing a blackface masked dance. Audience reaction was favorable.—H. P.

Eddie Lowry
Brooklyn Paramount

"Smiling" Eddie Lowry has taken the town by storm. He has been the Paramount's "personality boy" for the past two weeks, acting as master of ceremonies for the stage shows and earning the regard of the audiences for his breezy and happy-go-lucky manner and his own specialties. He sings, dances, gags and best of all he is proving himself a "tonic" to chase the blues away. Looks as if Eddie Lowry will be at the Paramount for a long time.—E. D.

Easter and Hazelton (9)
Baltimore Hippodrome

Two special sets, first a cliff with special lighting, second a fantastic garden. The act opens with full stage and five singers on as American Indians with principals in white posing as hunter and huntress and Indians on cliff. The effect is excellent. The man and girl go into adagio work and finish in pose on cliff. The girl comes on in a skirt dance followed by the man in tap and acrobatic work. Scene two follows with principals doing classic ballroom dances and singers back stage in appropriate costumes. The singers do an operatic number, and all come on for the finale. Good applause carried throughout the performance.

Nellie Arnaut & Brothers (3)
New York Palace

This trio opens with a modern version of "The Merry Widow Waltz," played on three violins, the while going through a routine of dance steps. Then holding their bows between their knees, they offer a violin arrangement of "Lysistrata," closing with an imitation of their brothers' famous bird act. Well received.—H. P.

Arthur "Pat" West
Detroit Fox

As M.C. West ties the acts together in happy style. His routine could be improved by dropping some parts of it, notably those parts which contain localized versions of old and lame jokes. He apes Pablo, the magician on the bill, effectively, and sings a parody on bits of popular songs for a good hand.

Lulu McConnell (4)
New York Palace

Offering a sketch entitled "A Quiet Game," Lulu McConnell renders a perfect chatterbox imitation which keeps the audience laughing throughout. With nice support from her foils, Lulu drew a nice hand for her finale, in which she plays the role of an inebriate.—H. P.

Duval
Baltimore Hippodrome

This young man's specialty is producing silk handkerchiefs apparently out of thin air. He works in a methodical manner with a young girl and male assistant, has a pleasing personality and should click most anywhere. He does not permit the audience's interest in his work to lag for a single moment and his trick of drawing forth dozens of silk pieces from a small tube apparently empty makes a big hit.

Fortunello & Cirillino
New Orleans Orpheum

An excellent tumbling act which puts it over largely with comedy. Both members of the team appear in grotesque makeup, the larger of the two coming upon the stage with a bag, from which the smaller one leaps. Remainder is mostly comedy tumbling, skilfully done and keeping the audience in constant laughter. Some clowning with a piccolo and a clarinet takes well. Entire turn is speedy, funny and deserves better spotting than the opening it got here.

Larry Rich and Band
San Francisco Orpheum

Larry Rich and the Rich Rhythm Band put on an unusual show, marked by jazz of the low down and mean variety, late dance numbers and original arrangements. Larry, who has not gone in for girth control, does a lot of joking. Cherie, who is Mrs. Rich, takes part in the act and there is an interesting master of ceremonies in the person of Miss England Ong, a clever Chinese girl.

Pablo
Detroit Fox

Pablo's first piece of mystification is a business of tearing up a newspaper and restoring it to its original unity. He causes cards to vanish and picks them up again from thin air. He draws lighted matches from his pocket and produces lighted cigarettes with a snap of the fingers. Pablo is dark-skinned and has the suave manner and costume of a South American. All aspects of his act pleased this audience.

DANCERS

Gomez and Winona
Detroit Michigan

As bride and groom in formal steps with occasional adagio touches, this couple is excellent. Another number, even better, is a thoroughly polished tango. They are known as stars of "Crazy Quilt."

Chilton and Thomas
Brooklyn Paramount

Two youngsters, boy and girl, offer the customers pep, versatility and showmanship in their novelty act of dancing and singing. Act opens with girl playing piano accompaniment for boy's rhythm tap routine, which he does on inverted china plates. In a girlish, but pleasing voice, the young girl sings a song about "rain" as the boy keeps up the rhythm of tapping rain in his dancing. Boy then does a most novel tap routine on three graduated stools about two feet in diameter. Act closes with an eccentric and modernized "charleston" done by both performers to a great reception from the audience, who kept applauding until the team encored with a novel tap dance by the boy. This team has one of the most entertaining of dancing acts, and an act that is a show-stopper in nearly every house.—E. D.

Constance Evans

Dallas Palace

This attractive blonde miss is an acrobatic dancer with plenty of kicks—with a variety including front, rear and side kicks with equal versatility and with either foot. She goes through her routine of a great succession of these kicks tirelessly and is plenty pleasing to the eye in her appearance in spangled costume. There is no drag in her act and it is well received.

Eleanor Powell

New York Capitol

This personable brunette, lately featured in Ziegfeld's "Hot-Cha," offers a rhythm tap dance which includes a top-spin tap, this feat being rewarded with a spontaneous reception. In the course of her next routine, Miss Powell performs a Harlem shuffle tap for another nice hand. A long show prevented a complete turn. —H. P.

Raymond and Virginia

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

The young woman of this troupe is plenty limber and allows her partner to swing and twist her into difficult combinations. They are excellent acrobatic dancers and should click anywhere.

Dolores, Eddy and Douglas (3)

Detroit Fisher

Diminuive Dolores gets tossed all over the stage in this. In addition to an adagio routine of the usual order, this act has a sensational finish in which Dolores leaps from a tower in the neighborhood of the borders into the arms of one of her partners.

Myrna Modie

Detroit Fox

This lithe Spanish dancer performs what is announced as a "modernized Spanish dance." Modernization largely consists of absence of clothing.

Rose Marie Carter

Detroit Fox

Miss Carter is a decidedly clever acrobatic dancer whose work here takes the form of a modified Indian ritual dance.

COMEDY

Herb Williams (4)

New York Palace

This comedian has a bag of tricks that stopped this show. A stooge in the orchestra pit waving a baton as Williams tries to sing, arouses a round of laughter, after which Herb appears in a bathing suit of the gay nineties, which provoked another howl from the audience. The public hanging of the stooge by his victim proved a novel surprise, after which Williams offers his famous collapsible piano trick, which is one of the funniest bits in vaudeville. By way of novelty, Herb offers a difficult bit in which he plays "Yankee Doodle," with one hand, "Sailor's Hornpipe" with the other, the while singing "Swanee River." His surprise finish proves a thunderous finale.—H. P.

Ritz Brothers

Philadelphia Mastbaum

Ritz Brothers headed the stage show with a diversified act which was cleverly nonsensical. They made their entrance grotesquely attired as Roman Senators in green, red and yellow. A scene from Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde was converted into a farce and displayed the histrionic ability of the three in a weird and uncanny combination of tragedy and comedy. They staged a take-off of Clarke Gable, Conrad Nagle, John Barrymore, John Gilbert, Emil Jannings and Mae Murray that brought down the house.

Burns and Kissen

New York Astoria Triboro

This comedy act of two men has the audience in a laughable mood for the entire 12 minutes they are on the boards. Their act consists of gags and special lyrics to songs, all of which they put over in a showmanly and entertaining manner. At the show caught they earned two encores and even then the audience would have liked more.—E. D.

Joe Penner

New York Palace

Aided by Max Hoffman, Jr., Penner with his trick hat and laugh is greeted with applause on his appearance and gets a hearty response for his gags. After a comical violin solo, Joe sings a novelty titled "I Got a Great Imagination," with some funny lines. This comedian's efforts were well received.—H. P.

Eddie Cantor

San Francisco Fox

Eddie Cantor, the goggle-eyed comic, famous for the gay lyric and timely wisecrack, "struts his stuff" before delighted audiences at the Fox in a revue built to fit his special talents. He sings, and how he can put a song over, whether it be new or old. One of his songs is a brand new one from his forthcoming picture, "The Kid from Spain" and is called "Ask Someone Who Knows." For scandal about Hollywood this has Walter Winchell backed off the boards. Another is "Making the Best of Each Day." He does some blackouts, tells some stories and talks about himself, his wife and five daughters, all of which makes a hit with the audience.

Allen and Canfield

Philadelphia Mastbaum

This act consisted of dialogue, wise cracking and singing, with Miss Allen playing the part of "Dumb Dora" yet always replying with a bit of repartee a shade wittier than the lead. The audience greatly enjoyed their clever, sparkling dialogue.

Howard, Fine and Howard

New Orleans Orpheum

With a capable straight man and a charming blonde dancer, the low-comedy, eccentric makeup of Howard, Fine and Howard appears even more incongruous and profits greatly by the contrast. The trio, with its slapstick nonsense and vulgarity, met with the audience's approbation from the start and scored a much heavier hand than it did at its last New Orleans appearance when it played the Saenger. The gold cloth drop before which these comedians appear even adds to the comedy effect and the interludes in which the blonde dances and in which the straight man sings "If I Could Call You Sweetheart," were a welcome relief from the eye-striking, face-slapping antics of Howard, Fine and Howard. Act registered strongly on applause; works in one.

Clifford & Marion

New York Palace

Credited with being the original "Dumb Dora," Marie Marion, using Clifford as a straight man, offers a series of dumb answers which drew hearty laughter. Her anaemic-looking posture during the act is comical in itself and Miss Marion makes the most of it. A clean and funny act.—H. P.

Joe and Pete Michon

Milwaukee Wisconsin

These two lads concoct plenty of nonsense for the fans. They clown about as magicians and tumblers, tell jokes and act silly. Most of their stuff is funny and original and should be good for a first class reception in almost any house.

SINGERS

Phelps Twins
Detroit Fisher

This is a close harmony pair. Their first number is strumming version of "Snuggled On Your Shoulder." A later appearance glides them across the stage in a sailboat behind a scrim drop, singing "Dreamer's Bay." The act received a very good hand.

Wynn Wayne
Milwaukee Wisconsin

Miss Wayne is a blues singer who does her stuff in a manner calculated to meet with the approval of most audiences. She sings "Shout, Sister, Shout," "You've Got Me In Between the Devil and the Deep Blue Sea," and "Minnie the Moocher," in delightful style.

Elmer Herling
Detroit Fox

Herling seems to have a fair baritone voice, but his position as background for dance routines here makes it difficult to judge the extent of his ability.

Healy and Cross
Denver Orpheum

Two singers with good voices, songs that people like, and pleasing personalities that project over the footlights.

Hill Billy Trio
Detroit Michigan

This trio gives evidence of having come straight from the Ozarks. Two girls with mandolin and guitar allow their small boy partner to shine with a breathless fiddle and limber knees. The boy stomps and jigs in true Arkansas style. Their numbers include "I Left My Gal In the Mountains," "The Irish Washwoman," "Chicken Reel" and a barnyard dance for which the boy shouts the step changes. They took four bows to insistent applause. Any audience may be expected to respond equally well to this act.

Gracie Barry
San Francisco Orpheum

Miss Barry has a style all her own and specializes in singing those question songs, such as "Was That the Human Thing to Do?" and dolorous numbers like "Too Many Tears." Her pert manner helps put them over.

Beehee and Rubyatte
New Orleans Orpheum

Acts that are finding the going tough should watch this sextet of acrobats and learn what showmanship is. From the first tumble and the first pyramid, there is not a dull spot in the entire routine, not a moment's let up in the excitement and even the pauses to take applause are worked skilfully so as to retain the pace. Supposedly Arabians, the six build pyramids, do cartwheels in furious circles around the stage, back flips, in fact the whole acrobatic bag of tricks, but they do it with a verve that adds immeasurably to the entertainment value and they know when to stop. Act is well dressed in white and appears before a restrained but colorful drop in full stage. The applause was heavy.

The Maxellos (5)
New York Capitol

This act is composed of five clever young men, who offer a routine of flips and other acrobatics which is bound to please any audience. A difficult feat of human juggling is an ace finale. This audience was well pleased.—H. P.

Young China (6)
Detroit Michigan

This troupe of Chinese acrobats offers a wide variety of balance and contortion. One rare spot in the act is a Chinese lad in kimona doing an acrobatic tap dance.

Three Bredwins (3)
Detroit Michigan

This tumbling trio rates with the best. A red-wigged clown shines for his ability to stand a lot of knocking about, his grasshopper performance, a spinning collapse to the floor and rope skipping while he lies on the stage.

Enos Frazere (2)
Baltimore Hippodrome

Full stage with Frazere on all in white evening clothes, high hat and cape and into song and then on trapeze, dropping cape and hat to pretty girl assistant, all with running monologue of jokes that provoked laughs. Did several thrill stunts on trapze that drew gasps and finished with forward drop on swinging trapeze.

Large and Morgener (2)
Detroit Michigan

These acrobats are each shy a leg, one a right, the other a left. They first appear on the stage wrapped up in a voluminous opera coat to give the impression of a two headed man with an extraordinarily wide torso. Their tumbling and hand balances are of the first order. The act ends with a spectacular dive over four chairs finishing with a double hand stand

Chicago

Wayne King and his orchestra is being heard for the first time on the Pacific Coast and in Northwest and Southwest states broadcasting for the Lady Esther company. Extending facilities to make the program extend from Coast to Coast more than doubles the present number of stations taking the program. King, master of syncopation and dance melodies, began his Lady Esther series last September. His own composition, "The Waltz You Saved for Me," is the musical signature by which the young conductor is known. King's interests extend to other fields than music. He flies his own plane, is a student of philosophy and a creditable golfer as well as a musician. Before he entered music he was a certified public accountant.

Rose Vanderbosch, whose piano melodies are heard daily over KYW, is one of radio's most accomplished girl pianists. She has had many offers to make concert tours, but cannot forsake Chicago, the city of her birth.

Nelson Hall, the smiling banjoist, with Gus Arnheim's orchestra, now playing at New Dells, is a great golfer and plays every day to keep in perfect form. . . . Lovely Dorothy Thomas, who sings with Gus Arnheim's orchestra, is taking up knitting. . . . Charlie Agnew and his orchestra are held over at the Edgewater Beach Hotel for the summer and last week opened up the Beach Walk. . . . "Jingle" Joe Parsons, of the National Broadcasting Company, believes the most thrilling scenes he has ever viewed were on the stage at the New York Hippodrome where he was leading basso for six years.

OVERTURES

YASHA BUNCHUK (New York Capitol), leading the Capitolians, offered as an overture selections from "Blackbirds," ostensibly to gather atmosphere for Buck and Bubbles,, headliners on the vaudeville bill. Opening with an ensemble of "I Can't Give You Anything But Love, Baby," the brass take up a chorus of "I Must Have that Man," after which the orchestra plays "Digga Digga Do," ensemble. The violins modulate into the verse of "I Can't Give You Anything But Love," the chorus picked up by the lead trombone with a string obligato, then into an ensemble chorus of this song followed by a trombone solo of a few bars of "I Must Have that Man," a trumpet solo of "I Can't Give You Anything But Love" finally ending in a staccato ensemble. The efforts of the orchestra were well received.

BOB NOLAN (Detroit Michigan), who won an enviable reputation during his extended engagement as M.C at the Detroit Fisher and later as a radio performer, leads the Michigan orchestra in a varied medley entitled "Summer Melodies." He opens with the explanation that "hot" music would not be appropriate to the season. His first number is "Trees" in which Nolan's powerful, unusual tenor voice makes the orchestra quite unimportant. This is followed by a wrangle with the drummer to lead up to the playing of "Crazy People," with the introductory remarks on the seasonal suitability of "hot" music apparently forgotten. Nolan sings again in the final number, "Every Time My Heart Beats." Heavy applause followed the final notes.

CHARLEY PAUL (New York Jamaica Valencia) conducted his fine orchestra in an overture made up of "Operatic Hits,' opening with an introduction of the "Meistersinger" and going abruptly into strains from the "Prize Song," from the aforementioned opera, with the strings and organ taking the lead. The "Quartette" from Rigoletto, played by the brass section, was the most outstanding bit and earned the most applause. Following this, the first violinist offered "Meditation" from "Thais," with the organ and strings lending a soft accompaniment. Overture closed with the playing of "Aida," to good applause from the audience.

DAVID ROSS (Philadelphia Mastbaum) led the Symphony Orchestra in Mancinelli's beautiful overture "Cleopatra." This thematic composition provided a splendid vehicle for the orchestra to demonstrate the artistry and tone coloring of which it is capable and the applause attested to the appreciation of their efforts.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO, EVERYBODY!

A lot of you will be happy to know that Al Salomon, formerly in charge of the organ and slide department of DeSylva, Brown & Henderson is back with the same firm, on the professional floor. . . .

The last of the "Tin Pan Alley" invaders of the "Gold Coast" is back on Broadway. He is Irving Bibo, writer of numerous hits. and it took him three years to finally heed that call of the "Broadway Melody!" . . .

It's definitely been announced that Warner's Hollywood will be opened again in August with Harry Richman doing the "m-cing." A little more propaganda about the coming season, as good as this is, would help a lot of folk to look through that old dark cloud and see the good old sun. . . .

Jack Shea and his Ritzmore Orchestra leave our sunny (?) shore soon for an extended tour of the continent and will be gone a year. They open at the Scala, then on to the Cafe de Paris," etc. . . .

Irving Mills, president of Mills-Rockwell Artist's Bureau is busy in Chicago, in search of new talent. . . . He is plenty happy over the fact that Duke Ellington's opening at the Lincoln Tavern was such a success.

I understand that Ted Mack, who for the past five years has been doing master of ceremonying for Publix in many of their houses, will be director of Bert Lown's original orchestra. . . . Bert is organizing a new one. . . .

Grace and Marie Eline, vaudeville and musical comedy favorites, are booked on the S. S. Paris as part of the entertainment when the boat leaves for Bermuda on July 16. . . . The girls leave for a tour of Europe on September 13 and are making this engagement serve as a vacation and rest before their European engagement. . . .

Although five of the headliners at the New York Paramount in the current stage show are most widely known as stars of George White's latest "Scandals," three of them might rightfully be called stars of the New York Paramount . . . for it was from this stage that they sang or danced their way to fame and Broadway stardom. . . . The three are Rudy Vallee, Ray Bolger and Ethel Merman. . . . S'long. . . .

Replaces Stage Shows

Stage shows were renewed at the Fox Plaza in Kansas City this week, with Danny O'Shea as master of ceremonies. Fox Midwest circuit executives anticipate success with the presentations, since there is only one other theatre in the city offering the stage show. Harvey Hammond, organist, is also featured at the Plaza.

ORGAN SOLOS

MERLE CLARK & ELSIE THOMPSON (Brooklyn Paramount) build up their current solo into an advance plug for the return of Rudy Vallee. The audience apparently enjoyed the singing of songs made popular by Rudy, but it was obvious that they did not enjoy the time, pictures and talk allotted to Rudy in what they consider their own part of the bill. Elsie, as usual, pleased the audience with her own rendition of "I Love You, Believe Me," and Merle came in for his share of applause, but there was a surprising lack of enthusiasm shown to the announcement and pictures of Vallee.

DON MILLER (Detroit Michigan) offers a solo entitled "Organization Spirit." Lines of the lyric of "Was That the Human Thing To Do" are marked on the slide for singing by advocates of various fraternities, orders and creeds. Other numbers are "Dream Sweetheart," "Oh, What a Thrill," "Somebody Loves You" and "Snuggled On Your Shoulder." The solo brought fair response and good applause.

JOE STOVES (New York Jamaica Valencia) presented an original organ novelty this week, in perfect keeping with the most important current event, namely, the National Convention. Stoves titled his novelty "Song Convention." An excellent continuity builds up the song-fest and the entire solo was well sold to the audience. "Nominees for election were the songs "Lazy Days," "With Summer Coming On," "Extraordinary Gal," and "Lovable." It sounded as if the entire audience joined in the singing and it was apparent from the applause that they enjoyed every minute of it.

AL GULLICKSON (Milwaukee Warner) goes German in his organ novelty, which is great stuff for Milwaukee audiences. He offers such old favorites as "Im Lauderbach hab ich mein Strumf Verlorn," "Ach Du Lieber Augustine," "Immer Noch Ein Tropfen," "Ist das nicht ein Schnitzelbank?" "Auf Wiedersehn," and "Zwei Hertzen im Drei-virtel tacht." The latter song was presented in both German and English and the words flashed on the screen for all. The presentation met with a hearty reception from the audience.

HELEN ERNST, JOHN IMMEL, and FRANK ALEXANDER (Oriental Portland) put on a novelty number, the music of the organ being combined with that of two pianos, and made a distinct addition to the screen fare at this new first run house.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

WHEN first announced, Eastman Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative was used chiefly with incandescent lighting. It was found, however, to be equally valuable under arcs. And now cameramen are finding it ideally suited to daylight shots, particularly when it is provided with the non-halation gray backing. Expert in every branch of cinematography, Eastman Super-sensitive "Pan" is an all-purpose negative, the advantages of which are felt all the way from the lot to the screen. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

THE GOLDEN PIG

THE hungry eyes of editorial writers for the metropolitan press, ever eagerly scanning the horizon for signs of new hope and the upturn from the depression, this week discovered it, of all places, way out West in the hog lot. The news comes from the aromatic Union Stockyards of Chicago where more than a seasonal rise in the price of pork on the hoof is being recorded. As the pig goes, so goes the nation. The squealing of the porker at Swift's and Armour's may be transmitted into a golden tinkle at many a box office across the nation.

The "New York Times" grows ecstatic and suggests: "In the middle of the floor of the Stock Exchange there might be set a golden image of the Iowa hog with this legend: 'He led us back to the trough'." And with amazing unanimity of thought the "New York Herald Tribune" avers that Wall Street, when next it can afford a hat, will be doffing it "to the golden shoat, the humble Sus domesticus, rampant in a field of fodder vert."

Which is enough to remind us again that the screen has someway never discovered the glamours of the soil and has never glorified the American farmer, or his daughter. In movieland we have had a plenty of the pioneers from "The Covered Wagon" to "Cimarron," but the heroisms of the hay field and the plow have yet to be recorded.

"THE GRAPHIC" FADES

TO the motion picture's students of the public taste there should be some significance in the fact that Mr. Bernarr Macfadden's experiment in mass journalism known as "The Graphic," founded in September, 1924, has, in the parlance of Broadway, "folded." By some observers it is argued that this merely indicates that the tabloid field of New York has been completely served by "The Daily News" and "The Mirror," but that is hardly the answer. "The Graphic" in the execution of Mr. Macfadden's policies endeavored to plumb mass depths considerably below the intelligence level of either the News or the Mirror. Apparently even the vastness of New York could supply only about 200,000 daily readers in that dim stratum, and obviously the space buyers were not impressed with the purchasing power of that handful. We have had in the various essays of art in the public market many demonstrations of product too sophisticated, too learned, too esoteric; but this is probably the first clear cut case of product too dumb. We are beginning to locate the zero mark.

Certainly no picture press agent would ever venture to send his client to sea in a yacht called the "Myth II." That's confession.

ABOUT WHISKERS

BECAUSE he was so much a showman in his merchandising, it is fitting to make note here of the passing of Mr. King C. Gillette of safety razor fame. He did more for the appearance of America, and the world, than the whole race of engineers and architects, and served a cause against ugliness beyond any school of artists. If you do not believe it, look at the family album. Meanwhile, Mr. Gillette's triumphant war against the male whisker reminds us of another valiant laborer in that field, the celebrated Mr. Sigmund Lubin of Philadelphia. No beard could ever appear in Lubin productions. When a director, Mr. John Ince, as we remember, delivered his picture of "The Battle of Shiloh," Mr. Lubin went into a rage over the appearance of General Grant and ordered a retake without whiskers.

SHORT A NAME

ON the first page of Metro's insert last week we saw the solemn Leo posed as Rodin's "Thinker," seated on the dictionary and lost in reflection, being the while "stuck for the right word." And well he might be stuck, for he was in quest of another term for "short subject." Our sympathy is extended to him and his friends, Mr. Howard Deitz and Mr. Si Seadler, who do the ghost writing for most of Leo's utterances. Man and boy, down half the years of this industry we have been yearning for a better noun than "short" and also a positive piece of nomenclature to denote "non-dramatic" pictures. Suggestions will be given our most profound consideration.

THE VENUS MYSTERY

ONCE again the motion picture has conferred a vast service upon the world of art. For one hundred and twenty odd years, ever since the fragmentary Venus de Milo was recovered from the dusts of antiquity, on the Isle of Melos, there has been ardent debate among sculptors and scholars about what the lady was doing with her missing arms. Now comes Mr. Jack Hess of Paramount Publix with a gorgeous illustration, done in oils, to spread the glory of Miss Marlene Dietrich in "Blonde Venus," indicating that the Greek beauty was really posing for a picture while clutching at a sliding sable wrap with her left hand. It is part of a spectacular Paramount product announcement pertaining to the coming season. In the same array is an exciting portrayal of the Four Marx Brothers in "Horsefeathers," done in lawless line and color by Nat Karson, but we just can't get our mind off the Venus de Milo, or is it Miss Dietrich?

SOAP AND SUCCESS

by TERRY RAMSAYE

A CERTAIN reassuring optimism about this America and tomorrow is inferred in the action of the Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Company the other day in announcing a cut in the dividend rate to permit maintenance of the national advertising budget, which is running somewhere above $1,000,000 a month. Mr. Charles S. Dewey, vice-president, said that it was held to be a service of the best interests of the stockholders to keep the company's products before the public, even at a sacrifice of profits.

¶This led Mr. Ralph Hendershot, financial editor of the New York World Telegram, to remark that "Many of our foremost concerns have raised their estimate of advertising materially and, like Colgate, would rather cut dividends than expenditures for that purpose. And an examination of their income accounts would seem to indicate that their policy is sound."

¶Which reminds us of the remark of Mr. Kenneth Collins of R. H. Macy & Company who recently observed that "if we budget ourselves for a reduction of business we are almost sure to succeed."

¶From all this we may extract some observations, thus: that even a soap company has respect for a stockholder; that a financial editor has seen success where there is faith; that the premier department store merchandiser sees grim humor in the pessimists of today.

¶Presently when the clouds of gloom disperse and the dusts of depression settle, it will be found that whatever business there is will be in the hands of those attending to it, rather than the vainly repining stand-pats clutching at the spectral memory of gala days of what-used-to-be. The motion picture is a business of today and now. Its dividends of tomorrow will be paid on what is done today and now, not on the decomposed valuations of yesteryear. Salvaging dead values is a form of the junk business. Today's constructive potentialities are in the clearly existent public demand for entertainment of merit for the price, demonstrated every time there is such an offering.

¶The motion picture industry has cried a lot over spilled milk, and in the crying has also spilled a lot of the beans. The public and the amusement demand upon which this industry was built is still here, vaster by far than in the days when this became a great industry.

¶It would seem that the soap maker's idea, to make soap and tell the public about it, might be a good policy for the screen today and tomorrow. When soap makers recognize that among their greatest assets is a public state of mind created and maintained by advertising there should be encouragement for the motion picture, which consists entirely of a state of mind based on shadows canned in film weighing about seven pounds per ten minutes of screen time. The motion picture job is a selling job, and much of the selling will have to be done inside the industry.

Pioneer Executive Advocates Integration Corporation to Work for Both Producer and Exhibitor in Reaching Public

All Pictures and Theatres Would Be Graded; Film Would Show in All Houses of Class at One Price

MR. W. W. HODKINSON, whose interesting discussion of a plan of motion picture merchandising is herewith presented, is one of the industry's most widely experienced executives in distribution. While he has not been active in the industry since his sale of his interest in the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in 1924, he has continued an interested observer of the progress and adventure of the business.

It is a coincidence of some special interest that Mr. Hodkinson's plan, which embodies a deal of the radical ideas current today about distribution, should come forth within the week that it is announced that two important distributors will book their product to selected first runs only in chosen territories where conditions indicate it as a profitable departure. It is to be recalled that in the dim past of General Film, Mr. Hodkinson set such a movement in motion with a refusal in certain territories to serve daily change nickelodeons, and set out on a path of selection of the better product for better prices in better theatres only.

Mr. Hodkinson became in 1907 an exhibitor in Utah and very shortly a branch manager for a Chicago exchange system, becoming presently an exchange owner himself, selling eventually to the General Film Company. In the efficiency days of the late Mr. Jeremiah J. Kennedy of the Patents Company and General Film, Mr. Hodkinson became a distribution executive in the West with extraordinary success. From that post he evolved beyond the ultra conservative General and entered into distribution on his own account with the arrival of the feature era.

Mr. Hodkinson was the founder and organizer of Paramount as a distributing company handling the products of Famous Players, the Lasky Feature Play Company and other producers, all subsequently absorbed into the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Comment on Mr. Hodkinson's plan, as set forth here, from readers of MOTION PICTURE HERALD will be transmitted to him for discussion. —THE EDITOR

By W. W. HODKINSON
As told to LEO MEEHAN

Complete revision of the present archaic system of production, distribution, exhibition and exploitation will have to be effected, and very promptly, if the investments of stockholders in the big motion picture companies are to be saved.

Based upon my twenty-five years of practical experience and observation, dating from the nickelodeon days to the present, I have evolved a simple and workable plan by which the industry can soon be returned to a profitable basis, irrespective of generally unfavorable economic conditions.

And this can be done by a process of evolution, rather than revolution. The feasibility of my plan can be demonstrated by trying it on a very small group of pictures. It can be done by one company, or several. Naturally, if it works, other pictures and other companies will follow in. So I am not proposing, as many might suppose, to scrap existing machinery, fire all who now have jobs, or anything else which is radical. Yet, in a very short time, I believe, the bankers, the stockholders, the responsible executives and all others concerned would realize that present methods simply will not do, because they are costly, wasteful and inefficient.

Public's Interest First

Primarily, we are viewing backward the importance of interests in the business. The first interest should be that of the public; second, the industry; third, the individual. As it stands today, in most cases the individual is considering himself first, the industry second and the public last. Yet it is the flow of the public's money through the box office that supplies the power which turns the wheels of production and supports the industry generally. The conserving of this money flow, and the augmenting of its flow, by sound methods, is the immediate and pressing problem of the industry. With the industry satisfying the public, and conducting its operations in an orderly, economic manner, the competent individual will be properly taken care of.

Promotion experts and glittering personalities have served well in the past, to gather the capital now invested as well as to increase the money flow sufficiently to pay returns on the investments. However, it always has been the novelty of the business, the ease with which the public could be induced to spend more and more, that has created a sufficient flow of money to successfully float even the mistakes.

But the reaction has set in. The promoter is through. The engineer, the architect, the organizer must step in. It is not sufficient to say that the "showman" is supreme, that he may sell his promotions to the bankers and his pictures to the public. Let us by all means have "showmen" to stimulate the flow at the box office. But let us also be sure that the channels that carry the money from the theatre box offices to the studios are sound and do not permit the contents to leak out or evaporate on the way.

There were sound economic reasons for most of the mergers and combinations in American industry. There are equally good reasons why there should be an integration of motion picture industry at this time. I am proposing a method by which this industry can be coordinated and work together in its present form, rather than proposing anything in the way of ultimate consolidation which might come later.

There are always factors peculiar to an industry which should determine the form in which integration, or merger, should take place. Railroads, for example, working through the interstate commerce commission, have working agreements for their own and the public's convenience, so that any office of any railroad will accommodate the passenger or the shipper over any line he may wish to use. While the railroad systems retain their corporate entities, they still work for the common good of all railroads.

The telephone has gone even further, due to its peculiar nature and has merged hundreds of small local phone lines into one vast operating system.

The reorganization of the motion picture industry, which must be brought about by the present executives, by the bankers if the present executives do not accomplish it, or by stockholders' committees if the bankers neglect the matter, should take heed of the peculiar nature of the motion picture industry and plan accordingly, that they may secure results comparable with those secured through organized effort in other fields. One could not blindly follow the organization form of the railroads, nor of the telephone company, for reasons which are peculiar to the motion picture industry itself.

Yet pages could be taken from the experiences of either, and from others. If all telephone exchanges can be brought to function together to better serve the public, and at an increased profit to the company, so should all the theatres in the country be required to work together toward the same end, better service to the public in order to secure greater returns.

Here the analogy ends. Telephone offices are parts of one company. Theatres need not be; they can work together, and yet be separately owned. Furthermore, they must get together to insure profit. Otherwise, how are we to get away from overproduction of poor factory pictures, wasteful and inefficient distributing systems, over-building of theatres, competitive costs of "presentations," the peculiar condition whereby a picture is brought into a city to be shown first at $1.50, next at 75 cents, again at 25 cents and finally for 10 cents or 15 cents, probably as a part of a double bill?

Many people today fail to see a new picture when it is fresh and novel in its appeal, because they know it can be seen later for less money. By the time it is shown for less money, it has lost its appeal, and the potential patron has become intrigued by a new one, just released. So he may never go to see it at all.

No Great Obstacle

The picture industry must offer to the public the most appealing program at the most attractive prices and in unmistakable channels, to the end that the greatest gross revenues are obtained for the least possible expenditure, and in the shortest space of time. There is no great obstacle today in the way of the industry functioning together under a uniform plan to the end that:

1. Motion pictures shall be released and available for public showing nationally and simultaneously at a fair and uniform price, a price calculated to bring the box office the greatest average revenue per picture per person in the shortest possible time.

2. That such pictures under such methods, through a procedure of selection, will be of different grades and classes, to be shown in houses of correspondingly different grades and classes, to the end that a picture shown in one class of house will never be shown in another class of house. That the price of admission to see a certain class of picture is and shall remain uniform throughout the country. That the public may be advised in no unmistakable terms: "Here is a picture, of a certain class, at a certain house, at a certain time, at a certain price. It is now available. You see it now, or never."

W. W. HODKINSON

This is what the picture business needs if it is not going to die of dry rot and degenerate back to serving as a chaser for vaudeville shows, as once it started. Such a procedure does not prevent us from having inexpensive pictures in inexpensive theatres for poor people. It does not prevent us from furnishing "filler" pictures to persons who want to put on vaudeville or other theatrical entertainment. But by reserving the better theatres to houses showing pictures only, we could show them at reasonable prices that would bring them within the reach of practically everybody.

The foregoing presents only the surface of the problem. But once a plan for uniform methods of operation was arrived at, the successive steps could be taken for unification and improvement without unduly disturbing or interfering with the existing organizations or changing of the capital structure of such organizations.

Circulation as against distribution of motion pictures is the keynote of the Hodkinson plan. At first glance the two words might seem to mean pretty much the same thing. But it is like the story of the colored gent who asked his white boss the difference in meaning between "satisfied" and "contented." The boss said they meant about the same thing. "Not to me," says Sambo. "I'se satisfied another niggah is kissin' mah wife—but I ain't contented!"

Distribution, as defined by Mr. Hodkinson and practiced today, takes the positive print for exhibition purposes to the exhibitor, and largely leaves to him the problem of getting an audience for it.

Circulation, as Hodkinson would have it, would take the motion picture directly to the public through positive prints, theatre seats, advertising, established price scales, simultaneous release, all previously arranged for, and all designed to deliver an audience at the exhibitor's door the minute he received his print. Mr. Hodkinson explains:

Present distribution activities are based upon the wrong conception: that the function of production should control all activities within the industry. Every producer originally established himself in competition with the then existing order of things, by the recognized merit of his product. Always he complains about the obstacles to his progress, which usually were control of the marketing or distribution function by his producer-competitors, or others.

Corporation Proposed

While struggling to succeed against obstacles, he concentrates on individual productions, instead of mass production. He knows that by superior quality alone may he obtain a market. Inevitably, after he becomes established through this individual effort, he thinks in terms of increasing his output so that he, too, may control his own distribution channel. He then gets into the factory methods, and his product slips. In time there are too many producers of too much unworthy product. Theatres must be acquired, because even the control of distribution does not insure a presentation to the public. After a time there are too many theatres, too many distributors, too many producers, too much product. That is the present situation. Add to it the depression era in which we are now, and the fact that there is no control through which retrenchment may be accomplished, and we have the picture to date.

To insure proper circulation, a corporation should be set up for the express purpose of integrating the motion picture industry, or of such parts of it as can presently see the advantages of such integration. For present purposes I shall refer to it as the Integration Corporation. This Corporation would furnish the producer the track upon which he would send his pictures to a successful market. For the exhibitor, the Corporation would be the machinery for assembling the public and filling his theatre seats for him. The Corporation would do for each of them (each producer and each exhibitor) what neither could possibly do individually, and what the industry as now constituted has not been able to do collectively.

Let us first establish the ownership of the Integration Corporation. Except for stock issued for management or promotion, which should be nominal, the entire issue, which should be common and of non-par value, should be set aside to be subscribed to by the important interests which now own the assets of the business, upon a basis of participation in proportion to their present security values.

This corporation would require little capital of its own. Its purpose would be to make effective the capital already invested in various competitive units, by establishing even a keener competitive situation insofar as production of pictures is concerned; but with a consequent improvement in quality, decrease in waste and stimulation of public attendance through simultaneous release after tremendous exploitation on a national and unified scale.

To make this explanation brief, let me outline the status of the industry and its methods after the Integration herein contemplated had been completed, rather than my trying to describe in detail the steps by which the industry could gradually be shifted from a distribution basis to a circulation basis. During the changeover process, the selective principle contemplated by the plan would be completely applied in production and exhibition to insure continuance on a profitable basis of those producers and theatres first subscribing to the new methods.

After the Integration Corporation was functioning fully, it would become the one big marketing medium for the entire industry. All producers would have the privilege of using its facilities upon a uniform basis. Any producer could submit any number of productions. These would be classified according to merit by the best methods of classification devised. They would then automatically go through theatre circuits of corresponding classification, without any of the selling or distribution methods now employed. Instead of these methods, enough prints would be utilized, shipped directly from and returned directly to the laboratories to provide for simultaneous releasement at all points.

Now, with prints available in this manner, a synchronized and simultaneous advertising campaign, corresponding with the estimated merit of the picture, would be launched to accompany it. The coordinated advertising campaign would be the joint effort of the producer of the picture, the Integration Corporation staff of advertising experts, the advertising agency used by the Integration staff and the advertising and other staffs of newspapers which would benefit tremendously by this immense volume of paid advertising. In effect, the newspapers of the country would become the show windows of the industry, just as the department store now uses them to supplement its own show windows.

Theatres of different classes, using different classes of pictures, would charge corresponding admission prices. The prices of pictures of a given class would be uniform throughout the country, and would be so advertised. The showing would be exclusive; the picture would not return, nor later be available. This point would, of course, be prominently mentioned in the exploitation campaign; but it would not be long before the public would understand the new system, and be guided thereby. Caught by the enthusiasm of the big publicity drive, they would go to see the picture immediately, at a standard and reasonable price, because they would know they had to see it then, or never.

In order to create the greatest possible gross revenue, the industry should function substantially as a unit. This is not only possible, but absolutely necessary. There are inherent reasons within the motion picture itself why a unified industry, properly directed, cannot only serve itself better, but also serve the public better. There are reasons why the great telephone industry took the form of integration, and represents the greatest industrial achievement the world has ever seen. There are equally strong reasons why the motion picture should take on an integrated form. In fact, there are more reasons.

Proper integration of the picture industry would offer an opportunity for individual production of pictures, to go to the public, solely on merit. This, as opposed to factory production, would stimulate creative effort in picture production such as has been heretofore unknown.

Proper integration would, after the exhibitor had been properly rewarded by the revenue from audiences which would be supplied him under a proper plan of circulation, pass on to the Integration Corporation immense sums of money with which to reward producers of worthwhile pictures. Earnings of the Corporation, after rewarding producers to a greater extent than would otherwise be possible, would compensate handsomely the vested interests in the industry for giving up what they may now regard as their "preferred" though admittedly precarious positions.

There is plenty of everything to insure success in the operations of the motion picture industry today.

Proper methods would increase the revenue at the box office; would turn over the production capital several times as rapidly as at present (a picture would be liquidated within a few weeks, instead of a year or more). It would not be necessary for any producer to make arbitrary numbers of pictures in studios seeping with politics, in order to keep an equally illogical and expensive distribution organization competing with a number of equally expensive distribution organizations. Theatres kept open at a loss would ultimately be converted into stores or garages, when it became established that the film outlets established to give free and continuous flows of quality product would not reach to them.

It makes no difference whether I do these things, or whether someone else does. I am willing to contribute my knowledge and experience if it will benefit the industry. And I am perfectly willing to stand aside if someone else has a better plan. But it is apparent to me that whether the present custodians of the industry do it, or their successors, the evolution I suggest must come, and will come. And if prompt action is taken there is still time to protect the investments which have been made.

In conclusion, I might observe that I have only attempted to sketch the broad aspects of the plans I have in mind. I have worked out a great many of the details, which I shall be glad to explain to the industry if it wants them. I have seen this business grow from its nickelodeon stage to its immense and currently indefinite proportions. I think I have traced its evolution closely enough to know pretty well what the next step should be, and it would be a pleasure to help bring that process about.

Presbyterians Disappointed in Film Promises

A publicity release "supplied from official records, for information or publication," has been issued saying that "in response to Overture No. 44, on the 'unsatisfactory character of the vast majority of the films now being produced by the film industries,' from the Presbytery of Sioux City," it is proposed that the Presybterian General Assembly take the following action:

> That the General Assembly regrets that we have been driven to the conclusion that there is no concerted action on the part of the producers of moving pictures to produce decent entertainment for the public.
> We are convinced that many of the pictures produced here for foreign exhibition are of such a type as to damage seriously the good name of our country.
> We have had an abundance of promises of better things to come, but we have also had abundant and continuous disappointments.
> We have seen, in the press, the moral codes adopted by producers and have then seen upon the screen a procession of inanities, imbecilities, immoralities, and obscenities.
> The advertising in the press has been even more objectionable than some of the pictures.
> The pressure of the law, of public opinion, and of decreased box office receipts seems to be the only alternative.
> The conviction is growing that all promises and all activities of men of influence working within the producing organizations for clean pictures are ineffective.
> We urge upon Congress the advisability and practicability of a federal commission that shall deal with this evil at its source and with all the accompanying evils that now baffle the efforts of individuals and groups of citizens in securing clean pictures.
> We urge that local organizations be set up for the purpose of securing information concerning motion pictures of value for the purpose of making local previews and of giving local publicity that will inform the public of approved pictures, and we recommend that a list of approved films be published in our Church papers and in the Presbyterian periodical Moral Welfare.

This is part of a publicity service to the religious press from the office of Walter Irving Clarke, editor of the Presbyterian General Assembly Daily News, in Philadelphia.

Texas Exhibitors Granted Reduction in Express Rates

The railroad commission of Texas has granted the petition of the Allied Theatre Owners of Texas for reduction on film shipments by express. The reduction, of 50 per cent, applies only to such shipments, via Railway Express Agency, Inc., which are being returned to the original starting point.

This is estimated as a saving, to Texas exhibitors, of approximately 25 per cent of the total express bill, since most film shipments are received and returned directly, and consequently fall within the reduction range for the return shipment.

SHELVE 5-5-5; COMPANIES' COUNSEL BLAME APATHY; LIGHTMAN DENIES IT

Anyway, Larger Distributors Object to Placing New Contract in Effect at Present; Myers Calls Provisions Harsh

Lack of interest of theatre owners in the widely-discussed 5-5-5 standard exhibition contract, and objections of the larger distributors to placing it in work at this time, apparently have combined to kill all chances of its adoption for another year.

Such is the opinion of a member of the sub-committee of attorneys representing large distributors, which was charged with making a study of the applicability of the contract with a view to reporting recommendations to distributors.

The new sales season already has started, with contractual relations between distributors and exhibitors continuing in the form of individual company agreements.

"There is no immediate prospect at the moment of the 5-5-5 contract being placed in effect," said the sub-committee member, who requested that his name be withheld.

The lawyers' sub-committee, he reported, recently held what will probably prove to be its final meeting. No action on the contract resulted at that time, nor are there any future meetings scheduled, he said.

Call Exhibitors Apathetic

Foremost among the reasons ascribed by the attorney for the apparent failure to place the contract in work this year, as had been generally expected, is the alleged apathy of exhibitors toward the uniform contract which, it was said, has been manifest since the resumption of efforts to obtain adoption of the contract two months ago when M. A. Lightman, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in an appeal to distributor members of the MPPDA, sought the distributors' approval for placing the contract in work. During that time, or since the appeal by Mr. Lightman, no other request was received from any exhibitor in behalf of the adoption of the contract this year, said the spokesman for the distributors' sub-committee.

When informed of the sub-committee's statement, Mr. Lightman wired from his headquarters at Memphis, "I contend that statement is untrue that I am the only exhibitor requesting the uniform contract!"

"Practically every exhibitor organization I attended has passed a resolution requesting one," Mr. Lightman added.

"This is simply their alibi," he charged against the lawyers. "Just as they offer alibis on all other occasions. Simply because a few exhibitors in this business can make a lot of noise opposing everything is no indication that it reflects the true sentiment of the majority of responsible exhibitors.

"I have virtually come to the conclusion that very little cooperation can be gotten from the various distributors' attorneys for the benefit of exhibitors willing to go along in a constructive way."

Officially, the MPPDA would not comment on the new turn of events in the 5-5-5 exhibition contract, but it was admitted that the MPTOA, principally through the efforts of Mr. Lightman, had on numerous occasions requested the MPPDA distributor membership to adopt the contract.

In the meantime, a bulletin from the Washington headquarters of Allied States Association late last week reported that Allied had endeavored to learn from Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film Corporation, and one of the original sponsors of the uniform contract "just when the 5-5-5 contract will be put into effect."

Early in February, 1932, W. A. Steffes, president of Allied States Association, in an interview in New York said that Allied had lost interest in the proposed 5-5-5 standard exhibition contract and no longer is concerned in its adoption, due to "changed conditions in the industry since the 5-5-5 contract was proposed and drafted nearly two years ago."

However, the current attitude of Allied with regards the contract is outlined in a statement issued this week by Abram F. Myers, general counsel, who said the "real reason" that distributors are unwilling to put the 5-5-5 contract into effect "is to be found in the harsh and unfair innovations in the form agreed to since the 5-5-5 conferences, all of which have favored distributors and prejudiced exhibitors."

A second member of the lawyers' sub-committee who was interrogated on the status of the uniform contract disagreed with the opinion voiced by his associate to the extent that he felt there still remained a possibility that some action on the contract might yet be taken. However, when pressed for reasons to substantiate this opinion, he was unable to give any, and readily admitted that the last meeting of the committee of which he is a member held no promise of immediate action.

The sub-committee of lawyers appointed by distributors to delve into the 5-5-5 agreement is comprised of Louis Phillips, William Bromberg and Willard McKay, of the legal staffs of Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Universal, respectively.

Distributors Convinced

The alleged apparent disinterestedness in the fate of the 5-5-5 contract which is said by the sub-committee spokesman to be currently in evidence on the part of exhibitors was sufficient to convince distributors—none too anxious to act on the uniform contract, in the first place—that there was no necessity for haste in making the contract available. It was admitted that distributors have their own objections to the contract, but the committee's spokesman insisted that these objections were not of impressive magnitude and might have been overcome readily had exhibitors raised sufficient clamor in behalf of the contract's adoption this season.

"In order to place the 5-5-5 contract in work in an orderly manner," the sub-committee member said, "it would be necessary to begin work on it at least two months before the selling season opens. The standard contract provides for arbitration, and it would require considerable time to work out a practicable system of arbitration."

A further objection which distributors have made to the contract is that it fails to define properly those exhibitors to whom it is proposed to make the contract available, merely stating that any exhibitor "in good standing" may apply for the contract.

President of MPTOA Says Every Exhibitor Organization He Had Met with Had Passed Resolution for Adoption

Following the annual convention of the MPTOA, in February, when a resolution was adopted calling upon distributors to make the contract available for 1932-33, Mr. Lightman visited Universal Pictures, and urged that Universal offer exhibitors the 5-5-5 form as an alternative contract this year.

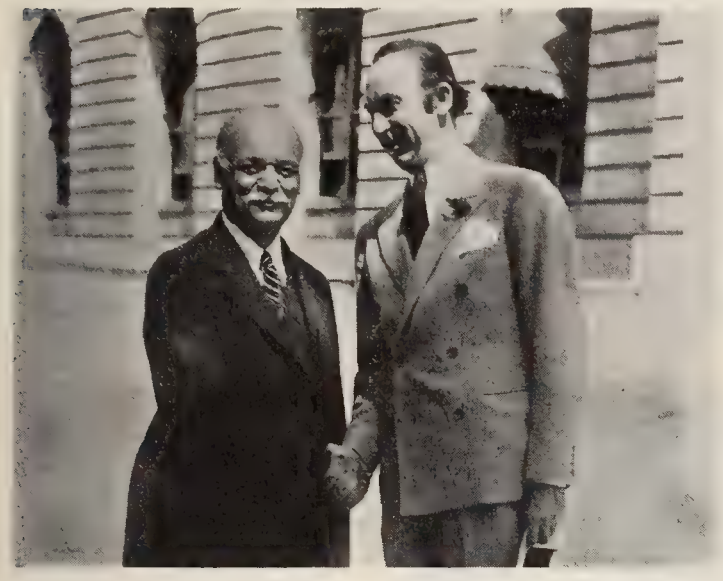
Evidencing its interest in Mr. Lightman's petition, Universal was instrumental in the calling of a meeting at the New York offices of the MPPDA, which was attended by legal representatives of nine of the eleven large distribution companies.

Won Interest of Attorneys

It was believed that by offering the uniform contract along with the individual contract of each company so that the exhibitor might designate whichever contract he preferred, distributors could avoid successfully the illegal aspects of a uniform contract.

Mr. Lightman's proposal won the interest of the attorneys to the extent that several meetings were held subsequently, at one of which the sub-committee was appointed and charged with obtaining the attitude of all distributors on the 5-5-5 contract.

Mr. Lightman even presented the attorneys with an arbitration plan at the time of addressing them. He proposed that a clause be inserted in contractual forms allowing the exhibitor the right to select either legal channels or arbitration for settlement of differences.



The 5-5-5 form of contract was born out of industry conferences following the famous decision of Judge T. H. Thacher, rendered in 1929, which outlawed the arbitration clause of the standard contract in use up to then.

Kent Hopeful of Ironing Out Gaumont British Situation

Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film Corporation, now in London conferring with Gaumont-British executives, said this week that the results of "across-the-table" discussions give a hopeful indication that the Fox-Gaumont tangle will be straightened out. Fox has a suit pending in British courts to dissolve the deal whereby Fox secured an interest in the English concern a few years ago. Whether Fox will set up its own production unit in England depends on the clarification of the Gaumont investment situation.

REVISED ARBITRATION AGREEMENT ADOPTED

So-called "Hangover" Clause Modified in Academy-Producers' Settlement; Limit of Application of Pact Changed

The final report of the directors of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, modifying the arbitration agreement entered into by a majority of the producing companies in December, 1931, was adopted by the Academy and approved by the Producers' Association at a joint closed meeting in Hollywood Tuesday night.

The directors' report requests three important changes in the agreement. The first would limit application of the agreement to employees under contract for either 12 months, or three or more pictures, instead of six months and two pictures, as previously provided, and to employees not under written contract who have been employed continuously for 12 months or more, instead of six months.

Bona Fide Offers Required

The second recommendation would require the existence of bona fide offers for the continuance or retention of services of employees in order for their employers to receive notice of other offers made to employees subsequent to the termination of employment. The third requested change reduces to three months the period in which the employer is entitled to such notice, except in cases where salaries have exceeded $1,000 weekly for 40 weeks, in which case the six months period, now provided, would be allowed.

The report recommends that a special standing committee of the Academy be appointed and endowed with special powers to investigate grievances and effect settlements. This committee, to be known as the Arbitration Agreement Committee, would consist of one member appointed from each of the five branches of the Academy. It would be provided with the names of all those registered with Arbitrator E. J. Loeb, and would be given access to all material, files and records relating to administration of the agreement. This committee would have the power to decide on the good faith of any offer made by a producer to an employee involving the producer's right to notice of offers of employment made subsequently. Its findings could be appealed to the Academy conciliation committee.

Urge Study for One Year

With these additional provisions incorporated in the arbitration agreement, the directors recommended that the Academy study the usefulness and efficiency of the agreement for the period of one year.

The purpose of the producers' arbitration agreement is described as being the stabilization of the industry by eliminating such abuses as raids on talent and personnel of one producing company by another, secret negotiations with the employees of a competing company, and premature negotiations with the employees of a competing company.

Speakers at the Academy meeting this week who advocated approval and adoption of the report included Irving Thalberg, B. P. Schulberg, Louis B. Mayer, M. C. Levee, Frank Lloyd, Sam Hardy, Conrad Nagel, Benjamin Glazer and William De Mille.

"This final report from the Academy's board," said Mr. Levee, Academy president, "is the result of months of careful study of the agreement by representative committees within the organization's five branches: acting, directing, production, technical and writing; followed by the formulation of the branch opinions into a report to the board by a special committee of one representative from each branch."

The Academy committee on the new producers' agreement to handle appeals and observe operation on behalf of employees consists of Fredric March, Frank Capra, Henry Herzbrun, J. A. Ball, Oliver H. P. Garrett. The alternates are Lewis Stone, William K. Howard, Paul Bern, Frederic Gibbons and Ralph Block.

Hoffman Defends Double Features

Defense of the double feature bill for exhibitors was made in Hollywood the other day by M. H. Hoffman, president of the Independent Producers' Association and of Allied Pictures, who stated that many exhibitors have overcome so-called depression and a shopping public with the double-feature policy and that it has kept thousands of showmen from closing their doors. Mr. Hoffman charged that certain producers and distributors are taking it upon themselves to force exhibitors to the single feature policy, regardless of how it affects the box-office.

"Let the exhibitor run his business as he sees fit; he knows best," stated Mr. Hoffman. "Who is there among producers or distributors who has the right or ability to tell the exhibitor whether a certain picture needs support by another picture or how long a show he is to give his public," he said.

Ufa and Gaumont Extend Joint Production Pact

Extension of joint production to include five more English versions of UFA pictures to be made in Germany by Gaumont British has been confirmed by Gaumont, according to London reports. A free interchange of talent and technicians is planned, it is said.

J. C. Thorpe has resigned from British International studios to head a new department which will deal exclusively with all overseas distribution of Gaumont-British product. He will be charged with the coordination of all foreign departments of the company, including the United States. Arthur Lee remains Gaumont British representatives in the States.

Allied Sees Film Conference Board, Brookhart Victory

Allied States Association this week released two forecasts concerning the motion picture industry, in the organization bulletin.

Prediction number one is that a national conference board will be evolved to lead the industry "out of chaos." Prediction number two is that the Brookhart Bill will be passed at the so-called lame duck session of Congress.

"Selfishness, incapacity and ignorance of the law on the part of industry politicians," the Allied pronouncement continues, "is being demonstrated in such a way that their repudiation by the sober, responsible leaders of the industry must inevitably follow.

"We predict that out of this welter and confusion will emerge a national conference board with bona fide and sincere (not subsidized) leaders of the producers, chains and independents to find a way out. We further predict that if all act in good faith the way will be found."

A meeting of approximately 60 members of the newly formed New York State Allied unit was held Tuesday at the Ten Eyck hotel, Albany, behind closed doors. At the conclusion of the meeting, Frank V. Walsh, secretary, issued a statement, which said in part:

"There are certain abuses which independent theatre owners feel should be corrected; there are various practices which they contend weigh unfairly against them and should be reformed; there are divers paragraphs in contracts which are held detrimental to the orderly and wholesome progress of the industry, but it is not fundamentally a reform organization that the New York state Allied unit has entered the field. It is an agency through which the independent exhibitor can speak authoritatively as a group for orderly, progressive remedies of unfavorable conditions.

"It is of interest to producers, distributors and exhibitors that theatres keep open, that patronage is increased, that the public is satisfied; and with this understanding used as a common basis, the interests of each group may receive the consideration it deserves."

United Artists to Release 'White Zombie'; 'Scarface' Passed

"White Zombie," produced by Edward and Victor Hugo Haperin, will be released by United Artists. The contract was closed this week with S. S. Krelberg for the producers.

Under direction of Chester Erskin, Al Jolson resumed work Tuesday on "The New Yorker," his first picture for United Artists. Erskin replaces Harry d'Arrast, who had requested his release from Joseph M. Schenck and was granted it.

The final title of the Douglas Fairbanks picture, made in the South Seas, is "Mr. Robinson Crusoe," it was announced yesterday by United Artists.

"Scarface," the Howard Hughes feature, has been passed by the State of Pennsylvania following months of negotiations. Only the doors of Kansas and Cook County, Illinois, continue to remain closed against the underworld picture.

METRO AND UNITED ARTISTS READY WITH NEW PLANS OF DISTRIBUTION

Nicholas M. Schenck Places His Stamp of Approval on Exclusive Run Sales Policy for Use With New Season's Product

The two evolutionary and widely discussed plans of film distribution sponsored by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and United Artists will come into being on an appreciable scale this season, with both distributors definitely decided upon offering their proposals to exhibitors with the marketing of their new product.

M-G-M's plan of exclusive run sales has been given the approval of Nicholas M. Schenck, president, and will be put into practice in every situation where such deals can be negotiated "to the mutual advantage of exhibitor and distributor," Mr. Schenck stated.

United Artists' plan of classifying product as "A" or "B" pictures, and making available to Class A theatres the "A" pictures, and to all other theatres, the "B" pictures only, is likewise in readiness for interested exhibitors and several significant deals are reported to be waiting only upon the announcement of United Artists' new product for their consummation. This distribution plan was authorized by Al Lichtman, vice-president of United Artists, in charge of distribution.

Metro's decision to place its exclusive run plan into general practice has been held in abeyance for several months pending its formal approval by Mr. Schenck. This approval was given recently and is understood to have been influenced by the general satisfaction with which experimental exclusive run deals were met in every geographical section of the country last season. During the year exclusive runs were tested by Metro in the east, south, mid-west and far west, with generally satisfactory results for the company, it is reported.

Metro has favored the introduction of a new marketing plan into its distribution scheme for quite some time, and in consequence several innovations in distribution have been proposed and received consideration over a period. The exclusive run plan, however, appeared to offer the greatest possibilities of those advanced, and the results of experimentation with it during the past season not only convinced M-G-M executives that it more nearly fulfilled their requirements than any other plan, but decided them, as well, on making it available on a large scale this season. It had been intimated earlier that the company would not make any wide scale distribution change effective for at least another year.

"Any exhibitor can bid for the exclusive runs of Metro pictures this year," Mr. Schenck said, in confirming the change in his company's sales policy in this regard. "M-G-M," he said, "will make exclusive deals wherever they are found to be of mutual advantage to exhibitor and distributor. Metro has followed that policy to a limited extent during the past season, and the results are considered to have been sufficiently satisfactory to justify continuance of the policy this year in any situation where deals can be arranged to mutual satisfaction and benefit."

Under the Metro plan, exclusive territorial exhibition rights to Metro product will be sold wherever deemed advisable, and wherever such deals are consummated, none of the Metro pictures involved will be exhibited subsequently in the territory affected. In the larger cities several such deals may be made with two or more theatres where a division of the exclusive territory is possible among more than one theatre.

During the past season exclusive exhibition rights were sold by Metro to single pictures on separate contracts. This year, it is believed, a division of the company's product may be made by which pictures designed for exclusive run sale may be grouped together and included in a single contract, rather than preparing separate contracts for each exclusive run picture sold. In some situations, however, particularly those in which only a very few pictures might have suitable exclusive run possibilities, the distributor will continue to make single contracts for single pictures on this basis, it is expected.

Among the exclusive run experiments conducted by M-G-M during the past season were those at Wilmington, Del.; St. Joseph, Mo., and Oakland, Calif. The Wilmington experiment was begun this spring with "Tarzan, the Ape Man," which was exhibited exclusively at Loew's Parkway Theatre. The engagement resulted in establishing exclusive runs as a permanent house policy at the Wilmington theatre.

At Oakland, Calif., the M-G-M picture, "Emma," was sold exclusively to the Fox Oakland Theatre last winter, and despite the fact that no additional advertising or publicity was provided the unusual engagement, and also despite the fact that the same picture was sold in the usual manner, from first run to the final subsequent engagement in San Francisco, a five-minute ferry ride across the Bay from Oakland, the experiment was pronounced a success. The picture, originally planned for a one week's engagement, lasted a full two weeks without any additional advertising space being taken in local newspapers. The theatre's copy and publicity merely featured the information that the run would comprise the "only Oakland showing of 'Emma,'" adding that the picture "will positively not be shown at any other Oakland theatre at any future date—see it now or never!"

The same or similar copy was carried in advertising all other exclusive run engagements of Metro pictures during the season.

At St. Joseph, Mo., Metro reverted to sale of exclusive runs after it is said to have suffered a loss of four-fifths of its first-run distribution revenue in the city upon abandoning the policy and selling local subsequent runs. The 80 per cent decrease in first run revenue, naturally, did not represent the distributor's loss in rentals from abandonment of the exclusive run plan, as the subsequent run revenue made up a considerable part of the decrease, but nevertheless it was not sufficient to make the usual plan of distribution preferable in that situation to the exclusive run policy.

POTATOES NOT WANTED

The government, apparently, has no use for potatoes in the treasury. Exhibitors in Wisconsin's potato growing sections are accepting potatoes instead of cash for admissions, and now they want to know how they are to pay the federal admission tax on the vegetable admissions. A. H. Wilkinson, internal revenue collector at Milwaukee, has ruled that where the ticket price represented by the potatoes is over 41 cents, a tax must be paid—but not in potatoes. However, few exhibitors in the territory charge more than 40 cents at any time.

Distributors Pronounce Idea Successful After Tryouts; Lichtman Says Deals Await Completion of New Product Plans

The United Artists' plan, likewise to be made available to exhibitors this season, has aroused much interest in exhibition and distribution circles. Mr. Lichtman has announced that a "modified form" of the plan will be placed in work with the sale of new United Artists product. Mr. Lichtman said that "numerous exhibitors had evidenced interest in the plan and had called to have it explained to them in its application to their own territories."

"However," Mr. Lichtman said, "no deals have been made and nothing definite can be arranged, of course, until we have our new product plans completed."

Harry Arthur, operator of a number of theatres in principal Connecticut cities, is one of those variously reported to be considering an application of the United Artists' plan in his territory. When questioned, Mr. Arthur said that he was interested in the plan but had not studied it in detail or discussed it with any definite plans of effecting a deal.

With the acquisition by Mr. Arthur of the Bijou, Poli and College theatres at New Haven from Fox, the Paramount, from Publix, and the possible acquisition of the Roger Sherman from Warner Bros., now reported, Arthur Theatres would have a virtual monopoly of the New Haven situation, under which the "A" and "B" picture plan might be found to be ideally adapted.

The machinery of both the United Artists' distribution plan and the M-G-M exclusive run plan was described in detail in the May 14 issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and on the following week, in the

"CAN'T SAW SAWDUST"

Exhibitor Raises Question Whether Lichtman Plan Is Smokescreen for Studios' Failure

By R. A. PIERSON
Proprietor, Shelmar Theatre, Louisville, Ky.

"You can't saw sawdust," writes R. A. Pierson of the Shelmar theatre at Louisville, in explaining to the HERALD why he cannot endorse the socalled Lichtman plan of exclusive run distribution, proposed by Al Lichtman, vice president heading distribution of United Artists. Mr. Pierson writes from the standpoint of the subsequent-run exhibitor and declares that in the Lichtman plan the small theatre owner has been disregarded entirely. At the same time he warns that "the small exhibitors of today will be large ones of tomorrow."

The film depression is near to a close. Mr. Lichtman tell us so. Every film journal in the country has devoted page after page to the generic plan to promote business by limiting the sales field. Every first-run exhibitor in the country has been given a chance to voice his reaction to the tentative scheme which holds so many potentialities. Every subsequent run exhibitor has remained silent as he is small and means little. It is constantly impressed upon his mind that he is small, that the revenue obtained from his business amounts to a very small fraction of the entire film business, and now thought is currently being given over to eliminating him entirely. This feeling exists the year 'round—except for the selling season.

It is most natural that a producing company that holds a very limited number of subsequent-run contracts would endorse such a plan. The revenue derived from the few small contracts would quickly be increased by exhibiting the film once—and only once—in each large city. If this plan is built on a sane and sound base, why is it not natural to believe that one company can operate singly under the plan without awaiting the answers of the other invited members?

Subsequent Runs Not Considered

The great majority of first-run exhibitors and heads of large theatre chains have given their opinion on the subject and even they, who are alone to benefit, remain skeptical. It is not the subsequent-run theatre owner who has objected, for he has not even been considered. If he were given a stand in the matter he would most probably state that the new plan would prove an asset to him. All large producing companies have been asked to join this band who have so conscientiously set out to aid broken-down theatre operators, but few have even accepted the chance to get into the argument for even publicity's sake. Surely this is not the solution to the mysterious problem.

When a studio makes an outstanding picture, properly titled, skillfully directed, well exploited and competently acted, the studio reaps sufficiently and calls for much applause. The exhibitor welcomes his good fortune just as the patrons do. The theatre has made money and all, for the time being, are happy. For the next few weeks the exhibitor, studio and audience all entertain the same old story—just another picture. The answer is invariably that the people haven't the money. This is quite true—they haven't the money for that type of picture. What, then, is the answer to a big gross on a good picture? The stories just aren't consistent.

Up To The Studios

In place of spending time, effort and money on indirect methods of booming up business for the pleading theatre owners, which will never solve the problem, why don't the studios make less but more valuable product? You can't fool all of the people all of the time and the theatre owners have discovered, further than that, that by exhibiting poor film you can fool but few people very few times. Theatre-goers constantly beg for good pictures—decent and well acted entertainment. Despite depression and the hottest weather they are there in masses when a theatre features genuinely good pictures. Maybe the trouble comes from an entirely different source.

Perhaps the many schemes submitted from time to time are only excuses to avoid all suspicion of the truth that the studios are not capable of producing product with drawing power.

Until the exhibitors of this country maintain their rights and use guts enough to tell the producing companies that they are directly responsible for the downfall of the industry and not remain quiet while the producers sidestep their failings and point out the pitfalls in the exhibitors' methods, this slump condition cannot be improved.

Editor Declares Hollywood "Can't Take It," in Films

"Hollywood can dish it out, but it can't take it," is the way John C. Moffitt, motion picture editor of the Kansas City Star, characterizes the studios' efforts at "self-debunking." Moffitt formerly was on the writing staff at the Universal studio.

"There never has been a picture to treat Hollywood with the same realism that it treats the legal profession in 'The Mouthpiece' or the press in 'Five Star Final,' and there never will be," Mr. Moffitt declared.

New Jersey Allied Meeting

The New Jersey Allied unit is holding its annual session at the unit's New York headquarters on Thursday, following postponement from Tuesday because of the meeting of eastern Allied units at Albany on that day.

New Distribution Plans Are Ready

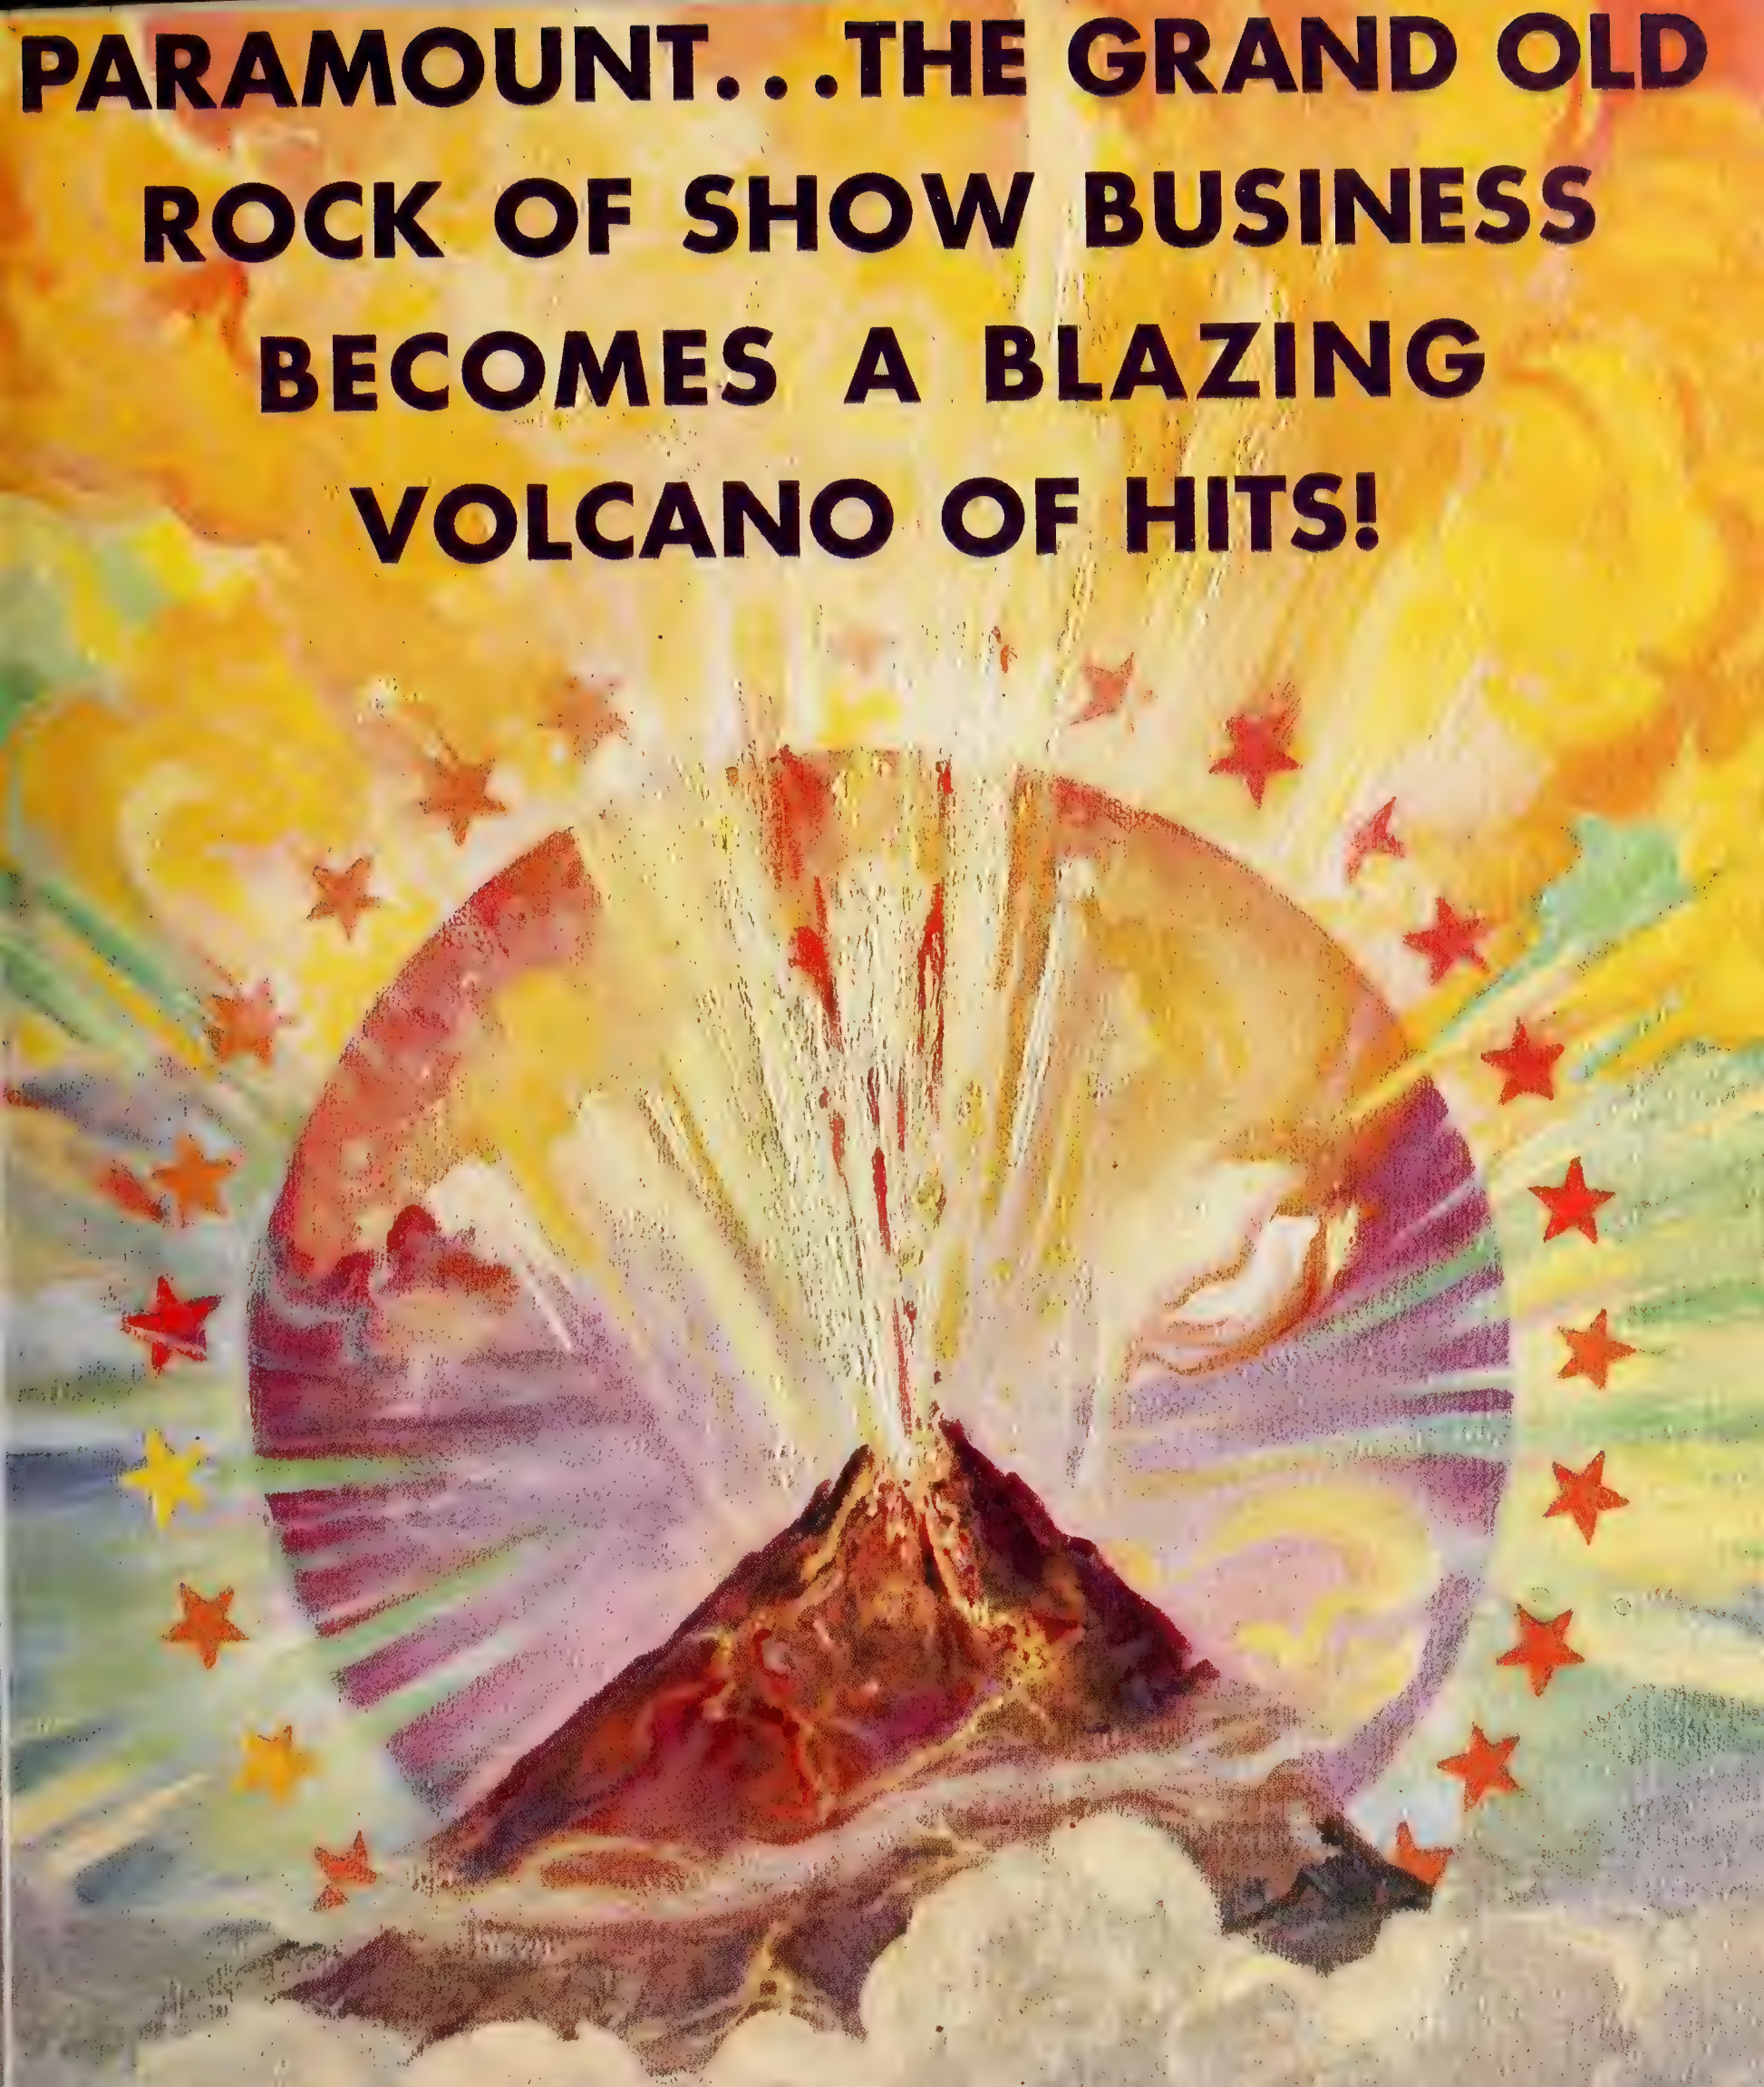
issue of May 21, were published numerous comments and opinions of both plans from theatre owners and exhibitor leaders of the country.

The exhibitor communications revealed that, whereas many important exhibitors, principally independents, showed a complete lack of sympathy for and vigorous denunciation of the plans, many circuit operators and managers, and a few independents, commended the possibilities offered by either one or both of the plans. All classifications of exhibitors appeared to be agreed that revisions of some nature are needed in the present setup of distribution.

The Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut has passed a resolution charging that the so-called exclusive run policies of distributors constitute an "absolute monopoly" and their continuance will cause "irreparable harm and injury" to small first-run and neighborhood theatres. The resolution denounces as "public enemies any and all such distributors" sponsoring such plans, and indicates that legal and legislative aid will be enlisted in the state, country and Department of Justice to "protect" the theatre properties of members against the practice. The association further resolved to "utilize screens, newspapers and any other available advertising media to justify to our patrons our position in this matter, and the tyrannic position of the guilty distributors." Copies of the resolution were dispatched to all distributors.

Pettijohn Doubts Exclusives' Value



Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in a recent address before the Cleveland Cinema Club, expressed the belief that "the question of whether or not exclusive runs will serve any good purpose is debatable." A typographical error in the report of Mr. Pettijohn's address in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD of July 2 distorted his remarks concerning exclusive runs.

In the course of his address, Mr. Pettijohn, speaking in response to a question as to why churches and schools could not buy current motion pictures and charge admission for showings as do theatres, explained that such activity would put neighborhood theatres out of business. Indicating that churches and schools paid no rent, were not taxed, were not compelled to pay their people for handling a performance, and that there were hundreds of school auditoriums seating from 500 to 2,000, Mr. Pettijohn pointed out that such factors would obviously make for unfair competition with the motion picture theatre owner.

Comerford May Regain Three

M. E. Comerford is expected to resume operation on August 1 of his former houses in Oswego, Sayre and Waverly, N. Y.

Paramount's PARAMOUNT Year

● Here is a foreword without boasts, shopworn adjectives, or fine promises . . . devoid of bull, bluster, or comedy which is ill-advised in these tough times.

● The exhibitors of this country are in no mood for fine phrases . . . what they want are facts! . . . definite information as to why product is going to bring profits.

● A message which rings true today must carry pertinent proof, and such information can only be indicated by the essential things which make pictures better entertainment and profitable investments. These essentials are: box office names, distinguished stories, money-getting titles, and capable direction.

Paramount's PARAMOUNT Year

● In the succeeding pages are facts about the eight pictures of the first group in Paramount's PARAMOUNT Year program. The copy is conservative and in the main descriptive.

● All that is asked is that you judge them by the yardstick of your own experience and situation. The entire Paramount Publix organization has abounding faith in every one of them. We can afford to be modest, knowing that a careful examination of each picture must bring conviction and assurance to every smart showman in the country.

CLOSINGS DUE TO CURRENT STATUS NOT APPRECIABLY ABOVE NORMAL

Total of 1,731 Dark in 29 Territories and Key Cities, Many of Them Having Regular Policy to Shut Down During Summer

Shutdowns Few and Far Between in Many Sections; Number Cutting Showings to Part of Week Reflects Increase

Theatre closings due to current conditions are not appreciably above normal. A check-up shows that 1,731 are dark at present in 29 territories and key city centers, many of which have a regular policy of darkening during summer months. Current conditions are responsible for others, while a sizeable share were forced to darken in recent months due to the inability to install sound.

While a few territories have been hit hard, there are many sections of the country in which the closings have been few and far between. Delaware, Birmingham, Baltimore, Portland, Oregon, Providence, South Texas, Salt Lake City, Canada, Louisville, Oklahoma, Philadelphia and other localities show no highly unusual increases in the number of theatres darkened, although there have been some shut in these sections. There was an increase noted in the policy to operate fewer than six or seven days a week. More downtown first runs have been closed this summer than previously.

The situation in 28 key cities and territories follows:

No General Closing in Chicago

There will be no wholesale closing of theatres in Chicago for the summer although a number have recently gone dark for indefinite periods. Among them are the Gallic, Karlov, Orchard, Midwest, Garfield, American and Portage Park.

Only Two Closed in Delaware

Only two theatres in Delaware have been closed in a field of over 20 houses. Both are in Wilmington, the Playhouse, independent, and the Savoy, (Stanley-Warner) a second run.

20 Open, 5 Closed in Birmingham

Birmingham has 20 theatres open, with 5 closed. The closed houses seat approximately 3,500. Those closed have been dark for some time; none is a summer closing. All are independent except the Trianon, an RKO house.

In Alabama there are 100 open and about 30 closed. The total capacity of these is about 12,000.

One-Third Dark in Washington, Alaska

Out of about 300 theatres in the Washington territory, which includes Washington and Alaska, there are approximately 95 houses dark. About 90 per cent are independently owned, the remainder being affiliated with Fox West Coast or subsidiaries. Most of the 95 were closed by January 1, as a result of economic conditions. There have been only isolated cases of summer closings, but it is considered possible that a number now operating will go dark in July and August.

Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky Hit

There are said to be 300 independent theatres dark out of 850 in the territory served by the Ohio unit of Allied Theatre Owners Association, which includes Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky. It is impossible to accurately determine the number which have closed on account of economic conditions, and those because of summer. Many always have gone dark during summer, although there have been additional closings this year.

The RKO Strand in Cincinnati recently closed for the summer and Keith's, deluxe downtown house, will close soon, it is said.

All Running in Baltimore

Competition between all theatres including first-run and residential houses at Baltimore is razor edged and the full winter quota of nine first-runs and one continued-run are operating, with Loew's controlling four and others in the hands of independents.

Only two neighborhoods have closed, the Lord Baltimore, to have improvements made, and the other for the summer. Two others have gone on a part time policy.

Overseating Closes Three at Portland

Due to overseating and economic pressure at Portland, Ore., three houses are closed: The Fox Broadway, formerly ace house of Fox West Coast; Dufwin, Music Box, closed on June 1st and taking another 1,835 seats off the market.

Publix Closes Many in Texas

Several ace houses have been included in the wholesale closings in Texas by Publix. Reports have it that the closings are due to high rents, to stimulate business, reduce leases on many and readjust wages for musicians and stage employees.

The State in San Antonio and the Paramount, Abilene, the latter only opened a year, have been closed. A clean sweep was made in Abilene with the closing of its second house. Independents are now holding full sway there. The Queen, Austin, has been closed.

Likewise Publix closed two in Brownwood and Temple. L. D. Brown, independent in Brownwood, is in full control of the situation there due to the closing of the Publix house.

Closing of 14 Publix Theatres in 10 Texas cities was ordered as a move to bring down operating costs and not until reductions have been obtained will the houses reopen. None of the Texas key cities have been affected, but they may be later.

Thirty Dark in Cleveland

The situation in Cleveland: Total number of theatres 115, seating 123,229; houses closed, 30, with 30,460 seats. Eleven others were dismantled several months ago.

Closed theatres include the following independents: Arion, Family, Keystone, Lark, Main, Manhattan, Park View, Market Square, New Broadway, New "Y," Polonia, Royal, Temple, U. S. and Vandora. Loew's closed five: State, Circle, Alhambra, Liberty and Doan. Those darkened by unaffiliated circuits include the Detroit, Southern and Kinsman, operated by Associated Theatres; the Five Points, a Consolidated property; Scoville, Essick and Reif's Gordon Square, and the Fountain, Globe and Hough-79th Street belonging to Washington Circuit. Also RKO closed its Hippodrome, downtown first run.

Shea Closes Great Lakes

At Buffalo, the Great Lakes theatre was closed for the summer on June 2. After renovation, the house is expected to reopen in August.

Situation Fair at Providence

Edward M. Fay, Providence, closed Fay's theatre, his second house to darken since April, when the Carlton, musical comedy and stock company house, shut its doors, because, he said, he was unable to obtain quality films. While Mr. Fay, who recently spent upward of $30,000 to renovate the house announced the theatre would stay closed six weeks, there is a possibility of summer stock being tried. He said the house would resume its vaudeville and picture policy late in August.

Conditions Off in Denver Section

In the Denver territory, comprising Colorado, New Mexico, Wyoming, the Black Hills of South Dakota and western Nebraska, there are about 500 theatres, with slightly over 200 dark. General conditions are the cause of the closings. Fox has 13 out of their 45 in this section closed, but most have been closed for several years. Only one Fox house has been closed recently, the Temple at McCook, Neb. Publix has only one dark house in Colorado, the Avalon at Grand Junction. Most of the closed houses are in towns from 1,500 to 10,000 population. In Denver about 35 are operating with less than a dozen dark.

Des Moines Total Reduced to 197

In the last two years, due to sound, economic conditions and so on, the number of theatres in Iowa has been reduced from 435 to 197. Of the 197, about 40 per cent are closed for the summer. Twenty are houses which have never before closed during summer. In Des Moines, the Publix houses are reduced 20 per cent by the closings. A. H. Blank's Central States circuit of 24 is closing three and possibly a fourth.

Only Four First-Runs Open in Detroit

In Detroit, close on the heels of the closing of the Paramount comes the announcement by Publix that the United Artists would close. Publix now has five first-runs closed, the United, Paramount, Adams, Madison and State. Only four first-runs are open in Detroit during the summer. They are the Fox, RKO Downtown, Michigan and Fisher, the latter two operated by Publix. The Fisher is not in the downtown area.

Also, 30 of the 70 theatres owned or operated by the Butterfield circuit are closed and more are expected to be closed soon, E. C. Beatty, general manager, announced. It is expected about half the houses will be open during the summer.

Competitors Close Alternately

Add to the wrinkles in theatre operation the plan worked out by A. G. Constant and William Tallman, who separately operate three first-runs at East Liverpool, Ohio.

Constant has the State, 600 seats, and the American, 500; Tallman, the Ceramic, which seats 1,600. The exhibitors made a summer agreement to alternate operations every third week. While one of the three houses remains open, the other two close.

South Texas Not Hit

To date only two small theatres have been closed for the summer in Houston, and two others in the South Texas territory.

The Publix class C theatre, the Queen, and the Crown, a locally owned subsequent, closed June 1. In Beaumont, a small second run, locally owned, closed, and in Galveston Publix shut down a class B house. Not more than six small second-runs in South Texas closed last fall.

MORE FIRST-RUNS CLOSE FOR SUMMER

141 Closed in Metropolitan New York

The Film Board of Trade in New York reported 141 theatres closed in the metropolitan territory, which includes Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

Many Darkened in Northern California

Approximately 120 houses in northern and central California are dark, out of a total of 466. This is not considered excessive but some of the very largest houses are now dark, with others scheduled to be closed soon. Possibly nine out of ten that are dark would have been closed for the summer in the normal course of events.

125 Out of 687 Close in Kansas-Missouri

Approximately 125 theatres out of 687 have been darkened in Kansas and Western Missouri since January 1. Fully 50 per cent of those were closed because of economic conditions. About 100 are independently owned.

Figures compiled by Arthur Cole, secretary of the Kansas City Film Board of Trade, show 375 theatres operating in Kansas and 312 in Western Missouri, January 1. Since then 45 have closed in Kansas and approximately 80 in Western Missouri.

Closings this summer are greater in number than normally. Most of the closings are in small towns in agricultural districts. However, there normally is a substantial number of closings in rural small towns during the harvest season, now in full blast. Circuit-controlled houses are closing in greater numbers than usual.

Fox Midwest (Skouras-operated) has 148 theatres under lease. Of these, 59 are closed, including several Class A houses. The circuit has darkened 13 theatres in Kansas, Missouri and Southern Illinois in recent weeks. Fox Midwest plans closing several more.

St. Louis Reports Many Closings

Since the advent of sound, approximately 100 small theatres in St. Louis and Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois have gone out of business permanently while present conditions have forced about 150 others to close temporarily.

There has been a progressive lowering of the number of theatres in St. Louis territory for several years. At one time it was estimated there were 800 theatres in the St. Louis zone which included Eastern Missouri, Southern Illinois, some counties in Northern Arkansas, parts of Western Indiana and Kentucky. It is now estimated there are 500 in the same field. St. Louis exchanges are not serving the identical territory they did prior to the entry of sound pictures so direct comparisons are not possible.

Of the 150 houses closed temporarily approximately two-thirds were forced to fold because of poor business. The others always close in summer. In St. Louis alone there are 21 picture theatres dark.

In St. Louis and elsewhere in the old silent days airdomes were very popular. Few such theatres continue to exist under sound.

No Closings in Salt Lake Section

The Victory theatre, Salt Lake City, is the only Publix house in this section closed for the summer. The Fox-Strand, a West Coast house in Pocatello, is dark.

No houses have been indefinitely shut down.

143 Houses Shut Down in Florida

Of the 288 theatres which Florida "once had," there are only 145 houses in operation and 143 closed. In Tampa 12 are in full operation, one is showing 3 days a week, while nine are dark.

Canada Continues Uninterruptedly

Very few important theatres have closed in Canada in recent months, though it is agreed that a number of houses are "in the red." The number of active theatres in Eastern Canada has remained fairly constant during the past month because of the opening of new theatres and the reopening of houses which have been dark for a considerable period. The only first-run closed in Toronto is Shea's Hippodrome, a circuit house.

Fox West Coast Darkens Several

Fox West Coast, headquarters in Los Angeles, will close 40 theatres, numbering 10 per cent of the circuit's total, for the summer. Practically all are expected to reopen in September. The total closed is slightly above that of last year.

Louisville Operating at Full Blast

Although business has been dull in Louisville as well as throughout the state there have been no summer closings. About the usual number of downtown and suburban houses are operating in Louisville, and the same general list over the state.

Closings Increase in Milwaukee Section

Closings in the Milwaukee territory, covering most of Wisconsin and the upper peninsula of Michigan, have been more numerous this year than last. There are 102 independent houses dark, 81 of them in Wisconsin; there are 17 circuit controlled theatres dark in Wisconsin and none in Upper Michigan.

Situation Okay in Oklahoma

At Enid, Oklahoma, only one house remains dark during the summer. The other three—Criterion, Aztec and Mecca—will be open all summer. The four are now operated by Griffith Amusement, Oklahoma City. There have been no reports that any of these will be closed during July and August; the same is true in adjacent towns.

Two Majors Dark in Minneapolis

Minneapolis has two major theatres in the dark, and one minor loop house closed for several months. The Minnesota, 4,000-seater, shut down recently. Publix closed the Century a year ago, partly to keep the Minnesota going and partly because it is not well cooled. RKO has had the Seventh Street closed for the better part of a year because it is not cooled for summer business and because it did its best gross with holdovers on big films used by the RKO Orpheum. The Pantages has been closed most of the time for two or three years. The Palace has been closed off and on with occasional runs of burlesque or low-priced second showings. The small and old Unique has been closed for some time.

St. Paul has few dark theatres but several of the downtown houses are picking up cheap pictures and showing them at 10 cents.

Most neighborhood houses are still going.

Six Dark in Downtown New Orleans

Of the ten in the downtown area of New Orleans, six are dark, with the possibility that only two will be open next winter. The downtown area includes the Tulane, legitimate house, closed for the summer; the Dauphine, used for burlesque and pictures; the St. Charles, former stock house; the Crescent, formerly pictures and tabloid, dark for over a year, little hope of reopening; the Liberty, pictures, closed for several years; and the Strand, pictures, closed due to low business. Other houses in this area operating are: Loew's State, Publix Saenger, Tudor and Globe; RKO Orpheum.

Of the dark houses, the Crescent, Liberty and Strand are leased by Publix. In the neighborhoods, United Theatres has closed the Fern to lessen competition with its Prytania.

Fox Will Not Close in Northwest

Fox West Coast Theatres, Inc., will not close any of their houses in the Pacific Northwest, according to Frank L. Newman, division manager. Fox West Coast operates approximately 35 in Washington and Oregon. In addition, the company controls six or eight more theatres that have been dark for several months or more.

Philadelphia Closings Near Normal

While business unquestionably has been dropping in the Philadelphia territory, the closings either for summer or for an indefinite period are not far off the normal. Of 786 houses in the territory covered by Philadelphia and vicinity, South Jersey and Delaware, the closings are less than 11 per cent. The summer closing is not greater than normal, though showings have been curtailed in many of the smaller towns to two or three a week.

Of the affiliated theatres, 9 have closed for the summer, including the Mastbaum, largest house in the Stanley Warner chain. These 9 houses are all Warner houses, while the Publix circuit reports two closed houses.

Of the independent theatres, 26 have closed for the summer—a normal or even less than normal figure. There are 44 independent theatres in the territory that are indefinitely closed.

Despotism Charged In Operators Union

Three members of Local 306, New York projectionists, have filed in supreme court an order requiring union officials to show cause why Sam Kaplan, president, should not be restrained from conducting the union's business, and why the officials should not be restrained from using union funds for advertising and counsel fees. The members charged that despotism exists within the local.

The action is seen as another step in the long series of disputes waged between the officials of the union and a group of members. The plaintiffs are Samuel W. Simon, Ernest Giesemann and Charles McDermott. They ask that officers be required to restore them to the work list of the union, and they also seek the appointment of a receiver to carry on the business of the union.

Kaplan has announced that at a meeting of the union it was decided to admit to full membership, at the rate of three each month, those formerly known as "permit men," but now classed as apprentices. The practice of using men outside of the union was abolished at the recent Columbus, Ohio, convention of the IATSE, with which local 306 is affiliated.

Interstate Commerce Committee Reports On Brookhart's Bill

Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart, arch enemy of the motion picture industry, took sudden and unexpected action late last week on his block booking bill when he brought into the Senate a favorable report from the Interstate Commerce Committee on his bill. It had been believed that nothing further would be done with the measure until the United States Supreme Court next fall disposed of the Paramount case brought by the Federal Trade Commission. It is also believed that the reporting of the bill was merely for the purpose of having it available for consideration next session, when, having been defeated for renomination in the recent primary in Iowa, Brookhart is expected to make a last effort to obtain its enactment.

However, if the present session continues indefinitely—not a remote possibility, in view of the present situation—he may bring it up during one of the slack periods which the Senate now is encountering.

When the Paramount case went to the Supreme Court, it was Brookhart's plan to hold up action on his bill pending a decision. It is not understood that he has changed his mind, but rather that he will take advantage of the first opportunity to deliver another tirade against the film industry.

Delay Appeal In Youngclaus Suit

No move to appeal the federal court decision in the Youngclaus protection suit, rendered at Omaha, two weeks ago, has been made as yet by Publix Theatres or the defendant distributors who signed the protection and zoning agreement for the Omaha territory, which was attacked in the suit and declared illegal in the court's decision.

It is understood that action on an appeal will await the return of Bruce Bromley, principal defense attorney, to his New York office. Mr. Bromley, at present, is on vacation and is not expected to return for another week or two. Efforts by associate counsel to reach him and inaugurate an appeal action were unsuccessful this week, it was reported at Mr. Bromley's office.

All briefs in the Youngclaus suit have been placed in the hands of Gabriel Hess, general counsel of the MPPDA. Asked this week about plans for an appeal of the Omaha decision, Mr. Hess said: "I have not discussed the subject with counsel yet."

Hagen & Hakim Dissolve Partnership

Cable advices received from London this week indicated that Julius Hagen has resigned from National Film Distributors, which he started in England six weeks ago with Eric Hakim. Mr. Hakim will continue the operation of National, while Mr. Hagen has decided to concentrate on Twickenham Productions.

Joe Plunkett Leaves RKO; In Temporary Headquarters

Joe Plunkett, former RKO theatre executive, severed his connection with RKO last Saturday, in accordance with the notice served by Harold B. Franklin, president of RKO Theatres, two weeks ago. Mr. Plunkett is understood to be making temporary headquarters with Walter Reade, New Jersey exhibitor. He declines to discuss future plans.

Mr. Plunkett contends, it is understood, that he was employed by Hiram S. Brown, former president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, on a yearly basis. The company concedes that the contract ran for one year, but does not agree that automatic renewal was effective.

World Wide Has Eight Lined Up

Joe Brandt, president of World Wide Pictures, who has been on the Coast for several weeks, conferring with the unit producers who will make the World Wide features for 1932-33, said this week that eight pictures have been decided on as the first on World Wide's production schedule. They are: "The Crooked Circle," a William Sistrom production; "False Faces," produced by KBS; "Breach of Promise," an Edwin Carewe-Ben Verschliser production; "Uptown New York," and another to be made by KBS; "Alimony Racket," a Bennie Sistrom production; and "Hollywood Ballyhoo," a Bryan Foy production.

With Ben Lyon, Zasu Pitts, Berton Churchill, C. Henry Gordon, Frank Reicher and Roscoe Karns just signed, and negotiations under way for a lead, "The Crooked Circle," will be the first to go into production at Metropolitan Studios. Lucky Humberstone will direct from Ralph Spence's story. Margaret Kuhns has been engaged to adapt Rupert Hughes' "Obscurity," which will be filmed as "Breach of Promise," following "Crooked Circle." Mack Sennett's "Hypnotized" has also been set for early production, with Charles Mack, Charles Murray, W. C. Fields, Wallace Ford (borrowed from MGM), Ben Turpin and Maria Alba.

Meanwhile, World Wide's current season's product is being wound up with the delivery this week to the home office of the first print of "The Man Called Back," the finishing touches being placed on "The Last Mile," and the signing of Robert Florey to direct "Those We Love," based on the play by George Abbott and S. K. Lauren.

Earl W. Kramer, formerly with RKO and Universal, has been named personal representative in the foreign field for Arthur W. Kelly, vice-president and treasurer of United Artists. Mr. Kramer is en route to Calcutta, India.

New Hearing in Contract Action Denied in Kansas

The Kansas Supreme Court on Tuesday denied a motion for a rehearing in the United Artists case involving validity of exhibition contracts. Attorneys for the distributors are understood to be studying the question of an appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

The decision, it is said, will have no effect on the sale or exhibition of pictures in Kansas, as the court's final opinion modifies the original decision which found against the distributor on the grounds the minimum admission clause in the contract is a violation of the anti-trust laws of the state and because it was not shown that the picture sold and upon which suit was based was approved by the state censor board, which the court declared was "a condition precedent to the existence of a lawful contract."

Free Bookings Asked for Needy

All film distributors in the Iowa territory have been requested by the Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska to supply free bookings to exhibitors in need of help. This request follows the offer of Midwest Film Distributors to supply 200 free exhibition dates during July and August to exhibitors in Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas and Western Missouri.

Exhibitors are wondering whether other exchanges will follow the lead of Midwest. While the M P T O of Kansas and Missouri, which is handling the free bookings in that territory, has made no requests of this nature to the other distributors, the Allied organization, in charge of distribution in Iowa and Nebraska, is hopeful other exchanges will follow suit.

"Similar requests have been made to all film exchanges to assist independent exhibitors in distress along these lines, and present indications are that several independent producers will comply with these requests," said Lester F. Martin, secretary-treasurer of the Allied unit, with headquarters at Nevada, Iowa.

However, it is said that major distributors frown on this policy and, in fact, have agreed not to supply free bookings anywhere and under any circumstances, as setting an undesirable precedent.

Pearl Joins Zeidman

Richard J. Pearl has resigned his post as vice-president of the Tec-Art studio on the Coast to join Bennie Zeidman Productions, producing for the independent market and for World Wide.

Kent to Produce Eight

Willis Kent, independent producer, will make eight pictures in 1932-33 for the independent market. The original plan called for production of three.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

ESTABLISHING something of a record for "no cost" exploitation, ballyhoo and special attractions, Publix managers went the limit during "Sam Katz Week" and knocked off 52 automobile giveaways; 30 stage weddings; 35 refrigerator giveaways; 23 "free gold" nights and 19 parades. In automobiles alone the combined value is $31,000. The value of refrigerators totals $6,500.

In addition, patrons received jewelry of all kinds and description; motorboats, live ponies, entire dwellings full of furniture, washing machines, hotel and transportation expenses, air cruises, clothing, accessories, essentials and luxuries, free candy, tickets, ice cream sodas, garden implements, hardware, cash, country store prizes, food stuffs, refreshments, cut rates on bus lines and railroads, free gas ranges, week-end trips, brides' complete trousseaux, kitchen, bedroom and dining room suites, 12 tons of coal, pies, a diamond ring and whatnot.

Karl Wolever worked hard for a stage wedding at his Paramount theatre in Newport News. But the prospective bride called all bets off at the 11th hour "on account of appendicitis."

Manager Cox at the Capitol, Wilkes-Barre, broke a record with ten stage weddings in six nights. In line with the trend in showmanship, Mr. Cox staged a single wedding on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, following up with a double each on Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Among other things, Charles Chaplin discovered on his recent trip to foreign lands the only place in the world where there is no depression, to wit, the tropical island of Bali, somewhere in the South Seas on the eastern tip of Java. The place is so depression-proof, reports Mr. Chaplin, that when the thrifty islanders discovered there was a price for admission to a new movie palace they refused to be so entertained and went back to their native amusements.

Incidentally, the comedian has reported that the lengthy trip was "the most expensive I have ever taken." Which might explain why he is so anxious to make another picture right away.

Narcolepsy, a queer disease reputed to cause a feeling of drowsiness after kissing one of the opposite sex, and the subject of discussion at a recent meeting of leading American psychiatrists, "is branded as a figment of the imagination by Hollywood motion picture stars," according to Paramount Publix publicity. This poem by Edgar A. Guest has been adopted as the permanent creedo by the board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan:

To live as gently as I can;
To be, no matter where, a man;
To take what comes of good or ill
And cling to faith and honor still;
To do my best, and let that stand
The record of my brain and hand;
And then, should failure come to me,
Still work and hope for Victory.

ANCHORS AWEIGH, OR PAGING MR. BROMLEY

Immediately following the federal court decision at Omaha, two weeks ago, which outlawed concerted zoning agreements there and concluded the Youngclaus suit, Bruce Bromley, principal defense attorney, departed on a protracted vacation. Thereafter, the distributor defendants sought to institute action on an appeal of the decision and, naturally, sought out Mr. Bromley for aid and counsel in initiating the action. Mr. Bromley was not to be found. Persistent search, however, disclosed that the much-wanted gentleman, being of a nautical turn of mind, had boarded his yacht and pointed its nose seaward. To Mr. Bromley, apparently, a vacation is a vacation; for he has not been heard from since. Either he saw fit to remain away from all obvious ports or, if he chanced to make them, he stayed religiously away from telephones which would have connected him with his office.

In the meantime, an appeal of the Youngclaus case decision waits—and waits.

Our statistician on unvital matters comes out of retirement—unasked—to report that at least one big-money act will not be troubled by increased income taxes. "I have deduced by the Pythagorean theorem and the Malthusean law," he writes, "that if it takes ten mills to make a cent, the four Mills Brothers haven't a penny to their name." He might have added, paradoxically, that the assets of the quartet are their notes!

Amos 'n' Andy will soon celebrate their sixth anniversary on the air, having recently written and broadcast their 2,200th episode since their debut. Someone once said that fame is fleeting.

IMMEDIATELY after the flier, Clarence Hausner, a former projectionist making a trans-Atlantic flight to Poland, was picked up at sea by the British tanker, Circe Shell, James H. McKoy and Francis Falkenberg, of the Publix circuit in Miami, communicated with Mrs. Hausner at Newark and told her she could meet her husband one week sooner if the tanker's captain could be induced to stop at Miami instead of going straight to New Orleans. Mrs. Hausner wired back that she liked the idea immensely.

But the captain of the Circe Shell didn't care at all to run off his course and thereby suffer delay. His radio message vetoed stopping at Florida to land Hausner for a public welcome on the stage of the Olympia theatre—which was the basis of the interest of McKoy and Falkenberg in the first place. Undaunted, the enterprising circuit members went to a public official and induced him to sell the governor of Florida on the value of the world-wide publicity stunt to the state. Then radiograms began to fill the ether. Some reached the captain of the ship and as a result he suddenly "decided" to alter his course and point toward Miami.

Meanwhile the showmen promoted an air trip for Mrs. Hausner and party from New Jersey to Miami. Daily, local papers splurged latest developments in page one stories. Then came the pay-off. By a series of mishaps, the landing was delayed until almost midnight—much too late for a public reception on the stage of the Olympia and the intended free publicity and extra ticket sale at its box office window.

Paramount last week announced a campaign, national in scope, to obtain a "Panther Woman," in connection with a forthcoming feature. The girl will get a stellar part and a contract immediately after her selection, it was said. The announcement to the press touched upon generalities and was followed by a more informal message to company managers in the field who were told to prepare for the campaign locally.

A description of the girl sought was given to managers as follows: "The 'Panther Woman' must have lithe, feline grace—a combination of seductive charm and dangerous lure. She must be 17 to 30, extraordinarily beautiful, possess a perfect figure and be of average height. Every girl who seeks the part must have the written indorsement of two citizens of standing in the community in regard to her morality."

"Put 'Panther Woman' on everybody's lips," managers are told. "Your wife, your sweetheart, the pest next door may be the 'Panther Woman.' Call em that anyway. If they get sore, so much the better!"

Mimeographed to the publications of the world, under the line reading: "From Lynn Farnol, for Samuel Goldwyn, 729 Seventh Avenue, N. Y. C., Bryant 9-7300" issues the following notice and challenge to the attention of censors, legislators, women's clubs, etc., to say nothing of the plain, everyday American with his notion of average, mine-run respectability:

Samuel Goldwyn's boast for the girls for the Eddie Cantor picture, "The Kid from Spain," is that they are the loveliest and youngest and freshest ever seen this side of heaven, and the most amply revealed girls ever seen outside of a bathtub. Most of them are under eighteen, and more than half are without screen experience. For the last nine months, the producer has been literally combing the world for these girls, making hundreds of tests in the elimination process.

Because of their youth and because of the daring nature of some of the costumery, Goldwyn plans an extension of his "Closed Set" practiced last season. Goldwyn's pictures are made in the same manner as those of Greta Garbo, with admission to the stages denied to all visitors.

For "The Kid from Spain," even the stage hands and the technical crew, excepting only those actually working on scenery, lights or camera, will be barred from the set to save the girls embarrassment.

This last tender paragraph is especially precious. It is to be presumed that if only a handful of stage hands are barred from the set "to save the girls embarrassment" the girls will not mind at all their subsequent highlighted, backlighted and sidelighted exposure to the motion picture patrons among our 125,000,000 Americans.—THE EDITOR.

PAID TESTIMONIALS WIN COURT APPROVAL

Screen Professionals Interested in U. S. Appeals Tribunal's Ruling Reversing Trade Body's "Cease and Desist" Order

A United States court of appeals decision, dealing with paid testimonials in advertising, reverses an earlier decision of the Federal Trade Commission which had issued a "cease and desist" order against the practice of paid testimonials and indorsements where the advertiser did not make known the fact that a sum of money had been paid for the signature. News of the decision was received in Hollywood with more than a little interest since many players and other screen professionals have played an important part in the paid testimonial practice.

Executives of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America would not venture an opinion as to how the court of appeals decision might affect the industry's policy of discouraging paid testimonials by players as a general rule. Some time ago, a member of the Producers' Association in Hollywood informally suggested that a ruling be adopted prohibiting the lending of star names to testimonials. The suggestion later was drafted into a resolution which finally was passed and made binding on studio members. It stipulated that all future contracts be made to include a clause which would compel players to obtain the producer's consent before entering into any testimonial or paid advertising deal. It was also agreed at that time that efforts would be expended to discourage the practice generally except where the testimonial would definitely aid a current picture or the company to which the star is under contract.

Commenting editorially on the new decision, Hollywood Herald said:

> "Of particular importance to many persons in this community is the recent decision of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals dealing with paid testimonials in advertising.
> "All of which is welcome news hereabouts, especially to sorely harrassed press agents. From now on it will not be necessary to consult half a dozen lawyers before venturing upon an advertising tieup."

Basically, the reversal of the Federal Trade Commission opinion holds that paid testimonials need not be labeled as such in the advertising as long as they are truthful.

OPENING GUN IS FIRED IN BATTLE AGAINST CANADIAN QUOTA PLAN

Intimation Given Officially That Restrictions Similar to Those in England Will Be Sought at Ottawa Conference

Official intimation has been given at Ottawa that the text of the resolution on British films to be considered at the Imperial Economic Conference, opening at Ottawa next Thursday, will embody these words:

"That quota requirements similar to those in force in Great Britain should be enacted in all parts of the Empire, subject to minor modifications to meet purely local conditions."

With this announcement, coming from the Federation of British Industries, London, the opening gun is fired in what is expected to develop at the Conference into a bitter fight between British interests favoring a quota law in the Dominion, and American and Canadian groups which are opposed to it. Upon receiving word of the nature of the proposed quota regulation, Allied Exhibitors of Ontario, representing 77 independent theatres of Ontario, threw their hat into the ring by submitting a resolution of protest against any such action to the Canadian Government, as follows:

"It is regularly moved and resolved that the officials of this organization make representation to the Government of the Dominion of Canada and to any Provincial Government interested, that we, as Canadian exhibitors owning Canadian theatres and in no way associated with United States or other interests, unanimously oppose the enactment of any law which requires us to exhibit a fixed number of productions, which may be of inferior quality and wholly unsuitable to our patrons.

"And it is further resolved that we are most anxious and willing to run British pictures in preference to any foreign product, provided that the quality and exploitation of British pictures is such that they draw patronage and thus provide box office receipts, which conditions can only be obtained by selection from competitive product and not by coercion or compulsion."

Merry Battle Awaited

On the other hand, the Federation of British Industries, London, has submitted three recommendations for the consideration of the Conference and the battle promises to be merry. The Federation has asked for action on three points, as follows:

(a) That quota requirements similar to those in force in Great Britain should be enacted in all parts of the Empire. "The suggestion is put forward not as a measure of bolstering up inefficient production by British studios but as a means of insuring that British pictures shall have an opportunity of securing an entry into Empire markets on their merits and not be kept out as a result of highly organized and indeed unfair competition."

(b) "Certain Dominions already offer preferential duties on British films imported from Great Britain. So far as is practicable, in accordance with their respective tariff provisions, these preferential rates should be reciprocal between Great Britain and the respective Dominions and Colonies and between the Dominions and Colonies themselves.

(c) "Films made in British territory should not be eligible to meet the quotas or enjoy the preferences established in the Dominions and Colonies unless made in British territory where regulations similar or of corresponding purpose to those contained in the United Kingdom Cinematograph Films Act, 1927, are in force."

Aimed Against New Studios

This third recommendation is regarded in Canada as being directed against the possibility of the production of pictures in Canada by United States or other companies to qualify under an Empire quota scheme without a quota law being enacted in Canada.

The Federation of British Industries has submitted the further recommendation that "an effort should be made to exhibit publicly in each part of the Empire films depicting the life, habits and methods of other parts. Producers in Great Britain have already established a company with which they are all associated and which carries out a scheme advocated and supported by the Colonial Office for the distribution of British films in the Colonies. It will be the purpose of this organization, among other things, to show in the Colonies pictures illustrating the life and activities of other Colonies and of the Dominions."

Unofficially, this is taken to mean that British producers have already set up the machinery for use following favorable decisions of the Imperial Economic Conference and subsequent enactments by legislative bodies throughout the Empire.

Other Pressure Expected

Pressure from London interests other than the Federation of British Industries is also expected to be brought to bear in the movement to bring about the enactment of a quota law for the Empire. However, action of the Conference at Ottawa next week will take the form of recommendations, with the Dominion and various other Colonies accepting or rejecting the recommendations individually by respective provincial legislatures.

In the meantime from Toronto comes word, circulating in close proximity to the headquarters of Regal Films Limited, that N. L. Nathanson, managing director of the company, and a power in the trade of the Dominion, is cutting short his visit in England and the Continent to return to Canada for the Imperial Conference. Previously he had announced he would remain in Europe until September.

Nathanson has put himself on record as opposed to a British quota plan in Canada, although Regal is the largest Canadian importer of British pictures. With Conference developments pointing to an issue on the quota question, Nathanson is expected to return without much delay.

Premier Watching Preparations

Premier L. A. Taschereau of the Province of Quebec is watching Imperial Conference preparations closely with respect to possible action on film quota proposals because of peculiar local conditions in Quebec, where French films are having a substantial run. It is understood that Taschereau will issue a statement shortly regarding the suggested British film quota for Canada and it is anticipated he will oppose it vigorously.

Canada imported 60 French features last year, all of which have enjoyed wide circulation in Quebec Province. Incidentally, there are two first-run theatres in Montreal which offer French-language films exclusively. Thirty other theatres in Quebec are reported to be specializing with the French releases. Les habitants of Quebec are guarding their French language jealously—and religiously—and it is believed there is not the slightest chance of the entry of British films, or Hollywood pictures, into these theatres by compulsion or otherwise with the possible exception of an unforseen shortage of French language pictures.

The situation in Quebec is generally looked upon as one of those "local conditions" which add considerably to the complexity of a British film quota measure for Canada.

JAP NARRATORS GO ON STRIKE

Dr. Alan Groth, who is interested in amusement enterprises in the Orient, arrived in San Francisco recently and stated that the benshis, or cinema orators who accompany Japanese films with a narrative descriptive of the pictures, are on strike against the sound film. Twenty-three theatres in Tokyo are affected and 300 theatre employees are said to have joined the benshis on strike. The principal demand is for a bonus on dismissal.

Part of Plan Believed Aimed At Production in Canada by Companies from Other Countries; Allied Exhibitors Protest

Chaplin Protesting Tax Valuation of Securities

Charlie Chaplin, who last week was listed on the Los Angeles county assessment roster as the wealthiest man in the film community, with taxable securities worth $7,687,570, has filed a protest with the board of supervisors, indicating that his securities are worth only $1,657,316. The comedian's attorneys asked for a reassessment. They claimed the assessors had valued the securities on old prices instead of current listings. The county assessor said the values were fixed as of March 1, 1932.

Following Chaplin in order of taxable wealth are: Douglas Fairbanks, with taxable stocks and bonds worth $689,000; Harold Lloyd, with stocks and bonds worth $174,450.

Concerning Our Mr. Jenkins

Genially itinerant, a seasoned showman, who is also a remarkable judge of fried chicken, a sage advisor on bass baits, a thoughtful student of the humanities and as kindly in his salty wisdom as Johnny Appleseed himself, our J. C. Jenkins, "The Herald Man," goes up and down the highways and by-ways of the nation, visiting exhibitors, great and small, and writing of what he sees and hears and feels and thinks. "Jaysee" is by way of being an institution as a courier of the goodwill and interest of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Now just the other day, must have been at the very peak of the strawberry short-cake season out in those parts, Mr. Jenkins seems to have brushed up with a friendly editor on the Macomb Daily Journal of Macomb in Illinois, and after "Jaysee" and his faithful motor had gone over the skyline to the somewhere else, this editor wrote:

J. C. Jenkins, the "Motion Picture Herald man," was in Macomb recently, and while J. C. Jenkins means very little to many motion picture fans, he represents about as interesting a character as the film industry has produced and is quite a prophet to the theatre owners.

Years ago the coming of the motion pictures found out in Neligh, Neb., a man owning and operating the "Opera House," a structure, we imagine, about like the old Chandler Opera House of bygone days. And that "Opera House," no doubt, knew the 10c, 20c, and 30c repertoire shows, Jule Walters in "Side Track," The Spooners, Kingsley-Russell, The Dalrymples, Stetson's "Uncle Tom's Cabin," (finally boasting of two Topsys and two Uncle Toms), the Lyman Twins, James T. McAlphin in Ole Olson, Beach & Bowers, Hi Henry, The Black Crook Burlesque, and then later, no doubt, such musical comedies as "Isle of Spice," "Knight for a Day," "Time, the Place and the Girl," and such attractions as "Paid in Full," "Lion and the Mouse," "Arizona," and "Sousa Band." And along about that time the pictures with "The Great Train Robbery," John Bunny, Flora Finch, Maurice Costello, Bayne and Bushman, and Pearl White took it over and the Opera House became a theatre. And J. C. Jenkins was its owner and manager during the changing styles in entertainment from those good old days of real enjoyment down to the jazz age of the talkies.

Several years ago, the Motion Picture Herald, a trade publication for the industry, carried a section, "What the Pictures Did for Me." Exhibitors throughout the country wrote in "panning" or praising a picture for the benefit of brother exhibitors. From out in Nebraska weekly came letters from "Jaysee" Jenkins full of comedy, sound advice, and his diagnosis of a picture was just about 100 per cent. His letters and communications were such that when the department was closed he became a "special" writer and traveling correspondent for the "Herald," which now has acquired about all the former trade publications in the motion picture field.

So, J. C. Jenkins, the former manager and owner of the Neligh, Nebraska, Opera House, is one of the most characteristic writers in the industry, who presents "real interest" to the exhibitors, and incidentally, is on friendly terms with the stars and producers of Hollywood, who, when the gray-haired gentleman visits the capital of Filmland, are anxious to have their pictures taken together. He is one writer whose experience spans the entertainment field.

And what makes J. C. Jenkins, the Herald man, especially close to our "local exhibitor" is the fact that out in Neligh, Nebraska, he and the late Morris Quinn hunted and fished together. And Morris Quinn, years and years ago, was "Scrapper" Quinn, and he and the writer once knew all the holes of Crooked Creek where fish would not bite.

It's a small world, after all, and we find the connecting links of friendship have been forged in many far-away spots and under very strange circumstances.

Cuts Film Prices

The Office of Cooperative Extension Work of the United States Department of Agriculture has announced new low prices for film strips during the fiscal year 1932-33. The prices will range from 14 to 85 cents each, depending upon the number of illustrations. The films are chiefly used in the non-theatrical field.

Standard Drops Detroit

Standard Film Service Company is dropping its Detroit branch from its list of four offices and will concentrate on the operation of its Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Cincinnati branches. Standard product has been taken over by Henry Zapp, Detroit manager, and Miss Ann O'Donnell, assistant manager, who will open their own exchange.

Continuation of Cleveland Suit Appears Likely

The vacillating status of the Cleveland independent exhibitors' monopoly suit against large distributors and Loew's, Inc., now points to a resumption of the taking of depositions in New York, on Monday, July 18, although a later whim of the parties to the suit may result in a reversal of this plan, if the history of the case to date may be accepted as a criterion.

Originally begun early this year, the Cleveland monopoly suit made indifferent progress up to late April, at which time six independent Cleveland exhibitors withdrew from participation in the action, asserting that they had never authorized use of their names as parties to the suit. Immediately following these withdrawals, Samuel Horwitz, attorney for the complainants, who was engaged in the taking of testimony by deposition in New York at the time, interrupted his activities and returned.

Reports of attempts to effect an out-of-court settlement of the complaint ensued thereafter, and some progress toward this end was made during succeeding weeks. One month ago, however, Mr. Horwitz was credited with stating that negotiations to reach an amicable settlement "were definitely and finally off" and that he would resume the taking of depositions in New York at once. On three subsequent weeks, however, reports emanating from Cleveland, and giving Mr. Horwitz as their authority, held that new attempts to effect an out-of-court settlement would be made, each of which was closely followed by a new announcement that all such negotiations "were definitely and finally off."

The latest announcement this week is that Mr. Horwitz will resume the taking of his depositions in New York, on Monday. This countermands last week's announcement which advised that the depositions, scheduled to resume last Monday after all negotiations had "definitely and finally failed," would be held in abeyance while new negotiations were conducted.

The Cleveland monopoly suit originated in a local dispute over admission scales and protection, involving Loew's houses there.

Principal Purchases Picture Record of Jungle Expedition

Sol Lesser, president of Principal Distributing Corporation, has purchased "Head Hunters of the Amazon," pictorial record of the expedition of the Marquis de Wavrin into the jungle of South America in search of the lost explorer, Colonel P. H. Fawcett.

The expedition set out, taking a motion picture camera, when a native told of talking with a white man in the interior who answered to the description of Colonel Fawcett and who was held prisoner by an Indian tribe. The film will be released by Principal in August.

Hays to New York

Will H. Hays left Hollywood on Tuesday for New York. He plans to return to the Coast after one week in the East.

COLD-SHOULDERED UNIONISTS TURN ON BRITISH SUNDAY SHOWS APPEAL

Unrest Among Employees Spreads; Mooring Urges Conciliatory Policy to Avert Impedance in National Politics

by W. H. MOORING, London

There has been a spread of unrest among British cinema workers in recent months. Unless a new spirit is created by theatre owners, this unrest, now in process of stimulation by the National Association of Theatrical Employees, will not only wield its immediate effect upon theatre efficiency, but may find direct expression in the realm of national politics, to the ultimate disservice of cinema trade interest.

The origin of the present outbreak on the part of the N. A. T. E. goes back some time, for in the regime of the late Labor Government, the then minister of labor, Miss Margaret Bondfield, was pressed by trades union members of Parliament to institute an official inquiry into general conditions of labor in screen and stage theatres.

She was on the point of doing so when her Ministerial days come to an end, and the National Government, backed by its terrific majority of Conservative members, inspired confidence among the employing class that the time for more rigid opposition to the ideals of trades unionism had at last arrived.

Union Officials Cold-Shouldered

One cannot say that, since the "arrival" of the National Government, conditions affecting cinema employees have hardened against the workers, but the attitude of exhibitors up and down the country has certainly not softened to the point of friendliness in meeting union demands or union negotiators. In short, with very few exceptions, branches of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association have cold-shouldered the union officials appointed by the employees to put forward their grievances. The attitude comes with bad grace from the C. E. A., itself registered in law as a trade union!

Very largely it is a psychological matter: there are incompatibilities of method and of temperament between the theatre owner and the average trade union officer. The cause, however, is more inconsequential than the effect.

There is a danger that prejudice in their dealings with the trade union officials will deprive the theatre owners of this country of the hundred per cent loyalty of their employees.

It may be true, as one country exhibitor said recently, that "for every theatre servant who is dissatisfied with his job, there are three who would be darned glad to step into it," but true or not, it suggests no solution.

Very Real Grievances

Though at present under a magnifying glass provided by the N. A. T. E., there are very real grievances on the side of cinema workers in regard to present wage standards, hours and conditions.

Why cannot the cinema industry, like several other important British industries, hit upon a conciliatory policy such as would win, as a price of quite minor concessions, the active sympathy and support not alone of the individual employee but of the union groups to which they subscribe?

Sane policy in dealing with trade unionism has exercised the greatest benefit in the stabilization of more than one important British industry, and at this time what the cinema industry needs more than all else is that stabilization which internal cooperation can help to provide.

An example proving the contrary effect is before us at this moment: the N. A. T. E., incensed by the antagonistic attitude of the exhibitors, has called for and obtained the fullest possible opposition on the part of every trades union member of Parliament, to the Sunday Cinemas Bill.

May Affect Others

This opposition in turn will affect the attitude of many other M. P.'s who, being antagonistic to the cinema generally or to the principle of seven day theatres, will snap up the arguments of these union M.P.'s, possibly with deleterious effect upon the immediate interests of the cinema business.

The attitude of the N. A. T. E. toward Sunday opening now is, as expressed by its general secretary, Hugh Roberts: "We cannot trust the exhibitors; they make promises to us but when called upon to make them good, they give us the frozen mitt. Our only safe course in our efforts to eliminate, or limit, gross exploitation of our members is to throw our whole weight against the seven day week. We are not yet getting a fair deal on the six day working schedule."

So the N. A. T. E. is organizing mass protest meetings all through the country, and although trade unionism is at present in the ebb rather than the flow, even that ebb may leave a good deal of mud behind. The British industry needs trade politicians with the rare faculty for giving the proverbial sardine as bait for the mackerel!

Mrs. Baldwin Urges Attention to Children

When the organizers of the recent and successful British Cinema Trade's Exhibition called upon Mrs. Stanley Baldwin, wife of Britain's former premier and present leader of the House of Commons, to perform the opening ceremony, they could scarcely have expected that the lady would treat them to such plain speaking.

She said little or nothing about the Exhibition: she refrained from the usual formal flattery of the official speaker, and got down to brass tacks on one of the sorest political points at present affecting the cinema in this country.

The power the cinema industry enjoys, said Mrs. Baldwin, carries tremendous responsibilities. What did they propose to do in regard to meeting the demands of the mothers of Britain, for more suitable cinema programs for children? Did they sufficiently realize their obligations as purveyors of entertainment of such great cultural and educational significance? Could not the British cinemas follow the lead of the British Broadcasting Corporation and institute Children's Hours in cinemas?

Reflects Growing Opinion

Her speech all but knocked out the leaders of the cinema industry assembled in such large numbers to listen to something quite different, but the lady did not flinch. She had a message and she gave it. More significant still, she was voicing the growing feeling on this side of the Atlantic, where the constant efforts of MOTION PICTURE HERALD—as epitomized so often in well reasoned articles by Martin Quigley—to obtain a higher tone in film stories and treatments arouse the sympathies not only of welfare organizations but of the bulk of British cinema owners, notably in the Provinces where agitation against unpleasant film themes is greatly on the increase.

The protest of the paid agitator, and of the ecclesiastical busybody, has been rightly ignored in the past, she said, but the volume of weighty resistance at present manifest against the sex, crime and horror film, comes today from people with a case and with a will to influence sane public opinion.

Something may soon have to be done about it, for too many of the recent films have been graded "A" (adults only) by the British Board of Film Censors, Mrs. Baldwin pointed out, and asked whether a partial remedy may not be pointed by the educational-interest film, upon which America is now working and which has not as yet been seriously taken in hand by British producers.

Mrs. Baldwin all unconsciously opened a question which later in the week, at the International Conference of Cinema Owners, was to occupy a good half-day discussion.

James Welsh, ex-M.P. and now vice-president of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, started a discussion on "Censorship," and the ensuing talk pointed pretty definitely to the need for a general clean-up of production schedules and policy.

Federal Court Holds the Standard Contract Illegal

The standard exhibition contract was declared illegal by Judge Swenson of the federal district court at Grand Rapids, N. D., last week, and exhibitors and distributors who were parties to it in the suit of United Artists against John Pillar were held by the court to be an illegal combination.

United Artists had brought action against Mr. Pillar, exhibitor, for $1,800 damages, claimed on unplayed pictures.

AD CODE COMMITTEE IS VOTED ON COAST

Hays Declares All Employees Having Part in Appearance of Objectionable Material Shall be Discharged by AMPP

Coincident with a decision of the Association of Motion Picture Producers that an Advertising Code Committee be established for effective operation of the Code comes word from Hollywood that Will H. Hays is threatening summary action against any producers who violate the Code of Advertising Ethics.

All employees of member companies who have any part in the preparation or dissemination of advertising material adjudged offensive are liable to discharge, said Mr. Hays. He declared that all material prepared at the studios' publicity offices must conform to the Code.

Furthermore, exhibitors making use of such objectionable advertising shall be denied support of the industry.

Cites Mistakes Made

The Association of Motion Picture Producers, in its resolution, pointed out that "it is recognized that mistakes have been made in certain recent advertising, motivated by the belief that such advertising would help to overcome the effects of the present depression on attendance."

The Advertising Code Committee will consist of the publicity and advertising heads of the studio of each of the member companies. The chairman of the committee is to be a representative of the AMPP and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. The committee is to meet weekly for two months and "thereafter as frequently as the chairman of the committee shall deem proper, to discuss problems of advertising and publicity as they relate to compliance with the provisions of the Advertising Code."

It was also decided that the chief executives of the studios shall require the attendance of their publicity and advertising leaders at the meetings and that "such executive heads shall charge such publicity and advertising heads with the imperative necessity of the compliance with the provisions of the Advertising Code."

The advertising and publicity heads are to assume responsibility for all advertising, illustrations and accessories used by their company in California or by any affiliate. They are to confer with the committee chairman when any question of good taste arises, and submit copy.

In case of violation of the Code in newspaper advertising for the theatre, use of such copy shall be immediately discontinued by all concerned.

Chairman Responsible

The resolution also states:

"The chairman of such Committee shall be charged with the responsibility and have authority of determining whether or not any suggested advertising or advertising actually issued is a violation of the Code, whether in word, illustration, press book, trade paper, newspaper, magazine or billboard advertising. In the event, however, that the advertising or publicity director does not agree with the representative of the Association (such chairman of said Committee) in the matter, he may appeal to a jury of three to be selected from the advertising and publicity heads of the various companies operating under the Code and members of such Advertising Code Committee; such jury to consist of the three members of such Advertising Code Committee alphabetically next in line, using a different jury for each appeal.

"When an advertising or publicity head desires to appeal from the decision of such jury, or if the chairman of such Committee desires to appeal from the decision of such jury, the matter shall be submitted to the Board of Directors of the Association of Motion Picture Producers, Inc. (California). If appeal therefrom is desired by either party (either the publicity or advertising head or the representative of the Association), appeal may be had to the board of directors of the M P P D A, whose findings shall be final."

1 Play, 11 Books Bought in June

Story material purchased during June for new season's productions represents a variety of themes and both domestic and foreign authors, including such well known names as those of Eugene O'Neill, Louis Bromfield, Pearl Buck and Donald Henderson Clarke.

Only 12 purchases were announced during the month, and of these 11 were works of fiction and one a stage play. This represents the smallest proportion of stage plays among monthly purchases of production material in the past six months, and continues the downward trend of play purchases for screen use.

Following are the purchases announced for June:

Fox

"That Girl," from the French novel, "Marie Galante," by Jacques Deval.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

"Storm of the Plains," from the Hungarian play, "Pusztai Szel," by Alexander Hunyady.

"The Good Earth," novel, by Pearl Buck.

"Laughing One," magazine story, by Crosbie Garstin.

"Flying the Mail," series of magazine articles, by Bogart Rogers.

"Let's Go," magazine serial, by E. J. Rath.

"Fury," original screen story, by Edmund Goulding.

Paramount

"Suburb," novel, by Vera Caspary.

"Single Night," novelette, by Louis Bromfield.

RKO Radio

"Indecent Years," novel, by Larry Baretto.

World Wide

"Recklessness," a story, by Eugene O'Neill.

"Baby Face," novel, by Donald Henderson Clarke.

New Generation in Films

Charles Spencer Chaplin, 7 (left) and his brother, Sydney Earl, 6, arrived in New York on Monday en route from France to Hollywood to begin their motion picture careers with the Fox Film Corporation. Accompanied by their mother, Lita Grey Chaplin, and by their grandmother, Mrs. Lillian Grey, the youngsters left on Wednesday for the coast to appear with Mrs. Chaplin in five features which are scheduled to be made over a three-year period.

They speak English and French fluently and, according to Fox publicity, "it is said that they have always been eager to become screen actors."

New York ship reporters, a battery of city desk assignees and Joseph Reilly, chief of the Fox private police, were on hand to greet the boys. Mr. Reilly was there "to see that nothing untoward developed," according to a "World Telegram" scribe who apparently missed the conversation between a reporter of the "New York Sun" and Charles Spencer, Junior, during which the boy went on record as saying "I don't want to be like my father, I want to be a great actor."

Sydney Earl, six years old, has already learned the ways of the "new" Hollywood. He confided to the "Sun" newsman that he "shall do whatever the director tells me."

Nicholas Gyory, Mrs. Chaplin's lawyer and manager, in discussing reports that Charles Chaplin might seek an injunction against the boys' acting, is quoted by the New York press as saying, "There is no animosity on our part. If it is true that he intends to interfere we are ready."

Tichenor Acquires Historic "Outlook"

Frank A. Tichenor, long a well known figure in the world of the motion picture and last president of the General Film Company, now a publisher, has purchased the "Outlook and Independent" for $12,500 at sale before Howard P. Coffin in New York, by order of the Irving Trust Company, receivers in bankruptcy. Mr. Tichenor, who publishes the Aero Digest, The Spur and other magazines, said that he would continue the "Outlook and Independent" and in forming a new staff would give preference to present employees.

The "Outlook and Independent" is a merger of the oldest journals of opinion in the United States. The "Outlook" was founded in 1869 under the editorship of Henry Ward Beecher, and for many years was edited by Lyman Abbott. The "Independent," founded in 1848 was purchased by "The Outlook" four years ago. Both publications have numbered among their contributors many of America's most famous men. The late Colonel Theodore Roosevelt was a notable contributing editor of "The Outlook" through his last years.

The furniture and outfittings of Colonel Roosevelt's office where he wrote his "big stick" contributions are among the assets of the magazine and will one day doubtless assume a considerable museum value.

Peacock in Distribution Deal With RKO Radio

Negotiations have been concluded between Peacock Motion Picture Company and RKO Radio under which the Peacock Company becomes the exclusive distributor of RKO Radio Pictures in China, Manchuria, Hongkong and Macao. Eighty feature pictures are included in the agreement in addition to a program of short subjects and Pathe News.

The agreement was effected for Peacock by Telfair Knight, executive vice president and general manager, who has been in New York for the last several weeks. Mr. Knight intends to return to China shortly.

The Peacock Company is the only American owned motion picture company in China. It has been in operation for twelve years. Several years ago it acquired the theatres of Hertzberg enterprises in addition to which the Peacock Company has booking arrangements with approximately thirty theatres in the key cities of China. Beyond its motion picture operations, the company is one of the largest distributors of theatre equipment in the Far East, representing, among others, International Projector Company in China, Indo-China, Dutch East Indies and Straits Settlements.

Author Sues Publisher on Biography of Will H. Hays

Silas Bent, author, of Old Greenwich, Conn., has instituted suit in the United States district court at New York against Horace Liveright, Inc., New York publishers, based on a biography of Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, which Mr. Bent, in his complaint, claims he wrote under contract with the defendant, but which was never published. The manuscript, Mr. Bent alleges, was returned to him. He asks $30,000 damages for alleged loss of royalties.

Cliff Lewis Named Columbia Studio Publicity Manager

Cliff Lewis, recently resigned from the Paramount home office advertising department, has been appointed publicity manager of the Columbia studio on the Coast, under the supervision of George Brown, director of advertising and publicity.

Mr. Lewis has already assumed his new duties at the Columbia plant. At one time, early in the course of his 12 years in the industry, he was publicity director for the old Mark-Strand Company for two years.

Fox Exchange Manager Dead

Ben Gould, Los Angeles manager for Fox, died this week of heart disease. He is survived by his widow and one child. Mr. Gould had been with the company for 15 years. J. A. Dillon has taken over Los Angeles, and George Ballentine replaces Dillon in San Francisco. Hernon Edmond. Baltimore, succeeds Ballentine as Seattle manager.

Originator of "Roxy Usher" To Manage Radio City House

Charles Griswold, former manager of the Roxy theatre, has been named manager of the 6,000-seat motion picture theatre at Radio City, S. L. "Roxy" Rothafel, director of Radio City amusement enterprises, announced recently. Griswold, whose appointment becomes effective this fall, is recognized as the originator of the "Roxy usher," the meticulously dressed and rigidly trained type of theatre ushers which attracted international attention in the years immediately following their appearance, and were copied in the leading picture theatres of the world.

Brandt Remains on Coast

Joe Brandt, president of World Wide, will remain on the Coast for six weeks, while the first group of six features gets under way. Joe Goldberg, general sales manager of World Wide, and J. H. Skirball, general sales manager of Educational, have returned to New York.

THE NEWEST PICTURES

Tom Mix Moves the Western Front to Mythical Olvania; Independents Ring the Bell Again

By LEO MEEHAN, Hollywood

Previews of new product the past week were rather light, with Tom Mix copping the honors along with Mickey Rooney—who used to play "Mickey McGuire" in the comedy series by that name—in "My Pal, the King." Here's something new in the line of "westerns." The western front was moved over to Olvania, one of those mythical Balkan kingdoms, where Tom is on a European tour with an American Wild West show.

Mickey, one of our best thespians, is the Boy King of Olvania, like Prince Michael used to be in Rumania until his pa came home from an extended "weekend" in Paris with a well known titian blonde and took back the kinging job. So, Tom stages a command performance of his Wild West show for the boy king and his mother, the queen. Naturally, the kid goes in a big way for the cowboys, Injuns and whatnot, especially Tom. Trouble is brewing in the boys' cabinet, looks like revolution and "curtains" for the youngster. Tom saves the day; restores the kid to his wobbly throne. Booking dates demand that the show moves on, and there is a touching parting between Tom and Mickey. The whole thing has real novelty, is well done and should go like a house afire with the multitude of fans of both Tom and Mickey.

Another nice, clean family entertainment turned up from the independent ranks this week. It is "Forbidden Company," produced by George R. Batcheller for his company, Chesterfield. It has an appealing story with plenty of well handled human interest, good action and a strong juvenile romance carried on by Sally Blane and John Darrow. Other fine performances are given by John St. Polis, Norma Drew, Josephine Dunn, Dorothy Christy, Myrtle Steadman, Bryant Washburn.

"Skyscraper Souls" from MGM is a short of "Grand Hotel" affair laid in a tall office building. If the stock market wounded your feelings, this may depress you, what with a murder, a suicide, a suffocation and some more rather messy and depressing happenings. Warren William plays the part of an egotistical financier, who busts up a lot of things through a gigantic swindle. Others in the cast include George Barbier, Norman Foster, Helen Colburn, Wallace Ford, Maureen O'Sullivan, Anita Page, Gregory Ratoff, Jean Hersholt, Hedda Hopper. There are very lavish backgrounds, too. But it is all pretty depressing in this depressing time. Perhaps the theory is if you go and see some other people who are worse off than you are, you'll come out feeling better. Mebbe so.

All of which reminds me that there is a lot of discussion going on out here these days (in fact, almost always) about what kind of stories the public will buy. It is generally conceded that a good picture, no matter what the subject or story may be, will do business. But it is also conceded that some pictures are not good because the stories do not appeal, or are not properly done. This naturally raises the question of public tastes, preferences. One producer was recently quoted as saying he was going to make heavy, serious drama, on the theory that in times of stress people become more serious, more thoughtful, and therefore more open to entertainment which requires thinking caps. Another, taking the opposite view, says he will run to comedy and light, frothy screen material, because people want to laugh, forget their troubles. Probably they are both right, when the product is right! Neat dodge, that, eh? Oh, well, we invented the alibi business out here in Hollywood. But don't you believe the boys and girls out here these days aren't trying their durndest to produce pictures that will get public response. Jobs are too scarce to experiment any more than is necessary.

Ed Schnitzer Is Guest at Luncheon

A testimonial luncheon was tendered Edward M. Schnitzer at the Hotel Astor, New York, on Tuesday, in observance of his new association with the Educational-World Wide sales staff. Schnitzer was formerly with the Fox Film Corporation's eastern sales office.

"Congorilla" To Premiere July 21

"Congorilla," produced in Africa by Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson, and the first all sound and talking picture to be made in the jungle, will have its world premiere at the Winter Garden in New York on July 21. At the premiere numerous scientists, explorers and film celebrities are expected, while Mr. and Mrs. Johnson will appear in person.

The exploring couple spent more than two years on safari in Africa, taking more than 130,000 feet of film during their travels. Unusual closeup shots of apes and gorillas, taken with sound, were recorded on the expedition. The Johnsons also obtained sound and talking films of the pygmies, with whom the explorers spent seven months.

MR. LAEMMLE QUOTES MR. FRANKLIN (BEN)

Mr. Carl Laemmle, who recently had a sojourn in a Baltimore hospital, on emerging, fit and energetic again, has written to Mr. Martin Quigley, publisher of Motion Picture Herald, certain of his observations and notions while regarding the ceiling at Johns Hopkins. Remarks Mr. Laemmle:

I believe you would have been interested in the things that came to my mind while I was lying flat on my back for several weeks with nothing to do but think. It is quite amazing how much better perspective a man in this, or any, business can get when it is forced upon him as it was in my case.

I have jotted down the gist of my thoughts and if you think anything here will help the business or anyone in it, use it as you like. I base my idea on Benjamin Franklin's classic: "We must all hang together or assuredly we shall all hang separately." These historic words were spoken when this nation was in its infancy.

They apply with equal force today to all parts of the nation, and to all of its activities. But they apply with peculiar force now to all elements of the motion picture business.

Any man in this industry who is seeking to capitalize on the temporary misfortunes of others in this industry is a traitor to us all. He is weakening the structure on which the future of all of us is resting.

Any producer who secretly hopes his competitor will fall by the wayside; any exhibitor who secretly hopes his opposition will have to close; any distributor who works an unnecessary hardship on his customer; any exhibitor who unnecessarily pinches his distributor; any such man is misguided, mistaken and miscast in this business. He simply does not belong!

Now is the time for sympathetic understanding; for patient cooperation; for broad-mindedness; for the squarest of square dealings, each of us with the other.

On this immovable rock let us take our stand, not with a mere hope of reward, but with certain knowledge that no other policy can withstand whatever storms may come.

Whoever sells this industry short is cutting his own throat.

Sincerely,

CARL LAEMMLE.

Planned Film Center Auctioned

Sun City, planned several years ago as a Florida production center, near Tampa, has been sold at auction for $100 to W. W. Staplen of Orland, who held a $50,000 mortgage on the property.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Skyscraper Souls

(MGM)

Drama

There is so much to be sold in "Skyscraper Souls" that picking out the features that will best intrigue your patronage depends largely upon knowing your patronage. It is a story of New York—not of its teeming millions or its gaudy night life; rather the story of a man whose life's accomplishment is the building of a gigantic skyscraper, the story of his ambitions and his failings, his loves and his passions, his honest business deals and his double crossing, his influence on all who come in contact with him, the power of his name and the shallowness of his character.

There's drama, romance, comedy, spectacle, human interest, and a bit of flamboyant sex here and there. There's a cast, with names that mean plenty at almost any box office. There's a story built around this man, David Dwight, and his building that will take its auditors into the stock market, to watch the shares of "Seacoast" soar to heights, then drop like a plummet, with fortunes wrecked, lives wiped out.

There's an atmosphere of lavishness in settings that is a couple of steps ahead of the parade. Yet to make the picture in its present form, plenty of liberties have been taken with Faith Baldwin's story, "Skyscraper," that ran in Cosmopolitan about a year ago. Nevertheless, that story was read by hundreds of thousands. It would not be wise to ignore references to it.

Names, as well as novelty of theme, will prove decided assets. Warren William, whose latest Warner picture, "The Dark Horse," is kicking up quite a bit of excitement just now, heads the list of box office magnets, which include Maureen O'Sullivan, Norman Foster, Anita Page, Gregory Ratoff, Jean Hersholt, Wallace Ford and Hedda Hopper. All are outstanding in their roles and a comparative newcomer, Verree Teasdale, carries much of the dramatic romance.

Without trying to concentrate too much on big business, develop as strong as possible a campaign along the lines of financial accomplishment—legitimate and crooked. Ring in that powerfully interesting angle of the stock market skyrocketing and the consequent debacle. While the picture has tragedy for its climax, it is suggested that not much stress be placed on lines such as "the price they paid for wealth and power" or anything that smacks of that biblical idea—"what profiteth a man if he gains the whole world and loses his own soul."

"Skyscraper Souls" can be shown to any type of audience. The small towns should like it for its glamour and lavishness, as well as for its picturization of how the world of finance works, and how its manipulators enmesh the world of little people. The cities should like it for its vivid romance and snappy theme that deals with circumstances and personalities with which they are pretty familiar.

If you can, get hold of plenty of stills showing the modernism and lavishness of the settings. Spot these in windows in unusual places. You may be able to make tieups for newspaper editorials on the stock market angle, pointing out the perils of speculation.

The title likewise is good for any number of good exploitation angles, built on the idea of the frantic skyscraping ambitions of every one—janitors, stenographers, bank-clerks, millionaires—to clean up in the market as well as in their more intimate desires.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Metro. Directed by Edgar Selwyn. From the book, "Skyscraper," by Faith Baldwin. Adapted by C. Gardner Sullivan. Dialogue and continuity by Elmer Harris. Sound, Douglas Shearer. Art director, Cedric Gibbons. Photographed by William Daniel. Release date, July 16, 1932. Running time, 80 minutes.

Congorilla

(Fox)

Travel Adventures

For those who like their African travelogues with all the trimmings that go with them, plus the added incentive (if we can call it such) of sound, this picture, produced by Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson, will be highly acceptable entertainment. Some of the "shots" are really exciting and while there are no animal battles "to the death," it is quite capable of holding the interest of any audience that goes for this sort of picture.

The scenes among the pygmies are unusually interesting; in fact, they represent the best part of the entire picture. Had there been other shots of equal interest it would have helped to make this attraction one of the best to come to our screens. As it now stands "Congorilla" cannot claim anything better than its many predecessors except the sound which they say was recorded right on the spot.

There is no denying that this kind of picture can be ballyhooed and exploited beyond your wildest imagination. If you question that statement just see what show-merchandising has been doing for "Bring 'Em Back Alive."

The title, plus the African background of wild animals and natives, presents a multitude of angles that properly handled should produce definite results for any type of theatre. Without actually possessing outstanding thrills, "Congorilla" has everything else the average customer can expect in the way of interesting travel in a savage location.

Take that title and back it up with a smashing campaign in which the highlights of the picture are emphasized. As for the pygmy wedding, the stampede of the elephants, and so forth, you can find all the important slants right in the fine press book which has been prepared and if tackled and sold on a big scale we can see no reason why you should not do a very good business.

Use particular judgment in the selection of the surrounding show. Remember, this is a travelogue and the remainder of the show must contain plenty of good entertainment in order to round out a satisfactory program.—Lewis.

Produced and photographed by Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson. Distributed by Fox. Edited by Truman Tally. Running time, 72 minutes.

Igloo

(Universal)

Eskimo Drama

Ewing Scott, with cameramen and other production necessities, went up into the Eskimo country in the Arctic regions, somewhere north of Point Barrow, Alaska, and between March and September, 1931, recorded the precarious existence of the natives, weaving a story thread through the film, and a native romance in a land where the rubbing of noses is a sign of affection between the sexes.

An accompanying descriptive narrative at intervals illuminates the unfolding story of cold snow and shifting pack ice, and the efforts of a young and handsome native to win the hand of the old chief's daughter, and lead the tribe to safety when the food supply gives out. Certain of the superstitious customs and habits of the people are clearly indicated.

Concerning the salable possibilities of the film, there is, first, the element of novelty. The film is definitely off the beaten track. Only natives appear, and they do their work with an evidence of sincerity and naturalness, whether they knew they were acting or not. Tone the advertising in keeping with the background of the picture. Ice, snow and storm, a strange people subsisting on what the fortunes of nature may bring in the form of walrus, seal, whale and polar bear; romance and wooing a dominant factor in the lives of the younger of the tribe, "even as you and I" in our comfortable homes and paved streets; all these may well be used as advertising keynotes.

Lobby displays, again in keeping, will have to serve as drawing power to the box office in place of the possibility of star names. But there is no reason why these expedients should not be as effective as the "names" in selling the regular type of film. Play up Chee-Ak, hero of the saga, as a new sort of film star, and one, incidentally, who handles himself with a definite self-assurance which is effective.

Do not make the error of selling this film as a wild melodrama of the north. It is a saga of a people, truly recorded with the camera, at the same time containing much in the nature of suspense and action. The film is highlighted by a sequence showing the tribe trapped on breaking ice floes in the open sea, and making desperate efforts to escape. The audience should find much that is of interest, much that is entertaining.—AARONSON.

The Purchase Price

(Warner)

Drama

Whether or not this picture does business will be determined by how you combine cast names with selling copy. Barbara Stanwyck ranks up in the HERALD Exhibitor Poll. That indicates something. George Brent is the beneficiary of a high pressure campaign in trade and fan magazines as well as newspapers boosting him as a serious contender with Clark Gable for popularity with the women.

Briefly, here's the story. Miss Stanwyck is the ace performer in a guady night club. Lyle Talbot is her "flame"—has the key to her apartment and all that. Barbara sickens of the gay life and beats it to Montreal. There she buys a mail-order husband for the chambermaid. Next we find her on the prairies of North Dakota. George Brent is the mail-order husband. They are married, but George has to sleep out in the barn with the cows and chickens. There's a lot of business that shows why farmers are yelling so loudly for relief. Barbara helps George—wants to warm up to him—but he can never forget the whack in the jaw he got on his wedding night. Of course, there's another man, David Landau, who is attracted to Barbara, and that stirs up a lot of difficulty. The mortgage is about to fall due. And just about that time, who should walk in but Talbot. Then, of course, the climax that doesn't climax as someone tries to burn George's wheatfield and he and Barbara put the fire out. Then you're left with the impression that George really has awakened to Barbara's sterling qualities.

There is drama and human interest in the picture, but it's hard to believe that a night club lady would endure the soul-searing trials that are Barbara's and it's hard to believe that a college graduate would be advertising for a mail-order bride.

You can bring out some exceptional selling points about a woman who would sacrifice wealth, ease, popularity in the bright lights for the poverty-stricken life of a prairie farm. There's an ideal in that, an ideal that you probably can work up into a strong appeal to the feminine contingent of your patrons. Probably a carefully prepared campaign directed at the women, detailing the sacrifices they will make for love would be effective. If you can lure the women, maybe they will be able to get the punch that was calculated for the picture. As far as the youngsters are concerned, it will be over their heads.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner. Directed by William A. Wellman. Based on a story, "The Mud Lark" by Arthur Stringer. Screen play by Robert Lord. Film editor, Bill Holmes. Photographed by Sid Hickox. Release date, July 23, 1932. Running time, 78 minutes.

The Old Dark House

(Universal)

Mystery

Where "terror" pictures still are in vogue, this latest in the series of Universal spine-tinglers may be received with open arms, and may arouse some of the enthusiasm that went to "Frankenstein" and "Dracula." But it's going to take showmanship of the most resourceful type to kindle that wild interest.

"The Old Dark House" is mystery melodrama. It's full of suspense. No one can tell just what is going to happen. Consequently there is illusion, with plenty of opportunity for audiences to exercise their own imaginations. Unlike "Dracula" or "Frankenstein," the tragedy of its drama is always threateneng but never eventuates. The atmosphere of eerie mystery, centered in an isolated old English farm house, is maintained in every character. Once inside the house, after a harrowing trip over storm-drenched roads, escaping landslides and washouts by hairbreadths, the audience is introduced to a series of characters that look capable of the most fiendish crimes.

Yet grim as is the setting, there is a contrasting air of comedy and lightness made possible by Eva Moore, Lillian Bond and Charles Laughton. There is always the spectre of Boris Karloff, again in a weird makeup, this time as a mute dummy, but one whose eyes carry a baleful gleam.

There is any number of different angles that can be used to stimulate a new interest in "The Old Dark House." As far as possible fight shy of any references to "Dracula" and "Frankenstein." Your campaign should emphasize the difference in concept and construction.

It is not to be expected that this picture will be the beneficiary of such a tremendous big-city first run campaign as was "Frankenstein." Therefore it will be necessary to stimulate the maximum amount of curiosity in a minimum amount of time and at the smallest expense. The mere announcement of Karloff's name will be almost sufficient to convey the idea that the picture is one of these mystery features full of the thrills that cause hearts to skip a beat or two. But avoid the use of such words as "terror" and "horror." Services of doctors and nurses in the theatre will not be necessary. You don't have to worry that there is anything that will scare them.

Play this up as a surprise melodrama that is weird from start to finish, but without a single murder, although there are many occasions when sudden death looks like the only thing that can happen.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Tom Brown of Culver

(Universal)

Drama

Every once in a while Universal comes up with some brand new idea in motion picture production. Previous to "Tom Brown of Culver," "Frankenstein" is the latest—but "All Quiet on the Western Front" is not to be forgotten.

This is a picture that is box office from the very beginning. It differs from the accepted standard in that romance as it is commonly understood has been almost absolutely ignored. But yet there is plenty of heart interest. Heart interest in the real lives of real boys that the grown-ups will find a welcome relief —that will stir the most fervid emotions in the breasts of the youngsters.

Practically all of the picture was made in the famous Culver Military Academy. It shows how the cadets live: the fun they have, the work they do, their military training, their joys and their disappointments, their games—in fact every minute of their daily life is portrayed in graphic fascinating fashion.

The story concerns the career of a boy whom the American Legion is putting through the Academy. Parades, martial music, drills—all the fan-fare of the training of a soldier is there. Those few words should be enough to give you every idea of how to sell this picture to your patrons.

Tieups are possible with your local American Legion posts, other veteran organizations from the D. A. R. and the G. A. R. all the way down the line to your local high school battalions and the Boy Scouts. All kinds of tieups with schools and service and civic organizations are possible and easily adaptable. Arrange for parades of local organizations with bands and fife and drum corps. As soon as you have the picture booked get hold of your Legion officers. Just show them how this picture in honest, straight-forward fashion is one grand ballyhoo for the great educational work they are trying to do and it's almost a certainty that they'll take over all the details of your ballyhoo campaign.

In your newspaper advertising don't fail to get across the idea that this is a different picture—something that steps out of the beaten path of the usual entertainment construction. You can well afford to spend a little extra money in advertising and if, instead of just buying space, you make that money sell the picture by using copy and art that is as novel and different as the picture, you will get that outlay back many times over.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm

(Fox)

Drama

With a background of smart showmanship in which the individual house manager should inject all of the appeal of the old 10-20-30 stock company selling angles, "Rebecca" should romp home to the joy and satisfaction of swell receipts for the theatre and the box office. Here is a picturization of a story and play that is known from one end of the country to the other. For endless seasons it was the reliable of every local or traveling stock company, a sort of piece de resistance, as it were. (Ain't we getting snooty?).

In it your audience will find, and revel in, the poor little farm "goil," the fatherless brood of kids, the villain who would send his "cheeild" to the poor farm, the stern and unrelenting rich aunt, and last, but lawdy me, not the least of all, the raging snowstorm in which none other than the heroine and hero fight their way to succor the poor sick "wom-yan."

Ah, me! If American audiences still delight in the good old mello drama, then they ought to flock out in bushels to see virtuous little Becky go through thick and thin and emerge victorious, and still virtuous, for a finale fade-out.

All you need do to dope out the box office possibilities of this picture is to forget those seven or eight large key cities. They will turn up their snooty noses, perhaps. But not all those other towns and cities. No, indeed. Every one else in this broad (and dry) land of ours will sit through with giggles and tears as they follow the progress of Rebecca to its happy conclusion.

Plenty of box office appeal to this title and you can go to great lengths to play up the Fox home office line—"The Sweetest Story Ever Told." No one will offer arguments if they do take exceptions. A little more strength in names would have been quite welcome.

Unlike many other old-time stories, this has been modernized in the script so as to give it a rather up-to-date touch, and a welcome thought that was. Therefore, its audience value is strong for the small towns and cities. And we'll venture the thought that many of the customers of the larger spots will get some real enjoyment out of it, too.

We are absolutely sincere when we say that we consider this a darned good picture. Not because it is a directorial masterpiece, or the crowning achievement of any one in the cast, but because it has many human touches. It will appeal to the masses and serve as a decidedly different sort of evening's entertainment in that its chief appeal is NOT sex, divorce, the eternal triangle, or what have you. It's just entertainment of the kind that satisfied mother, father and our grandparents and will do no harm to the present generation, fast living notwithstanding.

We recommend "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" as worthy of any theatre's screen.—LEWIS.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Alfred Santell. Based on play by Kate Douglas Wiggin and Charlotte Thompson. Screen play by S. N. Behrman and Sonya Levien. Photographed by Glenn MacWilliams. Release date, July 3, 1932. Running time, 80 minutes.

The Mayor's Nest

(British and Dominions)

Comedy with Music

In this one Sydney Howard has a part that fits his drollery like a glove. As Joe Pilgrim, who "stands for progress," he makes little of it as a trombonist. Learning that a certain man has just inherited a fortune from an old gent whom he had once helped across the road, Pilgrim decided to try his luck as an unofficial traffic guide. This way he meets an elderly widow of anti-social wealth and highly social conscience, who gets him to put up for the local town council, pledges to abolish slums and give the people houses with bathrooms. He cuts a comic caper as a candidate, but of course is elected, and later becomes the town's mayor and chief magistrate.

He turns the court into a place of genial justice, excusing his friends of crime, emptying the poor box at their feet and generally introducing a new note into courtroom procedure. Howard gets the laughs, and the only pity, many said after the first show, is that the film is allowed to hang on the principal comedy situations, as though attempting to get more than the last drop out of each one before passing on to the next. All the same P. Maclean Rogers, who directed, is now spoken of as a coming new director among the few Britain possesses. Hubert Marsh and Herbert Wilcox have hit upon a subject which will appeal greatly to the mass of country people in Britain who know the ways of local legislators, and the gags, though always flippant enough, are wrought in profound meaning which will not be missed by the people. Howard is held to be one of this country's best comedy bets today, and this one will help him further forward.—MOORING, London.

Jack's the Boy

(Gaumont-Gainsborough)

Comedy

This is very clean fun without question, and to judge by its reception by a London premiere audience, it is the biggest laughter-producer ever put out of a British studio. Laughs are so thick there is sometimes danger of losing the dialogue. The picture is a starring affair with the comedy pair, Jack Hulbert and Cecily Courtneidge, carrying the weight of honors. They will both add luster, if one is to judge by present reactions at the London Tivoli, to their already well set reputations as comedians.

The story is a semi-musical farce, and is near at times to becoming a kind of musical comedy. Jack (Hulbert) is the son of a Scotland Yard police chief and decides to work through the police ranks in order to earn the job his father says he is incompetent to fill in the force. His antics on duty, his affairs of the heart, and his efforts, aided by Mrs. Bobday (Miss Courtneidge), a Scottish restaurant proprietress, to capture a crime gang, provide most delightful fooling. The climax, when both Jack and Mrs. Bobday get the criminals in Madame Tussaud's, Britain's most famous old waxwork exhibition, is a riot, the crooks and their pursuers all at times adopting protective disguise as effigies of famous characters in the show.

Walter Forde has not played for brilliance in direction, and has avoided all camera tricks. But opinion was that this film, though lacking the brilliance of "Susie" in which Hulbert last played, affords the comedian an easier popular role. In any case, a highly critical audience nearly went wild over the film.—MOORING, London.

Produced by Gainsborough Pictures. Distributed by Gaumont-British. Directed by Walter Forde. Story by Jack Hulbert and Douglas Furber. Photography, Leslie Rowson. Scenario, W. P. Lipscombe. Music by Vivian Ellis. Dances by Jack Hulbert.

Miss Pinkerton

(First National)

Murder Mystery

Perhaps the strongest exploitation angle offered in the selling of this murder mystery film is its story origination. Lose no opportunity in a tieup of the title with the original novel by Mary Roberts Rinehart, which, when run in serial form in the "Saturday Evening Post," was in the first place definitely a successful story, and secondly, and because of the first consideration, was doubtless read by the assorted several millions of readers who regularly purchase the magazine.

There is a bookstore tieup here, as well, which should be worth box office dollars in a community or town-wide selling campaign. The elements of potential patron-attraction are in the hands of the exhibitor. An immensely popular story, the fact that it is a mystery, with two murders to boot, the vivaciously active and rather attractive Joan Blondell as the hospital nurse who suddenly and unexpectedly becomes a detective, and not quite as suddenly or unexpectedly falls in love with her newly acquired superior, George Brent as the police inspector on his first real case. It would be well not to overlook Brent in the campaign. He is possessed of an engaging manner, physical appearance which is a definite asset, especially to the feminine contingent of the audience, and a natural ease of performance which adds to the effectiveness of his portrayal.

There are few other names with which the showman can do much. John Wray as the weird looking butler does well, atmospherically; Elizabeth Patterson and Blanche Frederici, as the maiden aunt, and the old maid servant, respectively, are capable.

There is suspense to a marked degree, and the identity of the perpetrator of the double crime is well hidden, practically to the concluding sequence. Suggestion is made that, inasmuch as the attempts at weird and heavily atmospheric backgrounds are not too completely effective, the emphasis in the selling campaign be placed upon the unusual story twist and the murder mystery elements, rather than upon the atmosphere of the film.

The film will have not the slightest difficulty holding fast the interest of the audience, and contains in ample degree the ingredients of box office drawing power as well as interest-sustaining and entertainment content.—AARONSON.

Isle of Peril

(Principal)

Splendid

Brilliantly photographed and intensely interesting is this long short subject, recounting the precarious lives and strangely independent pursuits of the inhabitants of the Faroe Islands, rocky, treacherous reaches dropped somewhere within the Arctic Circle between Greenland and Denmark. The story thread carries through on the note of the manner in which the young suitor demonstrates his right to ask for the hand of his sweetheart. The climbing of precipitate rocky cliffs for birds' eggs, the scaling of those same slippery cliffs at the end of a rope, hundreds of feet above the roaring surf, to snare birds in a net, were the breath-taking highlights of the film. Action, impressive scenic effects, suspense and a hint of real romance impart to this short an unlimited appeal. The activity of the young man indicates the manner of life of the islanders. No opportunity has been lost to make the film unusually effective. The accompanying descriptive comment is clear, at times amusing, and always interesting.—Running time, 32 minutes.

Cocky Cock Roach

Clever Short

There is cleverness in drawing and amusement in result when the insects, in animated fashion, disport themselves at the behest of the artist in the interior of an icebox. The manner in which they use sundry articles of cutlery, is highly amusing, if nonsensical.—Running time, 6 minutes.

SELECTED PICTURES

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THERE are lists and lists! Some of them, reaching out to a widening circle of influence, become a definite factor at the box office. This was demonstrated with the winding up of many organization activities in June in the impressive reports of the motion picture committees that were presented in a burst of gala convention proceedings. These, with the printed summaries of pictures meriting endorsement during the past year, are of particular interest to the motion picture industry as well as to the clubs.

Perhaps the most significance cross section of selective listing has come from the office of Mrs. Thomas G. Winter of the Public Relations Department, Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, in Hollywood. Mrs. Winter has her finger on the club pulse. The recent small pamphlet issued from her office, "Resume of the Hundred Best Pictures," is worth considering. The pamphlet is divided into special classifications and in each the outstanding features are starred. The compilation seems to fall short in some instances. Several fine productions that we have listed in these columns as distinguished features are conspicuous by their absence in the list of the hundred best. The following are the winners, with notation as to type of audience to which adjudged suitable:

Social Drama

ARROWSMITH (United Artists). Ronald Colman, Helen Hayes. Director, John Ford. One of the really high-class productions with notable presentation of a strong human story. Adults; beyond children.

BROKEN LULLABY (Paramount). Phillips Holmes, Nancy Carroll, Lionel Barrymore. Director, Ernst Lubitsch. Beautiful in theme and artistry. Not a war picture, but as good an argument against war as has ever been made. Barrymore in a fine piece of acting. Family.

DANCE TEAM (Fox). Sally Eilers, James Dunn. Director, Sidney Lanfield. The vicissitudes and love of common folks in their daily round. Family.

DOWN TO EARTH (Fox). Will Rogers, Dorothy Jordan, Irene Rich. Director, David Butler. Rogers in a story of today—loss of money and recovery of sanity and normal living. Family.

EMMA (MGM). Marie Dressler, Jean Hersholt. Director, Clarence Brown. Marie Dressler at her best as a lovable, self-sacrificing, absurd, middle-aged woman whose life has been given to other people's children. Family.

THE EXPERT (Warner). Charles (Chic) Sale, Dickey Moore. From "Old Man Minnick," by Edna Ferber. Director, Archie Mayo. Charming picture of an old man and a boy. More of a character study than a story. Pathos and humor. Family.

THE MAN WHO PLAYED GOD (Warner). George Arliss, Bette Davis, Violet Hemming. Director, John Adolfi. Delightful, clean, well bred, high-class comedy, with fine atmosphere and great significance. Family.

MICHAEL AND MARY (Gainsborough Productions, England). Distributed by Universal. Edna Best, Herbert Marshall, Frank Lawton. From the play by A. A. Milne. Thoughtful, sincere, well acted, intense, sometimes whimsical. Different in technique from American pictures, but really fine drama. Adults.

THE MIRACLE MAN (Paramount). Sylvia Sidney, Chester Morris. Director, Norman McLeod. A somewhat sentimental but lovely story about the victory of simplicity, faith and honor over crooked lives. All set to an unusually beautiful background of sea, cliffs, blown cedar trees. Family.

History and Geography

AVALANCHE (British Instructional Films. A state rights-cooperative release). Cast: Leni Reisenstahl, Zepp Rist. A lovely Swiss mountain picture with sports, romance, hazards. Family.

THE DOOMED BATTALION (Universal). Louis Trenker, Tala Birell. Director, Cyril Gardner. Built around the foreign film, "Mountains in Flame." While this is, strictly speaking, a war picture, its marvelous mountain photography links it close to the geographic interest. An Austrian and an Italian, devoted friends, are caught in the war. The story turns on the undermining of a mountain. Family.

EXPLORERS OF THE WORLD (Raspin Productions). Educational rather than entertaining. Various explorers relate their adventures. Family.

WASHINGTON, THE MAN, AND THE CAPITAL (Warner). Charles Whitehall, George Van Auker. Director, Arthur Hurley. Pictures of the national capital and of crucial and characteristic episodes in the life of Washington. Very good. Family. Short length picture.

Wit and Sophistication

THIS IS THE NIGHT (Paramount). Lily Damita, Roland Young, Charles Ruggles. Director, Frank Kepple. Based on Avery Hopgood's play, "Naughty Cinderella." A most charmingly presented comedy with absurd situations and laughter-inspiring wit. Very unusual methods of photography. Beauty of background. Borders on risque. Adults.

GRAND HOTEL (MGM). Greta Garbo, John Barrymore, Lionel Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Wallace Beery. Director, Edmund Goulding. From the novel by Vicki Baum. Notable presentation of complexities of modern life, unsatisfying grasping at success, pleasure, wealth. A collection of stars makes this panorama of change notable. Adults.

MATA HARI (MGM). Greta Garbo, Ramon Navarro, Lionel Barrymore. Director, George Fitzmaurice. Story of the famous international spy with a dramatic moral showing how her perverted life brings death to herself and tragedy to her lover. Adults.

SHANGHAI EXPRESS (Paramount). Marlene Dietrich, Clive Brook. Director, Josef von Sternberg. Swift, tumultuous, unusual tense story of China with the glamorous woman and the dubious situations handled with delicacy. Adults.

STRANGE INTERLUDE (MGM). From the play by Eugene O'Neil. Norma Shearer, Clark Gable, Alexander Kirkland, Robert Young. Director, Robert Leonard. A rendering of the famous play with much that was offensive in the original handled with such delicacy that it loses its offense. Vital and beautiful in theme and presentation—and with a splendid group of stars. Adults.

Melodrama

HELL DIVERS (MGM). Wallace Beery, Clark Gable. Director, George Hill. One of the best aviation pictures, with the delightful acting of two much liked actors backed by authentic shots to which the U. S. Navy lent its assistance. Family.

TARZAN, THE APE MAN (MGM). Johnny Weismuller, Maureen O'Sullivan. Director, W. S. Van Dyke. Based on the characters created by Edgar Rice Burroughs. Wild and piled up adventure accompanies the romance of a society girl and an untamed man of the wilds. The most attractive creature in it is an ape. Family.

Westerns

THE GAY CABALLERO (Fox). George O'Brien, Victor McLaglen. Director, Alfred Werker. Border romance.

RAINBOW TRAIL (Fox). George O'Brien. Director, Howard. From the novel by Zane Grey.

RIDER OF DEATH VALLEY (Universal). Tom Mix. Director, Albert Rogell.

THE SADDLE BUSTER (RKO-Pathe). Tom Keene. Director, Fred Allen. Not commonplace in pattern.

Warners Not to Announce Entire Season's Product

Warner Brothers will not make known to theatre owners the complete lineup of product for the new season. Shifting tastes and changing trends of audience demands are the given reasons, plus the presence of competition in "the ever present imitator who makes capital out of other people's plans."

New demands of audiences—shifting tastes of theatregoers—"make it unwise for any motion picture producer to announce a complete year's program of pictures in advance," according to Jack L. Warner, vice-president of Warner-First National in charge of production, who believes "it is impossible to know a year in advance just what type of picture will be most popular."

In discussing 1932-33 product, which will consist of 60 productions, Warner Brothers "have definitely named the releases for the first four months of the year and have promised exhibitors a continuation of our policy of adapting our future program to meet the changing entertainment demands of the times," Jack Warner said.

As previously noted, the 60 pictures which Warners announced will be released beginning September 1 and will include 30 each from Warner Brothers and First National. In addition, the program calls for six westerns and an augmented lineup of Vitaphone shorts. Details of releases up to December 31, 1932 were already definitely announced.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended July 9, 1932, reached $1,314,653 from 109 thatres in 20 major cities, a decrease of $64,796 from the previous calendar week, ended July 2, when 106 theatres in 19 cities reported a total intake of $1,379,449. During the more recent seven-day period no new high individual theatre records were established, while eight new low individual house figures were noted. This compares with one new "high" and nine new "lows" during the preceding week.

Vitaphone to Finish 50 by September 1

Vitaphone will have completed, by September 1, at least 50 of the 133 one and two-reel subjects for the coming year; 34 already have been produced, though the Brooklyn Vitaphone studio just resumed operations on Monday.

A series being emphasized by Sam Sax, production head, at the Brooklyn plant, consists of six two-reel Technicolor Musical Comedies, to be released as part of the 26 Broadway Brevities, musical comedies. These were made at the Warner Burbank studio under the direction of Roy Mack.

Rules License Tax Is Due On Acts, Films in Alabama

Motion picture theatres in Alabama using vaudeville acts in conjunction with films, will be subject to license tax on both pictures and vaudeville, according to a decision rendered last week by Thomas E. Knight, attorney general for Alabama.

The decision was made by Mr. Knight in response to a requested ruling asked by Judge David Crossland, Montgomery. Numerous houses in the larger cities of the state have recently tried out the stage presentation as a means of increasing attendance. If the ruling is enforced these houses will be definitely affected.

DeLuxe Trailer Forming State Rights Branches

Louis Meyer, general manager of DeLuxe Trailers, Inc., is establishing branches to operate on the basis of state rights exchanges while buying prints from DeLuxe and selling direct to theatres on a franchise basis. The company now is occupying enlarged quarters on the ground floor and basement of the Film Center Building, New York. Jack Reiger is in charge of trailer production.

Six More Houses Added to Poolings; 19 Now in Deals

Six additional theatres were added to the limited list of circuit poolings within the past seven-day period when RKO completed negotiations, pending for some time, for the pooling of its Proctor's theatre, at Yonkers, N. Y., with the Publix Strand, in the same town, and the pooling of the Proctor's and Plaza, RKO theatres, with the State and Strand, operated by Farash Theatres, at Schenectady, N. Y.

As a result of the Yonkers' pooling, RKO will operate the town, with the Strand becoming a first-run and the Proctor's a second-run house. Farash Theatres will operate the Schenectady pool, according to the terms. These deals raise the total of theatre poolings nationally to 19 theatres in five separate cities. A national study of pooling activities conducted by this publication last week revealed that pooling deals involving more than 60 theatres in 17 cities have been discussed by circuit operators within the past two and one-half months. Most of these, however, have been definitely abandoned due to the inability of the negotiators to agree on terms incidental to the poolings.

From the national study it was deducted that the disagreements over terms which are to be encountered in pooling negotiations are of enough magnitude to eliminate pooling as an important solution for theatre operating problems which exist today. This deduction is based upon the fact that only a very small percentage of the deals proposed actually result in poolings.

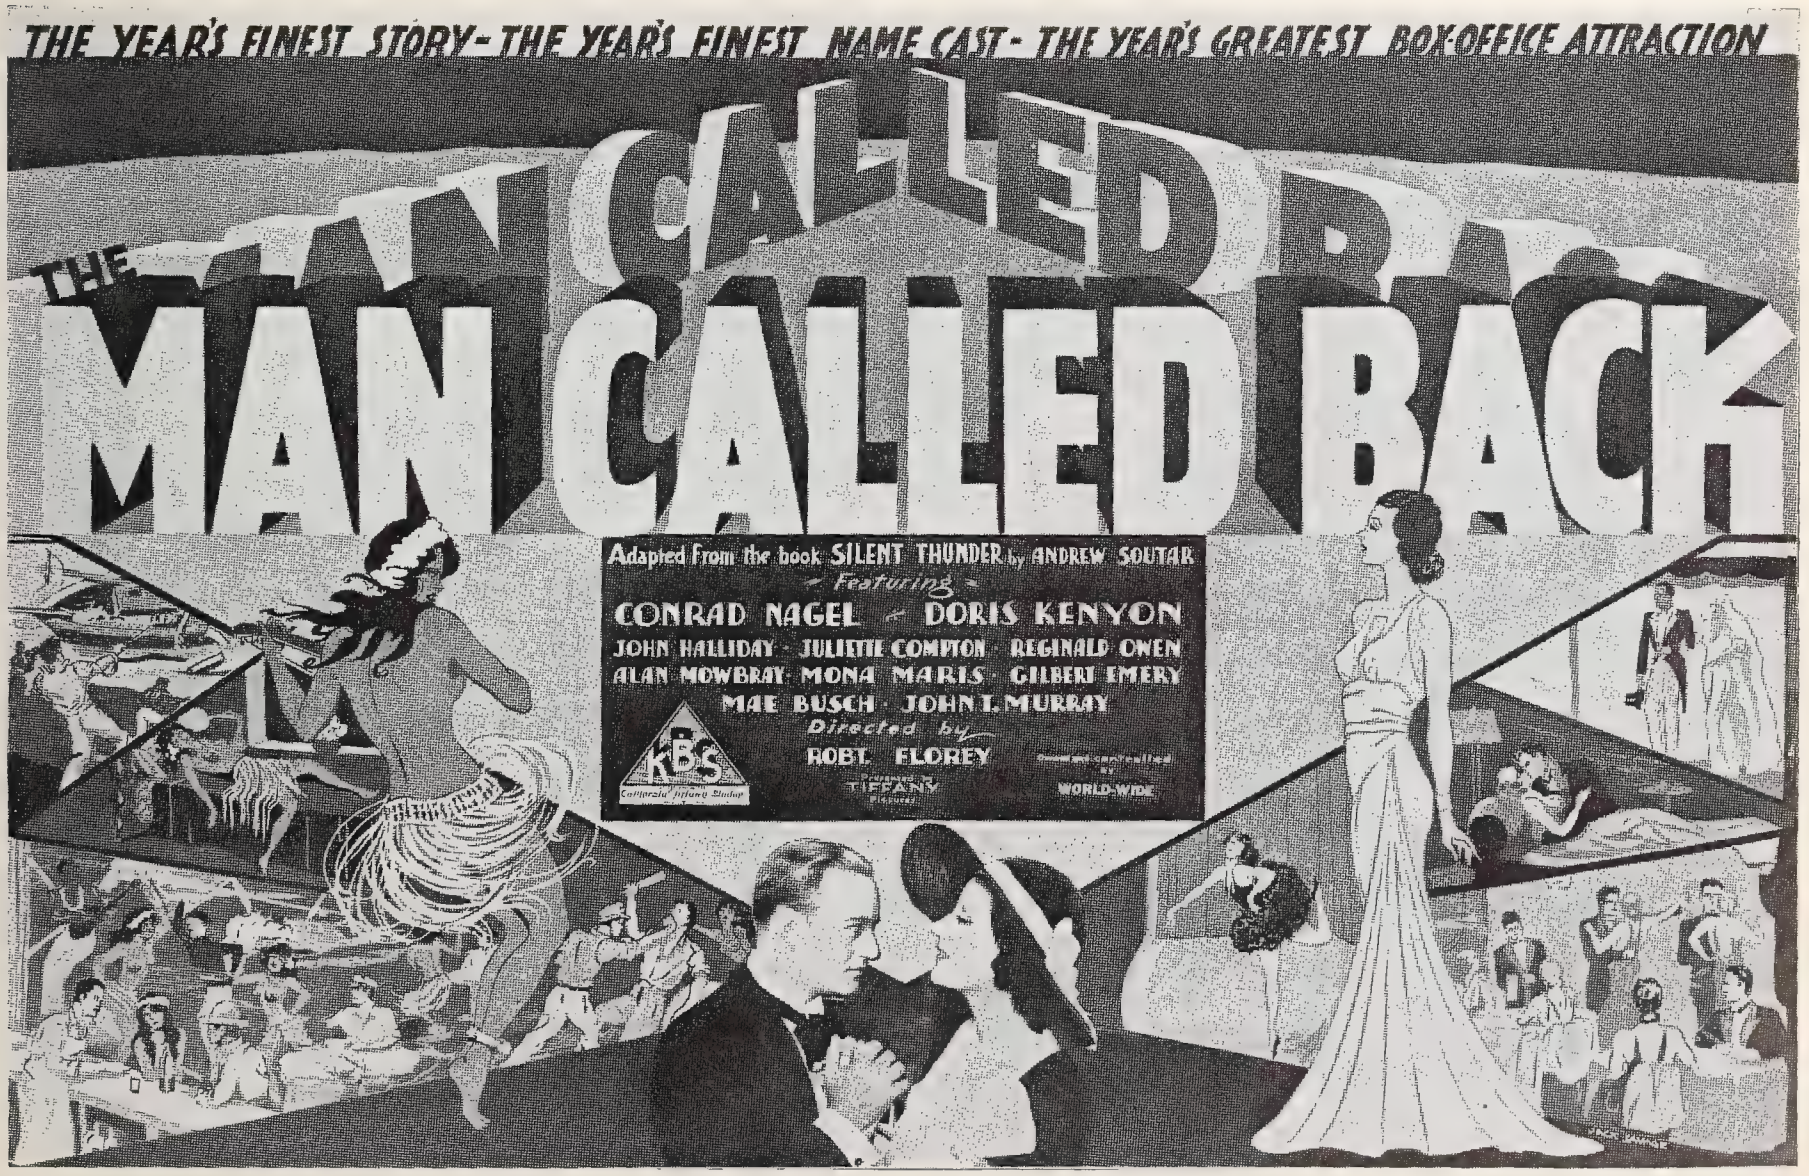
RKO is slated to acquire the Grand Opera House, at Cincinnati, toward the end of this month. The theatre, seating 1,600, is prominently located in the downtown business section of the city. In all probability, it will be operated on a percentage basis. RKO's lease on the Strand, at Cincinnati, recently expired, and the theatre has been dark since.

RKO also announces the closing last week of its Orpheum theatre at San Francisco, a 3,000-seat house, which leaves the circuit with one first-run house in San Francisco, the Golden Gate Theatre, and one in Oakland, the Orpheum. Other closings in the San Francisco territory reported to be imminent include the Fox, United Artists and Warners.

Film Pioneer Dies

Frank B. Griffin, 57, projectionist at the Grand theatre in Oshkosh, Wis., and said to be the inventor of the two-second cement for motion picture film, died at a local hospital recently. Mr. Griffin brought the first motion picture to Oshkosh in 1896.

Mankiewicz Out of Paramount



Herman Mankiewicz has resigned from Paramount, due to a disagreement over "The Phantom President," featuring George M. Cohan. Benjamin Glazer has succeeded Mr. Mankiewicz.

Hope of Barring Double Bills in New York Fades

No hope of eliminating double features in New York this year, and but little hope of curtailing them, is held by circuit and independent theatre operators following several conferences held during the past 10 days.

In the meantime, Warner Brothers Theatres, through Joe Bernhard, in charge of operations, went on record in opposition to the double-feature policy, and announced that Warner theatres would abandon it in every situation in which an agreement could be reached with competing theatres.

In the conferences designed to end the policy in New York, it was made clear that the abandonment of double features could not be made a city-wide policy, but could be attempted only on an individual neighborhood basis, governed by existing conditions in each theatre's locality. Upon the conclusion of the conferences, Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, who was instrumental in bringing together independent and affiliated operators for the double feature sessions, said that there was virtually no hope of eliminating the practice in New York for another year at least, in the light of the conference discussion.

AIMING AT NEXT SEASON!

BETWEEN now and Labor Day we expect that every film executive, circuit operator, sales manager and boss will shout at you, in one form or another, to marshal your forces and get set for a "terrific, gigantic, momentous," seat-selling campaign for the new theatrical season.

Let's forget, for the time being, some of the advice usually dished out during the summer months. Let's sort of sit back, close our eyes and figure out for ourselves just what we can really accomplish at this time to stimulate interest in our particular theatres immediately after Labor Day.

Is there anything really constructive that can be done now? Is it advisable to plug specific attractions this far in advance? Is it good judgment to fire the guns now when there is so much else to drown out the noise of the cannons? And will the folks 'round town forget about that volley long before the new season dawns?

Speaking strictly from my own point of view—and if I may add, from many years experience in average towns and cities—I would start at this particular time to get my house in good shape. There is much to be done around the theatre and only a skeleton crew to do it. Extra pay is out. Everyone of the staff is expected to do extra work before, during and after hours as a sort of grateful acknowledgment that they were kept on the payroll and not laid off.

I would say that if we devoted the month of July to fixing up, touching up and repairing everything about the theatre we would be making our first move for the new season drive for business. This suggestion must not be misconstrued to mean that you should abandon your merchandising efforts. Show selling always continues regardless of what else you must accomplish.

With all the frames, lobbies, lounge rooms, roofs, boiler room, etc., etc., in tip-top shape, we would turn our attention to August and plan as follows: A drive concentrated on the "Greater New Season's Attractions." Starting off with an intelligent teaser trailer, program notes, lobby displays and newspaper mention, I would build up each week with additional information regarding the new season's product and its outstanding productions. If you sell your newspaper on this campaign they will possibly cooperate to the extent of running interesting stories and star cuts on the product being discussed.

Your entire effort must be directed at building up attention and reviving interest in the theatre. The publicity department of any of the producers should willingly consent to write up special stories regarding their own company's product for newspaper purposes. This you can edit to suit your local conditions and plant with your paper.

As the campaign progresses the lobby, the trailers, the newspaper ads and other selling slants should be increased in proportion so that a well-timed campaign should have every individual in your town looking for the next announcement or story about the "Greater New Season's Attractions."

In certain communities the opening time of the new season varies. For example, one portion of the country generally designates Labor Day as the opening of the season, while in other parts the middle of September is the time specified. Whenever your season opens that is the day on which you must concentrate and build up to.

When that time arrives it must be ushered in with such a smash and bang that it ought to result in S.R.O. business from the start. To accomplish this you must do more than just talk about "great" pictures for your opening show. Unless you have a terrific box office picture, something besides the picture must help get that crowd jammed into your house. Whether that "something" will be a Fall Fashion Revue and Style Show, a Popularity Contest or any other form of business builder is up to you. But you must insure a packed house to get started off on the right foot.

Remember, while all these plans are going on you have been adhering to your previously arranged schedule. Opening day announcement should be accompanied by gayly decorated fronts, lobbies and if possible the whole main street and the stores lining same. The newspaper should be sold on a special "Greater New Season" cooperative section in which every important merchant should participate. In other words it must be a gala event in every sense of the word.

Without going into such a plan to the smallest detail we have tried to convey what our thoughts would be at this time of the year insofar as the next season is concerned. Perhaps you have better ideas. Tell us about them. Four thousand heads are better than one. "CHICK."

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

The moral of this cartoon is: think twice before you decide to admit anyone free. This particular incident happens to be an actual occurrence and one that the manager could not gracefully get out of. While it makes a funny cartoon, the incident itself was almost pathetic, especially when the other kids in town heard about it.

ROSENTHAL STUNTED AT AUBURN PRIOR TO TAKING NIAGARA HOUSE

Before leaving Auburn, N. Y., to take charge of the Strand Theatre, Niagara Falls, there's evidence at hand to show that Morris Rosenthal was up to his usual exploitation tricks at the Jefferson Theatre in the former city.

He featured an endurance stunt in his campaign on "Crowd Roars," having a driver chained to the wheel of a car on Saturday night at 11 P. M. and kept on the job for 72 hours without a stop for anything. He finished the run on a Tuesday (closing day) in time to make a stage appearance after the first show. He was then packed off to the window of a furniture store for a sleep. The car carried banners and the usual tie-ups were made with gas, oil, tires, restaurant, etc. Imitation speedway tickets were also distributed, carrying title, names of stars, theatre and playdates.

Restaurants, stores and speakeasies figured in his campaign on "West Parade," a large rubber stamp being used to print name of title and playdates on menus, paper bags, boxes, etc. Small corkscrews enclosed in envelopes carrying appropriate copy on picture were widely distributed in every thirst-quenching place in town.

In addition to placing hangers and cards on all downtown business houses on Saturday night when exploiting "Scarface," a Sunday flash was arranged by securing a collection of photos, etc., from the Prison Department of Auburn and the local District Attorney. These made up an attention-getting front, photos of the prison interior after the last riot proving particularly interesting to the public.

Other activities included the passing out of mammoth telegrams with appropriate copy on "So Big," and the mailing of "You Cannot Afford to Be Absent" cards for the "debut" of "Society Girl."

By this time Morris Rosenthal is on the job at the Strand at Niagara and the next time you hear about this enterprising showman it will concern some show-selling stunt he has put over in that town. Maybe he'll go riding over the Falls himself—you never can tell just what this Round Tabler will pull. Anyway, he knows his way 'round in his new town for the reason he and the Missus spent their honeymoon there.

SPENCER IS MAKING BUSINESS HUM DOWN AT LINDY IN PHILLY

Right in his element when it comes to putting over Anniversaries, Carnival Weeks, etc., Perry Spencer has been giving an excellent account of himself since he was transferred to the management of the Lindy Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.

During Anniversary Week give-aways and passes figured in the week's attractions. One night a radio was awarded and all day Saturday patrons enjoyed slices from a big cake promoted for the occasion. A tie-up was also made with the manufacturers of a refreshing soft drink for a supply to patrons all week. Amateur Night was featured on Tuesday and on Wednesday three ladies' dresses and a $175 refrigerator were given away. Thursday he pulled a "Washline Party," the patrons receiving special gifts on this day, and Friday was the occasion for a special review. Pop and cake were passed out on Saturday matinee and a Clown Night featured the evening's performance. Feature attractions for the week were especially selected and the house was decorated appropriately for the event.

His plans for the Lindy Carnival Week included the give-away of a "Real Live White Baby" (we gather it is another one of those white pigs he wished on patrons of the Audubon Theatre in New York City); a new Country Store Night, whereby patrons can horn in on eatables up to the value of four or five dollars; a Sing a Song Night for Thursday, during which the organist will lead the singers rendering old time songs, and a Barrel of Fun Night for Friday whereby patrons will fish around in a barrel to get their own gifts.

Now that we've located Perry again we hope he'll keep the Club regularly posted on all show-selling activities. According to the above he's started out on the job with accustomed vigor. By the way, Spence, don't forget to pass along our best to Howard Waugh, if you see him. Remind him to write headquarters.

BIG BROADWAY CUTOUT!

One of the largest cutouts that ever graced the top of a marquee has been socking pedestrians along Broadway, New York City, right in the eye since the M-G-M work shop turned out its display for "Red-headed woman." It's made of five sections of compo board and painted on both sides and you can take it from us that it rates a second glance. Page Oscar Doob, maybe?

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

TOM EDWARDS AND WIFE WERE SUCCESSFUL WITH BATHING BEAUTY REVUE

Late last fall we described a bathing beauty contest promoted and staged by Mrs. Tom Edwards at the Eldon Electric Theatre, Eldon, Mo., whcih turned out to be a most successful trade boosting stunt. Since the outdoor bathing season will soon be in full swing again, we believe it not amiss to acquaint our readers of just how the enterprising Mrs. Edwards accomplished this.

Her first step was to contact local merchants, each to be represented by one of the attractive girls selected for the revue. Nine storekeepers in a town with 3,000 population, agreed to furnish awards ranging from $3 to $6.50 in value, and the theatre donated a first award of $10. There were 36 entrants at the start of the contest, with 16 eliminated the first night of the show. From the remaining 20 girls, 10 winners were selected on the final night.

An excellent angle not to overlook in putting over a stunt such as outlined above appears to be the promotion of a cooperative ad among the merchants, single or double according to local conditions. Mrs. Edwards was able to put over a double truck in her small town, so that ought to be a good indication of what can be accomplished. The local newspaper gave strong support to the event, and another interesting slant on the affair lies in the fact that Kansas City papers, apprised of the show, carried reproductions of the girls' photos in the rotogravure sections. As to the box office, the house drew to capacity all week.

If any of our Club members stage a show of this kind this season, we'd like to receive the details. Let us have the complete plan of campaign, including photographs, and we'll pass along your idea of a bathing girl contest. Incidentally, we'd like to hear further from Mr. and Mrs. Tom Edwards.

McBRIDE TOOK TRICK PHOTOS THAT GAINED SPACE IN NEWSPAPER

Quite a clever little gag was used recently by H. D. McBride, manager of the State Theatre, Spokane, Wash., to gain some newspaper publicity on his first Tom Mix picture.

His ballyhoo, consisting of an old time stage coach pulled by a team of horses, looked so good to him that he contrived to have it photographed against a background of a modern train and sky relief of one of the big tri-motored air transports. The contrasting methods of travel appealed to the newspaper and the photo received a two-column break at the top of page two, the theatre ad on side of coach standing out boldly.

A photo of the stunt described above would, of course, better illustrate it. However, we'll go on record in stating that the newspaper tear sheet shows up to mighty good advantage. Mack is a live wire showman and we'd like more of his material.

CLUB MEMBER SAYS HIS PLAN WILL PUT STOP TO TENT SHOWS

Occasionally we hear a squawk from some manager concerning opposition from carnivals, tent shows, skating rinks, etc., when a direct drive is made by one of these attractions to extract local money from patrons through a tie-up with some veterans' organization or kindred group.

The best scheme we've ever heard of to combat a proposition of this sort was used by one of our own Club members and it's simple as A B C. Just make a deal with the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars or what have you in your town, for carnivals and other attractions generally, get these clubs to sponsor any move they make, and ask them not to play under their auspices, but to tie-up with the theatre for a Big Legion Benefit once a month. This will not only insure the theatre against inroads made by these traveling shows, but will save the Legion a whole lot of grief caused by local merchants squawking about "taking money out of town."

This man we have in mind contacted all merchants and lined them up for a Country Store Night to be put on with the benefit. The answer is that these merchants have donated hundreds of dollars worth of merchandise and spent just as much in newspaper advertising, heralds, handbills and stamps to plug the Nights. The theatre takes out 50 per cent to cover the cost of its end of the show, and since patronage is always about three times as large as average, one can readily see that the theatre is getting by in good shape, to say nothing of good will from the Legion and a vote of thanks from every merchant in town.

It takes a license for a tent-show to play town, as you all know, and it's entirely logical to assume that if local Legions, etc., and merchants are not in sympathy with letting these shows in town no permit will be forthcoming from the town or city department that issues them. Enlisting the cause of the sponsor would appear to be an effective weapon against this sort of opposition.

EDWARD J. MEINICKER, formerly manager of Loew's State Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, has been appointed manager of Loew's Rochester, a 4,000-seater, and the largest house in the city. He succeeds Charles Raymond, who is spending several weeks in Europe prior to taking over the reins of the new Loew theatre at Johannesburg, South Africa.

GAMES FOR THE LOBBY!

Not so long ago we mentioned the profitable possibilities of spotting some of those games in your lobby or lounge rooms. They have been getting a good play from movie patrons in other theatres and we thought it was worth thinking about.

On one of our recent trips into a neighboring state we found a theatre with four of these machines working on a five-cent play. During the break of the show every one of the games had crowds of between five and twenty-five people watching the games and playing them.

The manager, whose name and location we withhold by request, showed us his statement for the month of June, and imagine our surprise when we found out that these four machines had netted him seventy-eight dollars.

The total cost of the four machines amounted to only a small sum more than what he netted in one month. Is that profitable? We'll say it is; and furthermore, totaling up the income from the four games plus his two candy machines, we find that he has now worked up an income of close to one hundred and twenty-five dollars a month. Deduct that from your rent and you can better appreciate what that much money means.

If we can assist you in getting more information about any form of candy machines, games, etc., just drop us a line.

LOEW'S CLEVELAND THEATRES STRIKE NEW NOTE IN SUMMER COOLING!

H. M. Addison, Division Mgr., Shies Away From Old Compo-Board Icebergs and Ties Up With Local Nursery Outfit!

WHAT did YOU do this summer to put a new slant into the summer comfort of your theatre?

Cooling plants and air conditioning are no longer a novelty. But in many cases showmen are still using the same old hackneyed salesmanship that was employed when cooling plants first came into general service—to sell their patrons on summer comfort.

While most of the lads were satisfied to hack out a few compo-board icicles, promote a stuffed polar bear or two from a local taxidermist, and blast away with the familiar old "frozen to frigidity" slogans, H. M. Addison, manager of the Cleveland division of Loew's theatres, struck the first new note in summer comfort psychology which we have seen in many a day. His idea has remarkable merit because it conveys a safe, sane and sensible idea of summer cooling instead of the exaggerated, "refrigeration" idea.

When the pavements start sizzling and the asphalt begins to melt with the heat of the dog days, most of us don't think of icebergs. Instead, we get a longing for the big woods. We usually think of soaring pines and dark, silent spots in the heart of thick woods, where you're knee deep in woodland plants and where you can reach down and grasp cool moss beneath the closely-packed plants and shrubs.

In the heart of every one of us, summer and its heat brings a longing for such places and sends city folks surging out into the country highways.

So Addison, who is one of the most original and inventive showmen in the country, decided to take advantage of this psychology and tie up with old Mother Nature herself to make trees, shrubs and growing plants an "added attraction" in his theatres during the dog days.

While Kate Smith was singing the moon over the mountains, Addison was taking the trees off of them and transplanting 'em into the lobbies of 10 theatres to make them cool and shady retreats for the summer and give them a real Canadian northwoods atmosphere.

Plants and Trees WILL Grow in Lobbies

Some of the boys said it couldn't be done. Plants and trees, they argued, couldn't be made to thrive in the artificial and limited light of theatre lobbies.

But Addison went straight to the Cole Nurseries, one of the largest and most successful companies of its kind in the country, and broached his new idea of summer cooling effects. He sold the nurserymen 100 per cent on the advantages of being permitted to put their choicest evergreen trees and shrubs into the theatre lobbies as an ad for their product and he was amazed to learn just how much nurserymen have learned toward inducing trees and plants to grow under artificial conditions.

H. M. Addison is the Cleveland Division Manager for Loew's Theatres and a showman with a remarkably fine record of accomplishments. We recommend this, his latest achievement, to those who want to work out something similar for their own theatres.

To his surprise, the Cole nursery officials assured Addison that evergreens of certain types could be expected to thrive throughout the summer, in theatre lobbies, if bedded down firmly in genuine, imported German peat moss.

The nursery people got all hopped up over the idea. With Addison, they studied every one of the ten theatre lobbies, large and small, and worked out a suitable indoor garden plan for each one of them.

Loew's State, the circuit's de luxe house in Cleveland, which has one of the largest and most impressive grand lobbies in the country, was the first to be given the "north-woods" treatment.

State Gets Formal Patio Garden

Patrons of the house gaped with surprise and sniffed the air with wonder when they saw whole truckloads of pine, spruce and firs being unloaded in front of the theatre. After three full days of work by the nurserymen (with all labor costs borne by them), the huge State lobby was transformed into a formal patio garden, 80 feet long and 25 feet wide, containing dozens of different varieties of evergreen trees, rare plants and growing shrubs valued in excess of $1,000 at retail prices.

Bins for the peat were made of one-by-eight inch lumber stock. The firmly-bedded peat offers splendid nourishment to the nursery stock and, because it absorbs and holds water like a sponge, does not permit the water to seep out over the lobby floor.

One gets the effect right at the outer entrance to the State, because a diamond-shaped planting, approximately 15 feet long and about 10 feet wide, has been installed directly behind the box-office. Evergreens in a heavily-massed arrangement and ranging from a foot in height to six and eight feet at the center, provide a charming and cool background for the box office. Some of the trees are so light and silvery that they appear to be almost snow-covered and they give off a distinctly pleasant scent of pine and spruce as one walks into the theatre.

Lobby a Tree-Laned Garden

The bins forming the patio garden are of various sizes and there are frequent intersections so that the public can walk about among the plants at will. In the large open space in the center of the patio, Addison installed attractive garden furniture of the type that stands wear and tear in good shape. Three stone benches, and a light steel bridge table and chairs topped by a large "country club" lawn parasol, completes the indoor garden setup. Frequently, fresh cut flowers are installed in addition to the trees and shrubs, and a "peony show" comprising hundreds of prize-winning specimens, was a feature of the garden a week after its opening. The Cleveland boys are confident that the indoor garden is the most elaborate of its kind in any theatre in the country.

You Too Can Beautify Your Lobbies and Fronts Through Similar Arrangements With Local Nurserymen Groups!

It should also be mentioned that hanging baskets of vines are employed in all ten theatres, suspended from the four corners of the marquees.

At Loew's Park theatre, a large neighborhood house where the lobby is patterned much like that of the State, a similar patio-type garden was installed, using the same arrangements of trees and shrubs on a somewhat smaller scale, but with wicker and rustic lawn furniture along the outer edges of the garden instead of in the center sections.

At Loew's Doan, another neighborhood house where the lobby includes a fountain, the nurserymen seized the opportunity to install a natural rockery (or rock-garden) with a peat moss foundation which is liberally stocked with typical rock plants.

In the various other houses, the Stillman, Allen, Circle, Mall, Alhambra, Granada and Liberty, specially designed gardens of different types are installed. The layout is different, of course, in each case, but every house has a liberal quota of evergreens and shrubs so that the patron walks into the house between a line of pine-scented, growing trees which give the theatre a true outdoor effect.

The natural garden effect is suitable for any theatre, large or small. In the case of the Cleveland houses, Addison did not pay a cent to the Cole Nurseries. They readily saw the advantage of installing their stock in the ten theatres and they did not even make the usual annoying requests for screen credit but were satisfied with just a small, five-by-seven card credit card in each of the gardens.

Nurserymen Get a $25,000 Order

Their wisdom in co-operating with the theatres was apparent when, a week after the patio in the State lobby was completed, a prominent Cleveland manufacturer of office machinery walked into the theatre, was impressed by the beauty of the garden and asked for full details about the company which had installed it. A week later he signed a contract with the Cole Nurseries for landscape and garden work, amounting to approximately $25,000.

However, where theatre operators cannot make a similar tie-up as did Cleveland, a total of $150 retail will buy enough nursery stock to make a patio garden for a medium-sized house of the Class B type, while the large de luxe houses with extra-large lobbies can make a fine showing for $250 to $300.

"Much of the stock purchased could be resold," says W. E. Barnes, general sales manager of the Cole Nurseries, who, with Addison, is responsible for the fine showing in the Cleveland theatres. "Where the trees and shrubs are carefully bedded down in genuine German peat moss, they can be expected to go through the summer in the average lobby with a loss of only about 20 per cent of the stock.

"The theatre manager contemplating installation of an indoor garden for the summer season should make his arrangements with the nurserymen about a month ahead of the time he wishes to install the garden, and instruct the nurseryman to have the trees and shrubs put into storage warehouses until the roots, which are 'balled' in burlap, have become good and solid. Then they have a much better chance of coming through the summer in good shape than if dug and transferred indoors immediately.

"The evergreens which will stand up best in theatre foyers are members of the Arbor Vitae and the Juniper Family. One of the best massing effects can be obtained with Pachasandra Terminalis (Jap Spurge), while another good grower inside is Euonymus Radicans.

"Deciduous plants (those which lose their foliage in winter time) will hold up indoors for about ten days when in bloom. Even potted roses and the average perennials can be expected to last about a week. One perennial which has proved its ability to hold up for periods of two weeks or more is Aquilegia, commonly called Columbine, which, if balled and burlapped, will hold its bloom easily for a fortnight.

"As for care of the growing trees and shrubs, one usher in an hour's time can water and take care of the average garden. At the State, two are occupied for about that time because here we use a small, portable pressure sprayer with which one boy pumps water while the other sprays it on the trees and plants.

"With the peat moss and the use of the spray, we have had no trouble whatever with seepage or moisture outside the bins and the lobby floor is never mussy even when the plants are being watered.

"Average value of the evergreens installed in the State lobby is about $4 each, retail, although they range from $1 to $25 each and one, which we planted at the entrance, behind the box office, is a Koster's Blue Spruce valued at $50.

"In the majority of cases managers should find it easy to persuade furniture dealers to loan garden or porch furniture for their gardens. Any other furniture in the lobbies, such as plush or over-stuffed goods, should be covered with striped or bright-colored duck or canvas as it will 'kill' the summery effect if left uncovered.

"The indoor garden idea is, I think, highly practical for any type of house. I am passing the word about these successful Cleveland installations on to nurserymen throughout the country, and many of them, I am sure, will be glad to work hand-in-hand with the showmen, as we have done in Cleveland, for the splendid advertising which they get from the display of the nursery stock in the theatres."

Heavily-mossed bank of trees forms the background for the box office at the State Theatre.

Trees and fragrant, fresh flowers line the lobby and entrance to the Allen Theatre.

This is what greets the patrons of the Liberty Theatre when they pass through the lobby.

This unique garden arrangement was one of the highlights in the Park Theatre foyer.

The line of trees in the Circle Theatre gave a most inviting, summery appearance to patrons.

DUAL FEATURE SIGN BUILT BY HAMILTON AT VERY LITTLE COST

Since the bargain-loving New Englander demanded and received the double feature program, a practice in effect for many a year, it was only natural that the problem of cost on double feature displays would be solved by a manager in that section of the country. We refer to B. B. Hamilton, manager of the Palace Theatre over in Norwich, Conn., who recently made a two-way lobby display for the sum of one dollar and 50 cents.

He used the old board that served for advertising purposes in the lobby frames and painted over them in gold paint for "Greeks Had a Word for Them" and in silver paint for "Alias the Doctor." Proper lighting made a very effective display and created a plenty of comment among patrons.

We're glad to be in touch with Hamilton again and to hear that he has practically solved the lobby display program. Confronted with the task of playing two features regularly it was quite fitting that he should evolve some plan to take care of the situation. We have a photo at hand which shows the two-picture display, but it's very dark and will not reproduce effectively. Next time maybe B. B. will send along a clearer shot.

Lansdale Co-op. Page

A full-page cooperative ad promoted a short time ago by the manager of the Lansdale Theatre, Lansdale, Pa., announced that 20 local merchants in cooperation with the theatre would offer a series of Wednesday Specials, including a free matinee performance. Each small ad carried some featured article of merchandise which, if purchased, entitled the customer to a guest ticket. The theatre received a generous break in space on the page.

SHORT ON TOP!

The Bing Crosby short feature, "I Surrender, Dear," was billed 'way over the top of everything else when shown at the Capitol Theatre, Atlanta, Ga. Note the special sign above the marquee, the marquee billing, cutout and other displays in front and at either side of the box office.

AL WEISS REVIVED OLD BABY CARRIAGE STUNT FOR PICTURE

We haven't seen the old baby carriage gag in use for several months but might know that it would be revived for "Unexpected Father" by Alfred Weiss, manager of the Park Theatre, Tampa, Fla.

The snapshot reproduction on this page shows the 16-year-old boy who was dressed in a nightie and wheeled around town in a baby buggy. The fellow that did the pushing also gave out cards that read: "It's a Girl! Come and See and Laugh at 'Unexpected Father'—It's a Howl—Co-Starring Slim Summerville and Zasu Pitts—Park Theatre—Now!"

As Al states, just another gag from the Sunny South to let the rest of the gang know that the boys down in that land are still on the map. Next time we hear from this Club member maybe he'll let us know what sort of stunts he's been using to boost trade during the slack season.

COLLINS LAID OUT ATTRACTIVE GROUP OF ADS FOR WEEKLY

Our attention is called to the subject of group advertising of pictures by W. A. Collins, manager of the New Royal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Like many other theatre managers he is confronted with the job of inserting a whole week's program in a weekly newspaper and in a recent letter he reminded us of Manager Miller's weekly ad that we published some time ago.

We have at hand a herald reprint from one of his weekly newspaper ads and it appears to be very effectively arranged. If it were not printed in black on terra cotta colored paper we would show readers just what it's like, but that color will not come up in a line cut. Suffice then to state that the use of rules, borders and mats combined to produce an attractive ad on several pictures.

As Collins points out, it's a much easier matter to arrange an ad when only one picture has to be plugged. This is a vital subject to many theatre men in the same situation and we will welcome suggestions from other members. If they will send along some black and white prints we'll see that reproductions are made.

GET BETTER ACQUAINTED WITH YOUR NEWSPAPER'S COMPOSING ROOM!

A Thorough Knowledge of Type Faces Is Essential to Good Advertising; Get the Facts from This Article!

By KEN LONG

Ken Long's series on theatre advertising has created some marvelous comment from showmen everywhere, and no wonder. If you have followed the series since its inception, then you are well aware of the many fine points brought out in connection with this phase of showmanship.

In this, the latest of the articles, Long takes you into the newspaper composing room and gives you some inside facts about type faces and other important type matters. Furthermore, his illustration makes it still more understandable.

The Managers' Round Table Club has never presented a more important angle to its readers, and we are now convinced that it is proving mighty helpful to all who are following it each week. Just keep your eye on the future articles and ad layouts to come. They are improving each week.

"CHICK"

THE ad-writer should be a close student of type and type effects, for the broader his knowledge of this subject, the more effective and forceful will be his daily advertisement.

Let's start at the beginning and find out what type is all about. According to Webster, the definition of type is: a rectangular block, usually of metal, having its face so shaped as to produce by printing, a letter, figure, etc.

Explaining the Type!

In Figure 1 is illustrated the letter M and a diagram of the type used to produce it.

"A" is the body, which includes all the metal with the exception of the cut-in portion forming the letter.

"B" is the face, or the style or cut of the character on the type, such as bold face, light face, etc.

"C" is the shoulder which allows space for such letters as g, j and y.

"D" is the counter. It is the depression between the lines of the face.

"E" is the ceriph . . . the short fine line added as a finish at the top and bottom of unconnected lines. (There are no ceriphs on Gothic type and many modern types such as Futura.)

"F" is the stem . . . the thick line of the face.

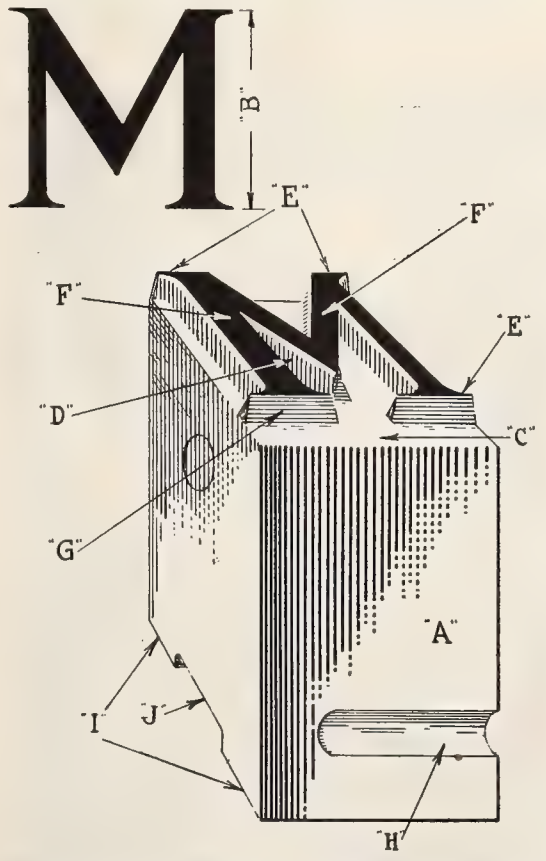
"G" is the beard . . . the slope between the outer edge of the face and the shoulder.

"H" is the nick. It is a shallow groove across the front of the body, used as a guide in composing. It also prevents mixing of different faces of the same body.

"I" is the feet . . . two small projections on which the body rests.

"J" is the groove . . . the hollow space between the feet.

There you have a graphic picture of type.



"Picas" and Other Phrases!

Now let's learn the meaning of such expressions as upper and lower case, pica, points, lead, etc.

The expression upper case means capital letters. Lower case means small letters. When copy is marked upper and lower case, capitals are used for the first letter in each word, or sentence, as the copy on the layout indicates.

The height of type is measured by points. One point equals approximately one-seventy-second of an inch. Therefore, when type is spoken of as 72 points, it means that the body, not the face, is approximately one inch high. The face of a 72-point capital letter is only about 54 points high, the remaining 18 points being taken up by the shoulder, as may be seen in Figure 1.

The pica is a unit used for measuring width. It is equal in size to 12-point type. Therefore, when a column is said to be 12 picas wide, it means approximately two inches. (Thirteen picas is the standard newspaper column width; however, many newspaper columns are 12½ picas wide . . . a difference of less than one-eighth of an inch.) While on the subject of measuring, a line is the term used by some newspapers in designating the depth of an ad. (There are 14 lines to an inch.) However, it is usually sufficient to dimension ads by columns wide and inches deep.

A lead is a thin strip of metal used to make space between lines of type. If the instruction specify type to be leaded, a regular two-point lead is used. If specified solid, no leads are used. It is not always necessary to specify whether or not body copy should be leaded, as the compositor will usually set it to take up the entire space allowed in the layout . . . leaded or solid. However, leaded copy is more readable and should be specified when space allows.

A Complete Understanding of Various Type Phrases Will Help You Considerably in Achieving Seat-Selling Ads!

Display and Body Type!

Type is divided into two classes . . . display type and body type. Display type is a heavier face than body type and should be used (unless legible characteristic lettering is given in mat form in the press sheet) for catch-line, title, cast and all parts of the advertisement which should be emphasized. Body type is a light face type, and as its name implies, would be used for setting the body copy in the ad.

Most display type is made in sizes from six point to 72 point, and in three widths of faces . . . namely, condensed, standard and extended. Some type families also have an extra-condensed face.

The Type Families!

Every style, or family, of type has a name, such as Franklin Gothic, Cheltenham, Caslon, John Hancock, etc. When specifying type for an ad, it is spoken of as 10-point Franklin Gothic, 24-point Cheltenham Bold, etc. The face of a six-point letter of a certain family is exactly the same in style as the 72-point letter of that same family, the only difference being the size.

Of course, all display types are not adaptable to advertising. Some are too ornamental and hard to read. Others lack character, etc. Remember, there is no better way to keep the reader reading than by making it easy for him. Use type that is legible and forceful.

Don't Use Too Many!

It is inadvisable to use more than three different type faces in one ad. In fact, it is unnecessary! For example, an excellent ad may be made using Cheltenham type only, as this family alone consists of Cheltenham Bold Extra Condensed, Cheltenham Bold Condensed, Cheltenham Bold, Cheltenham Bold Extended, Cheltenham Bold Italic, Cheltenham Old Style, Cheltenham Old Style Italic, Cheltenham Wide and others . . . over eight different characteristics in bold, light and italic faces and of course a variety of sizes.

In making my layouts here in New York, I use Cheltenham type quite frequently. The reason for this, aside from the fact that it is well adapted for newspaper work, is that I know most newspa-

CLASSIFIED TEASER ADS HELPED HIEHLE SELL CURRENT FILM

As part of his campaign on "Dark Horse," Ed Hiehle, manager of the Midland Theatre, Newark, Ohio, used a gag on the classified page of a local newspaper that was a real attention-getter.

For two successive days he planted no less than 22 boxes with copy such as "Are You a Democrat? Are You a Wet or Dry? Are You a Sorority Girl? Are You An Old Maid? Are You a Rotarian or Lion? Are You An Office Girl?" etc. Below each question was, "Then Don't Fail to See 'Dark Horse' at the Midland Theatre" (playdate).

The same sort of scheme can be used on most any comedy picture and effectiveness of it is attested to by the fact that Hiehle received over 500 replies the first day after the ads ran. We're glad to get a line on Hiehle's activities again and hope he'll continue to do his usual bit for the Club.

NEWSPAPER FIGURED HEAVILY WHEN STOCK EXPLOITED AIR FILM

When Arthur C. Stock, manager of the Iroquois Theatre, Petrolia, Canada, advertised "Dirigible" the local newspaper was effectively used from front page to back.

Across the top of the front page, over masthead, a seven-column streamer head announced title, theatre and playdates, along with the line, "Overshadows Any Picture Yet Made." Other news pages contained readers, one a two-column scene cut, and the back page carried a long three-column display ad on current and coming attractions.

Stock must have used his sales ability to good effect when he succeeded in selling the paper the idea to run the streamer head across top of front page and it certainly was one that had to hit the eyes of all readers.

KEN LONG—ON TYPE FACES!

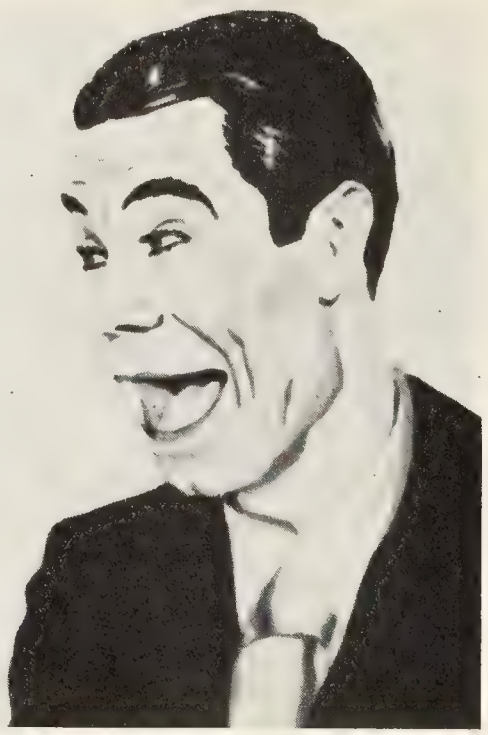
pers have this type in stock.

Body type is made in sizes from agate, or five point, to 18 point. A Roman face is most generally used in newspaper advertising.

Less than six point should never be used for body copy, and six point should be used sparingly. Of course, in small ads it is sometimes necessary to use six point, but it is advisable to avoid it if possible.

Eight point is probably the most popular size for the setting of body copy.



Ten point, of course, is excellent if the space allows.

As mentioned in a previous article, care should be taken not to set body copy too wide . . . 35 to 40 letters and spaces to a line is plenty. Also avoid setting it too narrow as this necessitates the dividing of too many words.

Now that you have read a little about type, why not visit the composing room of your local newspaper and see how type is used. Get acquainted with the compositor . . . he knows the scope of his newspaper's type, rules and borders . . . information which you should have. He may also have valuable advice concerning the layout of an advertisement. Such time will be well spent.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

The first of the two posters in this week's contribution to the series is from Will Wills of Syracuse, N. Y., whose work has appeared several times before and an artist well-known among the men in his field.

He "caught" Joe E. Brown in a good action poster with the result that they have something they can use over and over again if necessary. Brown is not a hard type to "blow-up" on your Bal-Optician and presents little difficulty to the average artist.

The "Tarzan" poster is from Jimmie Watson of Pottsville, Pa., and increases his numerous contributions to the series.

Once again we ask that artists contributing to this series jot down the colors used on the back of their photos.

WARNER CREW IN NEW YORK CITY DID GOOD WORK ON CAGNEY FILM

The Warner Theatre department in New York City, under direction of Harry Charnas, turned out some excellent work when campaigning the recent Cagney picture, "Winner Take All."

For two weeks in advance of opening, Lou Goldberg, in charge of advertising and exploitation, and Meyer Beck, his assistant, plastered the town with 22x28 window cards made up like regular fight posters. Five hundred of these cards were planted in stores. A tie-up with a prominent sports goods store resulted in the getting out of 1,000 special one-sheets, posted by the store and copy tying-up with equipment used by Cagney and carried by store.

No less a personage than Jimmy Johnston, manager of the Madison Square Garden, was secured to introduce several prominent fighters from the stage of the Strand and to announce that free tickets to the Sharkey-Schmelling fight would be given in conjunction with the distribution of 50,000 throw-aways. The handbills were made up to resemble a fight ticket and the give-aways were handled in the usual fashion.

A large cut-out of Cagney, 26 stills from the picture and photos of all former boxing champions were arranged in a special front for the lobby. Over the sidewalk two large revolving drums carried Cagney on one side and "Winner Take All" on the other. These were so regulated that passers-by were confronted at all times with the message. Another lobby frame showed a blown-up still of Cagney in ring with hand up-raised after manner of winner. Twenty-five thousand doorknob hangers in the form of a large boxing glove were also distributed over town.

BILL WHYTE PULLED A SKY WEDDING FOR PLUG ON 'SKY BRIDE'

What could be more appropriate to exploit "Sky Bride" than a "Sky Wedding?" And that's just what William Whyte, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Riverhead, L. I., promoted for the occasion—all but the actual ceremony in the air. A parson objected to this at the last moment, after being substituted for a justice who was ruled out of marrying a 19-year-old girl in the air, and the mating took place under one of the 'plane wings before a large gathering of Suffolk County citizens.

Manager Whyte and Mrs. Whyte not only "stood up" for the couple but this enterprising manager pulled the usual stunt of making all the local merchants come across with an assortment of useful wedding gifts. After the ceremony the plane soared aloft and showered the town with confetti, prior to being taken to a promoted dinner at a well-known hostelry in a parade of promoted automobiles. All the stunt cost the theatre was less than $10 and the story grabbed the two-column lead on the front page.

Not a new stunt by any means, as Bill will admit, but it was new to Riverhead and Suffolk County and that counts for a home run. The advance publicity received, plus the real wallop on day of ceremony, more than repaid him for time spent rounding up the participating merchants.

BROOKLYN PARAMOUNT OFFERS PATRONS FREE PARKING PRIVILEGES

The problem of parking nice, shiny autos in the traffic-congested downtown section of Brooklyn, N. Y., has been partially solved by the local Paramount Theatre, over which Robert Weitman presides. Maurice Bergmann handles publicity for this house and we believe we are indebted to him for one of the heralds issued to instruct patrons in the use of free parking tickets.

All the movie-goer has to do is drive around to the rear of the Paramount, enter a big garage and receive a receipt from an attendant. The next step is to go to the box office and buy a ticket for the show and have the parking ticket stamped by the cashier. After the show the stamped ticket is presented at the garage for return of the car. The courtesy is entirely gratis.

Anyone familiar with parking conditions in downtown Brooklyn will at once realize that this move on part of the Paramount management is bound to make a big hit with regular and prospective patrons. The streets are narrow, traffic regulations in force these days prohibit use of many sections and the big theatres are not located anywhere near the heart of the strictly residential neighborhoods; hence, Brooklyn, when it patronizes the de luxe houses, travels on wheels. The Paramount is fortunate in that it has a big garage nearby. Others in the same neighborhood are not so well off.

It's a safe prediction that the box office will benefit through this move, as it undoubtedly did when it made a tie-up with the Long Island R. R. for refund of round trip fare to all patrons within a radius of 18 miles.

SENN LAWLOR, city manager for Fox in Wichita, Kas., recently staged an elaborate bathing beauty contest at the Fox-Miller.

EARL BARRY, manager of the Chief Theatre, Kansas City, was recently held up by bandits and touched to the tune of over $400 in theatre receipts.

PENNY WISE AND POUND FOOLISH!

Having taken to the road for short week-end trips to theatres around this part of the country, we have made the startling discovery that the present trend for economy has reached the point where many theatres are leaving themselves open to trouble—and more of it.

Economizing on spare equipment and parts has never yet proved economy. On the contrary, it has been definitely proven as being a mighty expensive proposition. The cash customers are not a bit concerned over the fact that you "happen" not to have spare tubes, intermittent movements, lenses, reflector mirrors, etc., etc. They have paid their admission and want to see a show run smoothly and efficiently.

To do this you must be prepared for all emergencies. Everything and anything that may break down or go wrong should have a duplicate handy for just such an emergency. Getting the needed item tomorrow morning will not pacify or soothe the feelings of patrons who expect to see your show.

And when the unexpected trouble arises and you must refund a few hundred admissions, you will find, through simple arithmetic, that your economy has turned out to be a terrible expense.

Check over that supply room of yours—especially the booth and sound equipment parts. Have you everything on hand? Is there a complete set of spare fuses down in the meter room? Have you a spare mechanism for the booth. Watch these items if you would avoid trouble, expense and the loss of your patrons' goodwill.

FINE COOPERATION IN BORNEO FROM AN EXCHANGE, SAYS LIM

The Club received an interesting letter a short time ago from E. R. Lim, manager of the Luxor Theatre, Samarinda, Dutch East Indies, in which he enclosed an application for membership in this Club from W. H. Seth, in charge of a sister Luxor Theatre in Sourabaya, and made some interesting statements regarding existing cooperative policies between exchange and theatre.

Seth started his career in showbusiness as a film carrier for the Middle East Film Company at the age of 15 years, a firm now out of existence. He then went with Fox as manager of the Sourabaya branch. After four years in this end of the business and a few more years in the newspaper game, he returned to the sales end as manager for M-G-M in Sourabaya. He was subsequently appointed manager of the Luxor Theatre there.

Writing of exploitation activities in his country he dwelt at length on the fine spirit of cooperation between film exchange and theatre, due largely to the efforts of J. F. McCluwen, M-G-M manager.

Last January when the premiere of "Trader Horn" was held at the Luxor, S'baya, McCluwen arranged to have an elephant, a lion and 14 apes brought to town to take part in the ballyhoo. All animals, except the elephant, which pulled the vehicles, were put in circus cages and helped round out a parade that toured the entire city. This same manager also ballyhooed "Ben Hur" when it played the same city by constructing two Roman chariots for the occasion. Four white horses and four black ones were harnessed to the chariot for a parade through the city and unemployed men were engaged to represent Roman characters. Although both pictures were shown during the rainy season the former broke all records for the house and the latter played to outstanding grosses. The accompanying photo shows the Roman bally.

It is always interesting to hear from Club members in far off countries and now that we have both Lim and Seth to represent us in Samarinda and S'baya, we shall look forward to receipt of many other notes on exploitation activities. It is gratifying to learn that such a harmonious state of affairs exists between exchangemen and theatre, a condition which is bound to get better and better as the principals realize that cooperation is the sure road to success.

PLEASE COOPERATE!

We have close to four thousand members on record at Club headquarters. Unless we are notified of a change of address our lists will be inaccurate.

It takes but a moment for YOU to drop us a letter or post card advising of a change, either of location or theatre connection.

Please keep this in mind and help us maintain our membership lists right up-to-the-minute. You can never tell when we may want to get in immediate touch with you and then find that your letter is returned because of some change of address.

REMEMBER:

NOTIFY YOUR CHAIRMAN, AT ONCE, OF ANY CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

THANK YOU!

BUSINESS STIMULATORS!

We care not what names they call them, but the fact remains that added gags in the form of novelty nights ARE building up business for many a theatre.

Amateur nights, barrels of fun, Laff Nites, Gold Nights, Pay Days, Opportunity Contests, Dancing Contests, Pie-Eating Contests, etc., etc.

There are more slants than we can possibly think of at the moment. But they can be revived and put over to keep out of the red this summer and many smart showmen are taking full advantage of them. You would be surprised to know the type of theatre going in for this sort of business building. They include some of the finest in the country.

No house is TOO high class for any form of stimulants. It is just a matter of presentation. Dignified theatres must use dignified methods. But you cannot pay your bills or meet your overhead with excuses. If some form of contest will sell seats and still not hurt the prestige of your house, you owe it to your theatre and yourself to go after it.

ERWIN GOLD MADE A TIE-UP WITH LOCAL SCOUTS FOR DISPLAY

Just to let you all know that Erwin Gold, one of the Randforce Circuit supervisors over in Brooklyn, N. Y., is plugging along with usual enterprise, we're offering some photographic evidence of a Boy Scout exhibit he arranged for the Walker Theatre. This was placed in the lobby and offered concrete proof of the work being done by a local troop of the organization.

Other details of the tie-up are lacking, but we assume that special arrangements were made between the theatre and troop for the plugging of both institutions. Plans of this sort have been touched on from time to time in this department.

We're glad to get a line on Gold's activities and credit is due Publicity Director Monty MacLevy for making this possible. All the boys on the Randforce Circuit are a live lot of showmen and we will hope to hear a lot more about their work.

RYMAN NOW HAS TWO HOUSES TO OPERATE IN KANSAS SECTION

One of our Kansas Round Tablers, Paul E. Ryman, who operates the Royal Theatre, Tipton, writes to let us know that he has opened another house at Cawker City, the Rialto. It will be equipped with all that is modern in sound projection, etc., and Ryman will supervise both houses.

As soon as the kinks of opening a new theatre are straightened out we know that this Club member will keep headquarters informed on what's going on at both houses. He believes in giving the people in small communities the best in movie entertainment, his Tipton theatre being rated as the smallest house in the country with class A equipment.

Like many managers in the smaller towns, Ryman finds that the monthly calendar is a help and a copy of one we have at hand shows that he took considerable pains in making it up. Small mats and a variety of type style all combine to present an attractive appearance.

More Personalities!

HAROLD R. SHERIDAN has been transferred to the Strand Theatre, Des Moines, Iowa, since closing of the Des Moines Theatre.

WALTER SMITH, a newcomer to the Fox-West Coast organization, has been made manager of the Oriental Theatre, Denver, Colo. He succeeds Dan McAuliffe, who has been transferred to the Isis.

MARK BERKHEIMER has been transferred from the Paramount Theatre, Cheyenne, Wyo., to the Coronado, Las Vegas, N. M.

HOWARD KUHN is the new manager of the Jones Theatre, Canon City, Colo.

C. A. MULOCK, a new member of the Fox organization and until recently manager of the Majestic Theatre, Denver, is now in charge of the Rialto, Loveland, Colo.

EWART BOYD, formerly manager of the Rialto Theatre, Loveland, Colo., has been appointed manager of the Fox Theatre at Sidney, Neb.

A. J. HAMILTON, formerly of the Fox-Sidney, Sidney, Neb., has been transferred to the Strand Theatre, Rawlins, Wyo., replacing J. E. Bangs, resigned.

STRIKING DISPLAYS FOR AUTO RACE FILM AIDED BILL DWORSKI

Attractive displays played an important part in the campaign made on "Crowd Roars" by William Victor Dworski, manager of Warner's Sixth Street Theatre, Coshocton, Ohio.

Below is a photo of a sign artist Shorty Tidd made from an old screen he found around the workshop. He cut out the centre, backed it and secured fine results, even if the reproduction does not do it justice on account of lack of sharpness in the picture. It was placed in a position to catch the eyes of all students passing back and forth to schools and of all pedestrians and autoists on one side of the main street. Dworski sent along some other snaps but these are smaller and even fainter than the one shown here. "Shorty" will have to do better with the camera if we are to show what he is really capable of doing.

We understand that the other Warner house in Bill's town, the Main Street, is closed for the summer months, but take it that this Club member will have plenty to keep him busy at the Sixth Street. Incidentally, the front of the former house is being used to advertise attractions at the latter. Next time we hear from Coshocton, maybe Dworski will tell us something of holding up trade during the hot weather.

STEELE CHARTERED CAR AND RIGGED IT FOR SOUND

A street car stunt was pulled by George Steele, manager of the RKO Ritz Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., when advertising "Symphony of Six Million." He chartered a full sized rattler and ran it over the city for six hours. The car carried display advertising and was equipped with microphones and sound amplifiers, so that news of the announcer was carried to all those along the car lines.

MARSH GOLLNER is the manager of the Paramount Theatre, Charlottesville, Va. His letter enclosing an application for membership in this Club touches upon an important point.

Like many others, Gollner has labored under the impression that there is a fee attached to becoming a member of this outfit. Let us again state that there is no monetary obligation except one of those three cent stamps to carry your letter through the U. S. mails to Club headquarters.

All we ask of any man after joining is that we expect him to do his share to follow the good example set by his fellow Round Tablers. For several years they have been contributing worthwhile suggestions for selling shows to this department. It's up to the new members to carry on in the same way.

When we started out to introduce Marsh we didn't expect to include this explanation of Club "dues," but he brought it up and it seemed a good time to get it off our chest. So let's go, fellows—"all for one and one for all."

HARRY SAYER manages the Park Theatre, an RKO house down at Rockaway Park, N. Y., and he's another one of the RKO men to join up with our large army of showmen. The season is in full swing around Rockaway at this time of the year and the big summer population must have other amusement besides bucking the surf. Harry operates a 2,000 seat house and gives his patrons a change of picture fare four times per week. That's enough to keep any one man occupied with the thinking up of ideas to start the folk on their way to the box office. Let us hope that he will keep Club headquarters advised on what sort of advertising and exploitation methods he finds best.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

EDDIE SNIDERMAN is the assistant manager and exploitation man for the RKO Proctor Theatre over in Newark, N. J., and has the job of helping Larry A. Shead operate that large vaudeville and picture house. A cordial welcome is also extended this new Round Tabler and we sincerely hope it will not be long before we'll be able to send him a framed certificate and to record that he's been promoted to a managerial post. If Larry gets behind on his contributions to the Club why not back him up, Eddie? Anyway, between the two of you we'll count on the Proctor being accorded full representation in this department.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LEROY J. BOONE is another Miami, Fla., showman to join this outfit and he has charge of the Rex Theatre on East Flagler Street. Unless we're very much mistaken every house in that famous resort city is now included in Club membership and it's been our pleasure to often report that Miami regularly contributes her share of the live show-selling ideas that fill these pages from week to week. We will hope that Boone will keep up the excellent work and, let us hear from him just as often as possible.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. N. DEGENHART sends the Club his membership application from out in Rochelle, Ill., where he manages the Hub Theatre. It is also a pleasure to record the fact that he, too, has decided to join up with the livest group of theatre managers in the whole world, and we'll be looking for word of what he and his associates are doing for the sake of showbusiness. Send us an account of some of your stunts, W. N., and we'll pass the good word along to the rest of the gang.

EDDIE KANE has charge of the Granada Theatre, a Publix house out in the city of Minneapolis, Minn. He advises us that he hasn't a great deal of time to read or correspond, as no busy manager has these days, but we note that one time in his life he must have glanced over the old fable which so sagely pointed out that "in union lies strength." He believes in that, does Harry, and so he's added his name to this ever-increasing group of live-wire showmen. Furthermore, he believes in the good work being carried out by hundreds of Round Tablers and we're sure he'll do his utmost to keep these pages filled with smart show-selling information.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRANK J. HANKE manager the Lyric Theatre in Milwaukee, Wis., and he's the next new Club member in line for introduction to his host of brother Round Tablers. Shake hands with the gang, Frank, and you may be sure that we're glad to have you with us. There's many a member of this Club out in your city and we've often stated that this department is indebted to them for the valuable show-selling suggestions they've passed along for the benefit of fellow showmen. Shake one of those good show-tips out of the pigeon-hole of your desk, Frank, and shoot it in to headquarters. We'll see that it reaches the four corners of the world.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. BONNER SAMS is another showman to become a member of the Round Table Club and he has charge of two Publix-Kincey houses down in Danville, Va.—the Rialto and Broadway. He scarcely needs an introduction to the rest of the gang for evidence of his work has appeared in this department from time to time. With A and B houses to look after he should have plenty of exercise for exploitation ideas and we are going to look forward to many other interesting contributions from this now full-fledged Club member.

A. H. SIMERSON is the manager of the Victory Theatre down South in Salisbury, N. C., that city where all the passengers on the S. A. L. pile off in the early morn to partake of a breakfast large enough to last through the day. Simerson is another Publix-Kincey man to become a member of the Round Table Club and we're also extending a most cordial welcome to him. He's been following Club activities for some time and tells us he's very glad to be enrolled in this great organization. We will await his next communication, which will undoubtedly include some word of what he and his associates have been doing to put shows over the top.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LES KAUFMAN is a member of the publicity department over at the big Paramount Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., a deluxer in charge of managing director Robert Weitman. Les has the job of assisting Maurice Bergman and with the receipt of his application for membership it begins to look as if the Paramount were now one hundred per cent Round Table. Okay, Les, and now that you're in why not pass the word around that this department wants to hear what all you fellows are doing to fill the seats of your big house.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

I. W. WYTE manages the Empire Theatre, Ralph Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., and we're glad to add his name to the Club's ever-increasing roster. Show-selling is still in vogue over in New York's largest borough despite the general impression that most New Yorkers don't do anything much along these lines, and we're betting that Wyte has a few tricks up his sleeves to pass along to his fellow showmen. We'll be on the lookout for his next communication.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RUDY J. CUNJAK is another assistant manager to join our big organization and he has the job of helping Millard Blaettner with the management of the RKO Colonial Theatre, Dayton, Ohio. His chief is introduced elsewhere on this page and we are going to take it for granted that brother members can look for some interesting material with two Club representatives at the Colonial.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LARRY A. SHEAD manages Proctor's Theatre in the city of Newark, N. J., and a cordial welcome is also extended this new member from the RKO ranks. Larry is in charge of a large vaude and picture house and if he ever gets a chance between times we think he'll come through with some good show-selling stunts for us to pass along to the rest of the fellows. We'll be checking up on this newly-elected Round Tabler.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ROBERT NORRIS HADWAY hails from down South in North Carolina where, in the city of Raleigh, he manages the Capitol Theatre. Before being promoted to his present post of authority he was a poster artist, and now he not only has the responsibility of a theatre on his hands but looks after poster work for all Publix-Kincey houses in the city. We are indeed glad to have him with us and hope that in addition to letting us know what he's doing in the actual selling of shows, he'll send along some good, sharp photos of his poster work. Many poster men are contributing to this end of the Round Table department and we'll hope to include examples of Hadway's art.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Ludington, Mich.

DEAR HERALD:

Trying to write a colyum when the radio is tuned in on the Democratic National Convention is about as easy as trying to hold a conversation in a stamp mill. We don't know whether we will write it "Nebraska, 16 votes for Roosevelt" or "New Jersey, 34 votes for Smith."

We wish they would hurry up over there and elect a president and quit. Somehow us Democrats most always elect our presidents at our June conventions instead of at the November elections.

Berrien Springs, Mich., is located right in the heart of the fruit belt and their prospects for a big crop is said to be as good as it has been for years. The manager of the Berrien theatre informed us that strawberries were retailed in Berrien at five cents a quart and that last year peaches sold for 25 cents a bushel and that the prospects are that they will sell as low, or lower this year, as there will be an abundant crop.

These prices are below the cost of production and hardly above the cost of picking, which doesn't indicate that prosperity is just around the corner for Berrien Springs. If it is, it is too far around.

C. F. Sears of the Otsego theatre at Otsego has organized a Buck Jones Ranger club with a membership of 275. How's that for a town of 2,500?

This boy Sears is a live one, and when he isn't doing something for the Ranger club or billing his theatre attraction he is fishing for bass in some of the beautiful lakes in his community. Sears says he don't care for results; what he wants is action. He didn't get back from fishing until 9 o'clock the night we called. He says business has probably been worse, but he doesn't know when.

We always like to call at Wayland and meet Mr. and Mrs. Frank of the Regent theatre. They are regular folks in a regular town, and every time we have called we have trouble getting away. Mr. Frank has excellent sound in his theatre and it is equipped to give Wayland as good entertainment as can be had in any of the theatres in that locality. Mr. Frank took us through the Pet milk canning company's plant, where they can enough milk, it would seem, to supply the whole United States. This canning factory is quite an asset to Wayland.

Over at Middleville we found our old friend, C. W. Bennett, who operates the Arcade theatre. C. W. is so good natured that he is getting fat, which would indicate that poor business has no effect on his appetite whatever, and he says he is going to eat, business or no business, in spite of H. & H. W., and with that kind of a disposition you can't whip 'em no matter what you do. We always like to call on C. W. because he makes the world seem a little better than what we supposed it was. There ought to be more of 'em.

Ray Branch of the Hastings theatre at Hastings has one of the best equipped booths we know of, and his store room and work shop lack nothing in the way of supplies that might be needed in a first-class booth and theatre. Ray is one of that kind of theatre operators who has a faculty of making friends with everybody and everything from Uncle Josh and Aunt Samantha down to the Boston bull pup, and for that reason Old Man Depression isn't working overtime around his theatre. We like to meet such men as Ray Branch; his type is worth while in any line of business.

Hollis Drew is the new manager of the Strand theatre at Lowell. Hollis is a young man whose show experience dates back but a few years, but whose knowledge of the business would make some of the older ones wonder what it is all about. The Strand is a theatre of such beauty and complete equipment as would be a credit to a city three times the size of Lowell. Our prediction is that when the Strand can't make money under the able management of Hollis it will be too bad for the rest of them.

Harvey Callier has recently taken over the management of the Empress at Belding. A big silk mill has been in operation in Belding for a number of years and employed a large force. This mill has recently closed down and the plant has been moved to some city in the East, which has thrown a wet blanket over business in Belding.

We find that the depression has hit Michigan about the hardest of any state we have visited, due to the fact that almost every town in the state has some kind of factory that has closed, with a large number of employees thrown out of work. This condition does not maintain to such an acute degree in the purely agricultural sections. Our guess is that if the Empress can be put over Harvey will put it over.

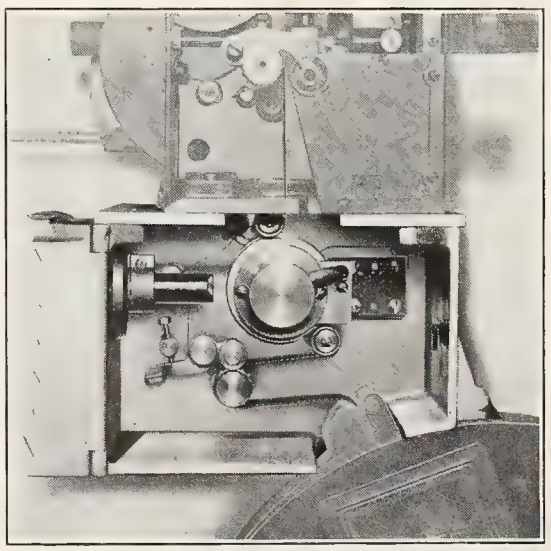
For the first time in our travels in Michigan we met Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Oatley of the Star theatre at Rockford. These delightful folks are somewhat new in the business, but their determination to give Rockford the best there is in entertainment assures that community of all that could be obtained by going to more pretentious cities. Our hope is that they prosper. Our guess is that they will. Our wish is that we may call on them again.

Bert Silver, that sturdy old oak, who put the show business on the map of Michigan long before canned entertainment was thought of, is still the magnet and guiding star that draws people to the Silver Family theatre in Greenville. In his early youth Bert adopted the policy that "Honesty is the best policy," to which he has adhered religiously ever since.

Bert uses a 10-piece orchestra in his theatre five nights a week and if there are other small-town theatres doing this we would like to hear from them. His theory is that the best is none too good for his patrons, which is why the Silver Family theatre has a reputation all over Michigan. Mr. Martin, who is associated with Bert in the management of the theatre, does the heavy work on the outside as well as the inside and this makes a team to pull the load that balks at no hill or marsh, and shys at no mudhole.

Bert is a strong believer in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD and he reads it as studiously as he does the Democratic platform. He says he even reads our Colyum, which causes us to wonder if he can be very busy.

It is always a pleasure to call on Bert. He has a lovely home and a delightful family, and we count a visit to Michigan as being not all it should be without a visit with this delightful old patriarch of the motion pictures.



J. C. JENKINS,
The HERALD Man.

THOU SHALT NOT SQUEAL!

- That's what every Syncrofilm is told as it leaves our factory. The complete absence of unwanted noises in Syncrofilm is really remarkable. You never heard such silence from a sound machine! Not until the sound track starts registering does Syncrofilm break silence.
- Then you hear clear, clean-cut voices with inflections that put over the exact meanings of the words. That's because Syncrofilm exclusively projects light of four times the usual brilliance on the photoelectric cell. Everything on the sound track—meaning everything—is sent over the wires to the speaker.
- That sort of performance makes money. People willingly return to theatres that give good sound as well as good sight shows. What's more, Syncrofilm will hold patronage for years because there is practically no wear out to it. Once you see how finely it is built you will understand how it can run so well so long.
- We will give you your money back if you are not satisfied. Try Syncrofilm a while at our risk. The price won't scare you a bit. Tell us what projection machines you have so we can quote properly.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 134—(A) Tell us what effect distance of light source from converging condenser lens, or upon a mirror, has on light loss. (B) Suppose you have a plano convex condenser 4.25″ in diameter. Light source is 3″ from surface of collector lens. What diameter lens would be required to pick up the same amount of the total light if the light source be moved one inch further from the surface of the lens? (C) What should be the first task in adjustment of a projector optical train in which a condenser is utilized to collect and project the light?

Answer to Question No. 127

Bluebook School Question No. 127 was: (A) Describe the three-wire bell circuit. (B) Tell us how you would proceed with one or two fire alarm bells or buzzers in such way that one bell or both, as the case might be, could be rung from any one of two or more buttons located in various parts of the theatre. (C) By means of rough ink sketch, show us how circuits may be arranged to illuminate and extinguish lights in various compartments of a proscenium program board.

There were a surprisingly large number of correct answers to this series of questions. Here are the successful ones: S. Evans and C. Rau, Lester Borst, S. G. Williams, G. E. Doe, W. Lemke, T. Van Vaulkenburg, Bill Doe, S. Carroll, R. Singleton, K. L. Knight, Mic Granby, H. B. Billings, J. Wentworth and W. Sellers, T. Rathbrun, T. L. Danby, A. Zerach, H. D. Schofield, A. Bailey, P. T. Garling, H. B. Edwards, M. D. Dove, H. B. Coates, T. Davis and L. Lambert, C. Peters, D. Goldberg, S. T. Jones, F. L. Langdon, D. Warren, T. L. May, L. D. Richards, G. Tinlin, D. R. Wright, D. Holler, B. Davidson, L. H. Pickard, T. Taylor and C. Ray, B. K. Bolling, F. Davis, L. Garling, D. Anderson, L. R. Timson and B. Michael, T. McGruder, T. Whitnath, A. L. Patry and D. M. Devoy, P. D. Thompson, W. Broadbent, L. C. Abernathy, J. G. Gates, D. Emmerson, S. T. Jones, A. Breaston, G. Deckson, R. Michaels and D. Lode, H. Sicmann, A. Gibson, T. Turk, A. Wells, M. L. Timothy, T. R. Peters and S. Peters, A. Jones, D. Manuels, M. Y. Thompson, H. D. Tyler and M. Domer, F. F. Franks, J. Billings, P. H. Bondom, C. Tamper, P. Jackson and B. Diglah, T. O. Thumb, D. L. Sinklow, A. Geibto, J. Williams and H. Love, D. L. Simmons and P. K. Rontor, F. Burker, R. Davis, F. C. Hagmyer, A. Wells, P. Davis, P. T. Garling, F. Ferguson, P. L. Toeping, F. B. Gamble, C. Tamper, R. J. Rinker and T. Haddon, J. Cermak and G. Fairmann, M. McGuire, D. Mason, R. L. Davidson, A. Sidelburg, J. G. Evans and T. Lavenburgh, N. L. Daniels, S. F. Davis, P. T. Andrews and T. Blair, F. Tinlow, G. Adams and B. Little.

I find a considerable difference in the drawings. Some are very rough. Some are in pencil, which is not suitable for reproduction; some are in blue ink, whereas black ink was distinctly specified, because it is best for reproduction. Some of the methods shown are, while correct in so far as concerns actual results, inefficient in that they would require a lot of unnecessary wire.

(A) We will hear from Brother Williams on this one:

"The three-wire system is an economic method of wiring any desired number of bells or buzzers and push-buttons, using one battery or suitable transformer. It requires a small footage of wire as compared with other systems. We see it illustrated in Figure 1, which is largely self-explanatory. Each button operates a specific bell or buzzer without interfering with the operation of any of the others in the circuit. B-B-B-B are buzzers. C is the battery and P-P-P-P push-buttons.

"Install the various bells or buzzers and push-buttons wherever desired. Place the battery (two ordinary 1.5-volt dry cells connected in series) in any convenient, dry place, or if a transformer be used, connect it to a 110-volt A. C. circuit that is never 'dead.' Be sure as to that last if you want uninterrupted service.

"Using a No. 18 cotton covered bell wire of three different colors, say brown, blue and yellow, connect up the circuit as shown in Figure 1. Connect one terminal of power source to one terminal of all buzzers or bells, using brown wire. Connect the other power source terminals with one side of each push-button, using blue wire. Next connect each push-button with its bell or buzzer with yellow wire, and you have a three-wire bell circuit, to which additional bells or buzzers and push-buttons may be connected, merely by connecting one side of the bell, using brown wire, with the nearest available brown wire; connect the push-button to the nearest blue wire, using blue, of course, and then connecting the other side of each push-button with the bell with yellow wire."

(B) On the whole, I guess Friend Williams wins out again, because his drawing is neat, compact and entirely self-explanatory. He says:

"The installation of a fire alarm system of bells and push-buttons is a very simple bell wiring job, provided the fact be kept in mind that all bells and push-buttons must be connected in parallel. It then is only necessary to join the two parallel systems together, inserting a battery between them on one leg of the circuit." (See Figure 2.)

(C) Well, I guess we will let Williams finish up the job because his drawing is not only as good as any other, but also it is much more compact—takes up much less space (Fig. 3). Many submitted drawings in which a movable switch lever is employed for all compartment lights. That is correct enough, all right, but I hold this to be the better way for the reason that (a) the switches here may be more legibly marked and (b) it is conceivable that it might sometimes be desirable to illuminate two pockets at the same time, which could not be done with the movable lever (sliding contact or button) type of switch.

LICHTMAN'S IDEA "QUITE RIDICULOUS"

ALLEN JOHNSON, Michigan Exhibitor

LICHTMAN PLAN "NOT EVEN GOOD THEORY"

To The Editor of The Herald:

If you are interested in a further opinion on the Lichtman "class" sales plan, here it is. Candidly, it all seems quite ridiculous, although Mr. Lichtman should not be too severely criticized if he is honest in his effort to bring about a profitable and orderly solution to the present very chaotic condition.

The plan, however, is not even good theory, much less practical in operation, although it may ultimately prove to be a first step toward a workable solution. The plan would not only classify theatres and pictures, but would attempt to classify patrons and here is encountered the greatest obstacle.

Patrons may be classified as having class "A" or class "B" tastes, to be sure, but in such class, there are other classifications. All potential customers for class "A" entertainment are not able to pay 50 cents for their entertainment—in fact, for any class of picture there are 50-cent customers, 35-cent customers, 25-cent customers, and even ten-cent customers.

There is still another classification, that being the potential patrons to class "A" entertainment who could and would pay the required 50 cents but who could not reach class "A" theatres for geographical and other reasons. And what becomes of the family trade? Where do the kids come in? Are they to be classified too, and if so, how and at what price?

If the producers honestly try, it would not seem to be so terribly difficult to devise a live-and-let-live plan that would make all product available for all classes of theatres and all classes of patrons. The success of the motion picture industry was based upon its universal appeal and to insure its future it must gear itself to increase its market—not cut it down.

Reasonable protection is undoubtedly the logical solution. The house charging 50 cents and providing entertainment in de luxe surroundings should have a reasonable protection over the house charging 35 cents. Likewise, the house charging 35 cents should have reasonable protection over the house charging 25 cents, and so on down the line, with a reasonable spread of time between each successive run providing an ample protection for the preceding run at a higher admission price. The man who has the audacity to double-bill two outstanding attractions at any price should be hung by his "G" string and left hanging.

The most of you have most likely already seen "Tomorrow and Tomorrow." We never saw it until last night. As you know this is a picture built on the story of a married woman having a baby by a man other than her husband.

She was passionately in love with her husband. This was proven conclusively by her having a child by another man, no further proof was needed.

If you are fond of this kind of story this picture ought to please you, and if Hollywood has to resort to this kind of theme to build picture entertainment, then the day of progress has not yet arrived. Mr. Lichtman would probably place this one in his "class B," but we'd place it in class Q.

One thing more must be said in this or any other discussion of the motion picture industry. Every picture made should be designed to appeal to the greatest number of people in every class taste. The best general formula to follow would be to produce all stories, regardless of their kind or type, in such a way as to appeal to the decency of humankind. No matter how perverted and base a mind may become, its dish is respected only when served with delicacy, in good taste, and with decent restraint.

Unfortunately, the producers have lost sight of that fact in recent years to their great detriment and financial loss and to the detriment and financial loss of theatres subsequently showing their product. We all like good stories, sometimes risque, but they must be delicately, tastily and artistically told. That is the job for the producer, and it is a sizable one at that.

Perhaps the main difficulty right now is that we have a small group of men trying to play the part of producer, distributor, and retailer all at one time. Only Joe Cook and a few like him have been able to put on a one-man show, and even Joe had to play the part of the king's fool and clown the other parts.—Allen Johnson, Proprietor, Royal and Our Theatres, Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Amusu Theatre
C. M. Cain, Owner
Roy G. Cain, Manager
Winnsboro, Texas

June 13, 1932.

Editor, Motion Picture Herald.
Dear Sir:

I am writing this article just to tell a few of the small town exhibitors what a Western picture can mean to them if they will back one.

As for myself, I wish to state that Western pictures have been a life saver to me.

Every small town exhibitor knows that for the last few years the Saturday business has been dwindling and dwindling. The reason for this is very simple: The country people haven't got the money. The only way you can reach them now is to get your price down where they can afford to go.

A few months ago I decided something had to be done in the way of stimulating Box Office on Saturday so I painted a large sign "Ten Cents to All" and hung it up. I chalked the sidewalks all over town until the mayor asked me to stop white washing the streets. I next hung all the banners I could put on a model T Ford and started down the street—ringing bells, blowing horns and hollering. And Brother! did they buy those ten cent tickets. We took in more money that day than we had for months and months.

I don't mean that Western pictures are not worth enough to charge higher admission, but I do mean that the rural trade likes Western pictures above anything else and those are the folks vou have to reach on Saturday.

Any small town exhibitor who thinks this plan worthy of trial will certainly see the difference.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) Roy G. Cain,
Mgr. Amusu Theatre

A DEFINITION OF ADVERTISING

To the Editor of the Herald:

I have noted on Page 43 of the Herald for July 9 that Advertising Age is looking for a definition of advertising.

Allow me to make a suggestion as to this definition, which came from the lips of none other than Will Rogers:

Advertising is the art of making people buy something they do not want with money they don't have.

With this as a premise there could be a lot of business done in these times.—F. V. A. Litchard, Greenwich Theatre, East Greenwich, R. I.

New Executives for Eagle; Will Present 13 Features

L. J. Baum has been named president and I. M. Stone treasurer in the introduction of new financing into Eagle Productions, independent of which Adolph Pollak is secretary and general manager. Albert Herman, former president, is now vice-president.

The company plan the production of 13 features for the 1932-33 season. Eight will be directed and four supervised by Mr. Herman. One, "Isle of Paradise," made in Bali by Charles T. Trego, will be released as a special. Auten and Wild, Inc., foreign distributing company, has acquired the foreign rights to the film.

Warner Plant Reopens August 1

The Warner Coast studio will reopen on August 1 with the production of "The Silver Dollar" and "I'm a Fugitive." The company plans continuance of its production policy of four features each month.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS
FOR PICTURE THEATRES

COMEDIANS

Richy Craig, jr.
New York Palace

Here is a comedian who offers an act that stopped the show cold. With good material and a quick wit that enables him to take advantage of the situation with spontaneous ad libbing, Richy keeps the audience in laughter throughout. He is assisted by a girl of the dumb dora type in a card bit which is extremely funny. Any audience will like him.—H. P.

Harry J. Conley
New Orleans Orpheum

This is an act built up about Conley, who uses the three in his supporting cast as foils for his eccentric, rowdy comedy. Working in one the whole way through, Conley gags with his straight man, sings a song which got some laughs, gags with a girl and ends with proposing marriage. The climax is a trick stunt on the back drop whereby a tail light of Conley's automobile can be seen traveling to the church where the marriage takes place and then to a house which lights up as they enter.

Bert Wheeler & Polly Walters
New York Paramount

Bert, the other half of the team of Wheeler and Woolsey, proves that he can make the customers laugh when playing alone. With Harry Richman for a straight, he gets over plenty of laughs. Later, he offers a vocal of "I'd Rather Be a Beggar with You" in a most ludicrous fashion, due to a mouthful of apple and ham sandwich. Polly Walters offers a clever bit of "Dumb Dora" comedy, following this with a specialty dance that pleased.—H. P.

Moro & Yaconelli
Milwaukee Wisconsin

Here are two musical clowns who keep the audience in excellent humor with their comic expressions and grimaces. They play guitars in good style and are highly acceptable in their offering.

Trixie Friganza
Milwaukee Wisconsin

Miss Friganza is going as strong as ever. She still retains the old peppy personality and her antics carry plenty of humor. She serves as mistress of ceremonies in a capable manner and ejects her good humor upon the audience between acts.

Jack Pepper
Detroit Fisher

Pepper, billed as the "Broadway Comic," as M. C., kids the acts and retails a line of quips that is not above the ordinary. This audience hardly noticed him.

Steve Freda and Johnny Palace
Baltimore Hippodrome

The couple went into a song and comedy act in comical costumes and drew plenty of laughs, as usual, concluding with duet with one playing guitar. The act drew good applause.

Books Convention Singer

Shea's Buffalo theatre has booked Melvena J. Passmore, who sang for the Democratic Convention at Chicago, for a week of personal appearances. Rudy Vallee and his orchestra have been booked for six days beginning July 15.

Frank Buck in Appearances

Frank Buck, producer of RKO Radio's "Bring 'Em Back Alive," is making a series of personal appearances in theatres over the country, in connection with the showing of the film. The tour will end in San Francisco in August.

Retaining Musicians

Loew's Century and the Hippodrome in Baltimore plan to pay musicians time and a half for work on Sundays, according to an agreement to keep orchestras and stage shows at the house, unless a later decision results in their discontinuance.

MGM Players at Capitol

Jean Hersholt and Una Merkel, MGM players, will be featured in the stage presentation, "Hollywood on Parade," scheduled for the Capitol theatre in New York during the week of July 14. On the bill will be Lew Cody, Jack Benny, Anna May Wong, Armida, Abe Lyman and his band.

Warner Stars on Stage

George Brent and Loretta Young, Warner stars, have arrived in the East from the Coast for appearances at the Earle theatres in Washington and Philadelphia and the Ambassador in St. Louis.

DANCERS

Rosita Moreno
San Francisco Warfield

Senorita Rosita Moreno, a sparkling Spanish miss with twinkling feet and the mannerisms of Dolores Del Rio, offers two dances, one Spanish and the other American, changing costumes for these. Her Spanish dance especially is a revelation of technique and exotic footing. Several curtain calls.

Frances Wills & Jay Seiler (3)
New York Palace

With an assistant at the piano this pair open with a dance, followed by a tap dance by Seiler, who uses two canes to good advantage. Miss Wills then offers an excellent bit of acrobatic dancing featuring a standing split. Jay does a novelty turn on half hoops, after which the two present an eccentric drunk dance. An entertaining act.—H. P.

Mitzi Mayfair
New York Paramount

This petite dancer goes through a routine of high kicking steps which earned her a nice reception. Brimful of personality and ability, Little Mitzi features a back kick which is the neatest trick we've seen in a long time. Audience reaction was distinctly favorable.—H. P.

Keene Twins
Milwaukee Wisconsin

These two girls are fancy acrobatic dancers who should click almost anywhere. They handle themselves in a competent manner and are well received by the audience.

Bunny Bronson
Milwaukee Wisconsin

This girl is a toe dancer of pleasing personality, who carries herself in a creditable manner. She is attractive in appearance and meets with a good hand.

Falls, Reading and Boice
Baltimore Hippodrome

This is a fast tap and acrobatic dancing act. Three on in tap work, then girl goes into single novelty acrobatic dance followed by two men in strong arm turns, lifts and then three in tap and acrobatic work. Well received.

Dorothy Crooker
Philadelphia Fox

Dorothy Crooker presents a perfectly-rendered control dance which for artistry, technique and poetry of motion has never been surpassed on the Fox stage. This novel dance is a revelation in balance and coordination. Miss Crooker also displays splendid technique in her other numbers.

Dawn Sisters—Paul Cadieux
New Orleans Orpheum

This act opens with Cadieux singing a hit from "Pagliacci," only to be interrupted by the Dawn Sisters, who inform him his song is outmoded. They then proceed to do a burlesque of the famous ballet dances, which is a riot. After them an unbilled boy and girl do fast routine and the Dawn Sisters come back on for more eccentric, acrobatic dancing. Cadieux then sings "Lady of Spain" as an introduction for a burlesque rumba number done by the Dawn Sisters which ends up with a burlesque bull fight utilizing all five of the company. The act is well staged, carrying three sets of attractive drapes.

Crawford and Caskey (2)

Detroit Fox

This pair makes acrobatic and adagio bits refreshing by using them in a doll dance. They are clever performers with a polished routine.

Parker Twins

Philadelphia Fox

The Parker Twins, combining personality and skill, put over some very graceful dancing.

Lucky Seven

Philadelphia Mastbaum

The Lucky Seven, tap dancers, by way of novelty injected a bit of negro superstition into their act by dancing up and down on large square boxes marked like dice and each of the three members of the unit received a rousing hand for the novel individual stunts introduced.

Worthy & Thomas

Philadelphia Mastbaum

Worthy & Thomas are two unusually fast tap and rhythm dancers, whose varied act was frequently interrupted by bursts of spontaneous applause. These two colored boys are top notch solo and unison dancers and the audience would have liked more.

Rose Stadler Trio

Denver Denver

Two men and a girl in an exceedingly fast adagio for opener and smooth waltz for closing. Their adagio is the fastest seen recently at this house and they are exceptionally skillful. Enough comedy is mixed in to make it a good act.

Webster and Marino

Dallas Palace

This male team pulled plenty of applause in their comic adagio interpretations. One costumed in a leopard skin and the other in an outlandish outfit of tights kept busy in their "catch as catch can" antics and there was a studied adroitness in every stumbling move. An excellent team, good for any appearance—real eccentric dance artists.

Dance Olympics

New Orleans Orpheum

This is a dancing act built around a clever idea and using the coming Olympic games as an interest-getter. Entire routines are named after sporting events—tennis, skating, marathons, etc.—and worked very skillfully by a quintet of girls including the svelte-shaped Ida May Sparrow who sings and dances. Fast finish concluded the act. The entire number deserves a better than the opening spot it received.

SPOTS & SHOTS ON BROADWAY

Should you happen to run across Harry Jans of Jans and Whalen, ask him to tell you of the time that he, Jay C. Flippen and a few others were guests on Ted Healy's yacht. You'll die "laffing."

Fritz Hubert is running against some tough luck, having to leave the Palace bill twice in three weeks. When he fell against an off-stage piano he received a minor concussion of the brain which forced him to cancel his return engagement.

In a newsreel Jack Sharkey, newly crowned champ, said, "I can't yet realize that I am champion." "Neither can I," came a retort from the balcony.

Herb Fecke, our energetic ad go-getter, just asked if we're "in the Pinc-us condition."

Due to vaude engagements, Arthur (Street Singer) Tracy will make his scenes for the forthcoming Paramount picture, "The Big Broadcast," here in New York.

The elevator operator at the 181 street subway entrance is a dead ringer for George Dewey Washington.

Wallace Sullivan, formerly on the staff at the Warner Eastern Vitaphone studio, is writing scripts and scenarios for radio stars, including Jans & Whalen, Margie White, Ed Tierney and others.

Bert Lown and his orchestra have opened at the Pelham Heath Inn, taking Isham Jones' place. Bert is making a strong bid for a comeback.

Monty Siegel, song writer, went to the National Democratic Convention at Chicago in hopes of having that body adopt his song, "Bye Bye, Mr. Dry, You'll All Wet," for their theme song.

Murry Melton, of the vaude team known as the "Showboat Boys,' is convalescing from an operation. We're rootin' for you.

Walter G. Samuels and Leonard Whitcup, known to radio fans as Mac & Lennie, are now offering a novelty, called "six hands on the piano," for a toothpaste sponsor on the Columbia chain. Felix Bernard is the owner of the other two hands.

Ray & Ted, the Radio Romeos of Radio, are appearing in vaude these past few weeks and are doing well.

Frank Parker, featured on programs over WEAF, is considered one of the handsomest of radio stars.

Broadway: Where your friends are indeed in need.

HERMAN PINCUS

SINGERS

Harry Richman

New York Paramount

Harry Richman is undoubtedly a master showman. Offering a bit of comedy assisted by Bert Wheeler and Polly Walters, Richman proves why he was crowned king of the radio by his rendition of "Holding My Honey's Hand," "Lullaby of the Leaves," "Lovable" and "I Love a Parade." A spontaneous ovation brought an encore of "Puttin' on the Ritz," from his picture of the same name.—H. P.

Nick Lucas

Oakland Orpheum

The "Crooning Troubadour," otherwise Nick Lucas, displays all his old-time skill and makes one forget often repeated ambitions to smother singers of the crooning variety. Troubadour Lucas is confident of his voice and wins with his quiet manner, which makes him a singer of the different type. He sings "You're My Everything" and "While We Danced at the Mardi Gras," the latter being a new number that meets with instant approval. Before he leaves there is an insistent demand for "Side By Side," which seems to be closely associated with the singer.

The Delivery Boys (2)

Cincinnati Albee

These lads were formerly vocalists over local radio station WLW. They open with a song, one of the boys playing an accompaniment at the piano, then go into imitations of well-known radio stars. The take-offs are well-nigh perfect, and each one in the long list brought prolonged applause. They should be a good draw on any bill.

Mark Pepper

Milwaukee Wisconsin

This young man has a really pleasing voice and makes a big hit with the audience. He sings "That's Why Darkies Were Born," and the chorus to "I Think You're Wonderful" in acceptable fashion.

Leon and Dawn

Baltimore Hippodrome

One of these girls plays straight and sings, the other does hokum comedy antics which draw laughs, and two join in comedy work at finish. Filled with chatter, singing and slapstick. Fair applause and laughter.

Betty Frazer

Detroit Fox

Betty Frazer, sister of Sylvia Froos, is a blonde blues singer who has every requirement for success in that field. She delights her audience here with "Rhythm In My Fingers," "Shine On Harvest Moon" and "Between the Devil and the Deep Blue Sea."

Edith Bow

New Orleans Orpheum

This demure young miss proves herself to be a first class entertainer even though her voice is such as to leave doubts whether she can truthfully be called a singer. Working before a blue drop in one with an unbilled accompanist, she opens with a contrast between the maiden's prayer of yesterday and that of today, wearing an old fashioned dress for the first and changing to beach pajamas for the second. Then donning white lace pajamas for evening wear and jauntily throwing an orange jacket over her shoulders, she sings "Party Girl," following with a takeoff on party girls which is a good bit of acting. Her lordly manner of refusing gin and then the choking way in which she swallows it, her gradual drunkenness and the climax to which she works her impersonation was the loudest laugh getter on the bill. The audience called her back.

Aaron Sisters
New Orleans State

Three pretty misses who without orchestral accompaniment, sing hill-billy songs. They are reported to be from the mountain country of the South and their style is true enough to support this. Their first song, a lugubrious chronicle of desertion, gambling, murder and finally the gallows facing the murderer, is done to perfection. The second is the more cheerful "Nelly Put On Your Bonnet." Audience liked them.

Kay McKaye and Richard Lane
Baltimore Hippodrome

Throughout the tabloid version of "Fifty Million Frenchmen" these singers played the leading parts effectively and went over splendidly with the audience. They sang "You Do Something to Me," as a duet; then Kaye offered "For I'm in Love" as a solo; and Lane rendered "Paree What Did You Do to Me?" assisted by a chorus of boys and girls.

Joan Abbott
Detroit Michigan

Miss Abbott's style is colorful, vigorous and at the same time a trifle disdainful. She helps herself to a fair share of applause with two numbers for which she is known: "I'm Hummin' To Myself" and "Between the Devil and the Deep Blue Sea."

Dance Bits (5)
Detroit Hollywood

The work of this group is characterized by speed, daring and versatility. The two girls in the quintette have fair voices which they use to open the act in a sister-harmony song and dance version of "Kissable Baby." Most of the numbers that follow are of the acrobatic order.

Vina Zolle
Dallas Palace

This vocalist is charming in her accompaniment to the numbers given by the dance team of a dozen Sunkist Beauties, as her solo efforts blend right into the smooth completion of the dance numbers. The startling lighting effect used in the featured dance to give the ensemble the appearance of dancing savages was especially commendable, while the other numbers of the chorus were much above par in their intricate attractiveness of performance.

Sally Sweet
San Francisco Warfield

Sally is cute and knows it, but has real personality, too, and this puts her in right with her audience. She sings and frolics with Rube Wolf and ventures down into the front row to sing to a customer and embarrass him for the moment.

NOVELTY

Ted Lewis & Company
San Francisco Fox

Ted Lewis, with his colored band and hand-picked company of entertainers, holds forth at the birthday show of this house and dispenses real happiness. He is on the stage every minute of the act, introducing his artists in song, directing the band in his inimitable way, tooting his tuneful clarinet and apostrophizing his battered high hat. His offering, and that of his company, is as clean as a hound's tooth, and it gets the laughs and the applause. Three beautiful girls lend charm and grace to the show, four colored lads sing and dance, and a midget "Bill Robinson" stops the show with his singing, dancing and wise cracks. "The Peanut Vendor Song" is rendered in a realistic manner, with Ted Lewis vending peanuts to those in the front rows from a wagon trundled across the stage while a girl does the rumba. A high spot is reached when the high-hatted ambassador of joy offers an imitation of a Fourth of July parade, taking the part of the drum major, musicians and marchers. The show is a real winner.

Johnny Dove
New Orleans Orpheum

With the support of two competent men and a pretty girl, Johnny Dove manages to inject novelty into the familiar routine of skating acts. The supporting trio does the usual whirls, stands and the like, while Dove solos with acrobatic stunts, flipping on his skates and generally carrying on to a nice hand.

Ross Wyse, jr. (3)
New York Palace

This young man, assisted by his mother and dad, offers to advantage a routine of tap dancing, work with a lariat and solos on several musical instruments. Wyse senior, shows that he still can step, after which Ross junior does a difficult headspin. For an encore, young Wyse goes through an acrobatic dance routine that earned him an enthusiastic round of applause.—H. P.

Johnny Weismuller
Detroit Fisher

None too enthusiastic was the reception of "Tarzan" at the Fisher. It is difficult to decide whether to regard him as a champion swimmer or as a good looking ape-man. That part of the adience that wants to see the swimmer in action finds disappointing and ridiculous his manner of jumping, feet first, into a four-foot tank with much ferocious grunting and spluttering. Weismuller himself is a drawing card, but he needs a better routine.

Johnny Bryant
Detroit Fox

Bryant's whistling is the kind that many a small boy has spent hours trying to achieve. He gives perfect imitations of several birds, offers a brief instructive explanation of the principles of whistling and, with a handkerchief in his mouth, whistles through his nose. His act should please any audience.

Mack, Harold and Bobby (3)
Detroit Fisher

This is a hodge-podge act, consisting principally of clever tap and acrobatic dancing. One of the trio delights the audience with a simultaneous performance on piano and violin.

ACROBATS

Eno Troupe
Philadelphia Fox

This group of Oriental equilibrists stage a finished juggling act. Two girls on their backs deftly manipulate umbrellas and barrels on their feet in perfect unison. A little girl balanced on a stand performs seemingly impossible acrobatic feats and two male acrobats create a sensation when one of them revolves at amazing speed on a trapeze in a steel frame, balanced on the shoulders of the other.

Park Clifford
Milwaukee Wisconsin

Fine appearing and somewhat taller than the average run of acrobats, these two lads handle themselves in an admirable manner. They are particularly adept at handstands in various difficult formations and combinations.

Paul Howard
Milwaukee Wisconsin

This lad is somewhat of a contortionist who goes through his paces in a slow and resolved manner. He bends himself into a diversity of angles and is good for numerous laughs.

INSTRUMENTAL

Leon Navara
Baltimore Hippodrome

Navara drew a ripple of applause upon his entrance and received running laughs and applause as he went along. He always is well received at this theatre. Played "Gigolettes," which he has just composed, then went into regular routine of how he learned to play the piano, followed by an operatic air. Navara offered a mixed classical and jazz number, worked upon the audience with a whistling song and went into a routine of a girl playing for an old-time silent picture. He drew a big hand and running laughter.

Ingenues (18)
New York Palace

The ingenues are a group of 18 goodlooking girls whose orchestral efforts are highly entertaining, the girls proving their individual abilities and talent by each playing several instruments at various times in the act. Two young women respectively offering a whistling solo and a difficult toe tap dance to round out an act that is sure to please.—H. P.

Lester Clark and Mary Barnett
Baltimore Hippodrome

The two played the juvenile leads in the tabloid version of "Fifty Million Frenchmen" and pleased with their dances and songs. They sang together "You've Got That Thing," Clark working first and then Barnett carrying on and both finishing with tap dancing. Later in "Paree, What Did You Do to Me?" they divide the singing and then go into a fast jazz dance. The act was well liked.

Mack Has Close Escape

Freddy Mack, orchestra leader at Fox Brooklyn theatre, narrowly escaped injury last week when a truck crashed into his parked automobile.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

OVERTURES

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox Concert Orchestra return to the classics, after a brief flirtation with jazz, and offer "Gems from the Verdi Operas." This proves one of the finest offerings in weeks, with Livia Marrucci singing in delightful voice the tuneful aria "Ah fors e lui" from "La Traviata." The brass section of the orchestra wins special plaudits with its rendition of the quartette from "Rigoletto" and orchestra and organ joins in "Celeste Aida" from the popular opera "Aida."

HERSCHEL LEIB (Detroit Fox) offered an inattentive audience an excellent rendition of the overture from Rossini's opera, "Semiramide." Small restless noises and coughing during the less spirited parts of the overture gave evidence of its unsuitability, especially at this time of the year, to an audience of this type.

JOHN GART (Brooklyn Gates) and his Rhythm Boys recently presented an overture outstanding in merit. Opening with the introduction from "Naughty Marietta," the full orchestra subsided slowly until only the clarinet was heard, playing "Kashmiri Song (Pale Hands)." Near the finish the score is taken up by full orchestra. The "Italian Street Song," was next played to a good hand, Mr. Gart following with a splendidly played piano solo of "Kitten On the Keys." Applause at the finish was so great that Gart was forced to encore.

SAMUEL BENAVIE (Detroit Fisher), without sacrificing any of the marks of studied musical excellence, swings to unrestrained jazz with an overture entitled "Harlemania." Hoarse, blue trumpets introduced "That's Why Darkies Were Born," which was followed by the dank and haunting strains of "Chloe." "I'll Be Glad When You're Dead, You Rascal You" was not out of place.

GLENN WELTY (Milwaukee Wisconsin) and the orchestra is augmented by Jack Martin at the organ in presenting "Royal Road to Romance." Selections include "Gypsy Love Song," "Little Cabin in the Cotton," played by two saxes and two clarinets; "I Love a Parade," "Waiting for You," and "In a Little Hideaway."

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO, EVERYBODY!

By the time you read this I will be miles away from the home office and, I hope, enjoying myself . . . though I probably will be missing the hot pavements of old Broadway (at least I have each year when I've been on the old vacation). . . .

It is interesting to note that two dozen or more of the Edward B. Marks Company's songs are being used as theme songs on important radio programs. . . . The new Warner picture, "The Purchase Price," is the first film in many months to boast a theme song. . . . The song, "Take Me Away," was written especially for the picture by Sidney Clare and Charley Tobias, authors of the lyrics, and Peter Tinturi, the composer. It will be published simultaneously with the release of the picture by M. Witmark & Sons. . . .

Ruth King, Al Piantidosi's young protege, leaves the Brooklyn Fox theatre after four weeks for a two-weeks' vacation at Parksville, N. Y. . . . Ruthie says she intends to get as big as Kate Smith (she doesn't say which way). . . . The American Tenor, Frank Hazzard, who for the past two years has been featured at the Hollywood Restaurant, New York, opened July 4th at the Hotel Biltmore's Cocoanut Grove, Los Angeles. . . . Ruth Prosser, owner of the Prosser Music Company, 1587 Broadway, and publisher of the song, "In My Dreams," has a fine chance of having a "hit" on her hands. . . . The number is a peach for every type of playing. . . . Although the Lawrence Music Company is only a few weeks old, its first three numbers, "Love Me Tonight," "Strange As It Seems" and "Old Man of the Mountain have been recorded by most of the stars of the major disc companies. . . . A few of the stars recording the numbers are: Ruth Etting, Cab Calloway, Boswell Sisters, Bing Crosby, Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians, Art Jarrett, Mills Bros., Anson Weeks and others. . . .

Albert Braglia, trainer of the Italian athletes entered in the Olympic Games, is the uncle of John Cirillino, owner of the team of Fortunello and Cirillino, known as "The Famous Italian Clowns." Incidentally, the team is currently playing in RKO houses in and around New York. . . . Cirillino hopes to be able to change some of his bookings so that he can go to Los Angeles for the games with his uncle. . . .

Al Hoffman and Al Goodhart, writers of "Auf Wiedersehn, My Dear" and "I Apologize," are back from a three months' trip to the Coast, where they have been appearing in vaudeville. . . . The local brass band welcomed the boys when they played their home town, Portland, Oregon. . . . Governor Roosevelt, Democratic candidate for president, has adopted "Happy Days Are Here Again" for his slogan song. . . . What a break for Ager, Yellen and Bornstein. . . . S'long.

ED. DAWSON.

ORGAN SOLOS

BERNIE COWHAM (New York Flushing Keith) offered a pleasing variety in his organ program this week that proved highly enjoyable to the patrons. Bernie received a good hand after his usual salute and instead of going into a singing number, opened with a concert solo of the beautiful "Blue Danube" waltz. Cowham played the number in a varied combination of stops, colorful and in a first class manner. He followed this with a medley of three popular tunes, "Lovable," "Mona Lisa," and "Auf Wiedersehn, My Dear," which the audience lustily joined in singing. Bernie's usual old time tunes were much in evidence. This time he chose "In Old Monterey," and "Tiptoe Thru the Tulips." This well developed and entertaining solo closed with Bernie's edition of news events, rhymed and set to a popular tune. The usual fine applause greeted him at finish.

KENNETH LEA (Elyria Capitol) presented a lively, happy set of tunes for his "Musical Picnic" organ novelty which met with great response from the audience and an appreciative hand. Leo, who is most popular in this town, made all announcements and spoke all continuity through the microphone attached to the organ. Starting off on the "picnic" with the new number, "Picnic for Two," cleverly bringing in "Extraordinary Gal," and then special words to "Aint We Got Fun," "Lullaby of the Leaves," and "Whistle, and Blow Your Blues Away."

HERSCHEL LEIB (Detroit Fox) offers a group of popular melodies arranged with simple transitions. "Oh, You Little Son of a Gun" opens the medley, and is followed by the romantic "Night Shall Be Filled with Music." "Auf Wiedersehn" proves an excellent selection for a violin solo, as is evidenced by the hearty applause which follows it. "Somebody Loves You" is too well worn here to be considered an addition to the program. "Too Many Tears" gives Ralph (Mex) Mendez another opportunity to shine with his silver voiced trumpet. "Business In F" is a raggy smash finish.

DON MILLER (Detroit Michigan) gives a well balanced program in his solo, "Parade of Song Hits." It includes "One Hour With You," "Night Shall Be Filled With Music," "Humming to Myself," "In My Hideaway" and "O-Kay Beer." The latter is not a parody, but a new number—one of those sure-response—prohibish numbers.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

DAYLIGHT

WHEN first announced, Eastman Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative was used chiefly with incandescent lighting. It was found, however, to be equally valuable under arcs. And now cameramen are finding it ideally suited to daylight shots, particularly when it is provided with the non-halation gray backing. Expert in every branch of cinematography, Eastman Super-sensitive "Pan" is an all-purpose negative, the advantages of which are felt all the way from the lot to the screen. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. KEEPING THE FAITH

If through all his days a man in business tells the truth as he sees it, keeps his word as he gives it, works for his industry for its own sake along with his, he gets what is known as a good reputation.

It is like that, too, with journals of business. Publications that matter have many of the attributes of personality.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 108, No. 4 — July 23, 1932

THE PALACE SURRENDERS

THE motion picture, once the step-child of vaudeville, came into complete dominion over Broadway this week, with the Palace theatre, last of the big time vaudeville houses, presenting a combination bill of a feature picture and six acts.

Thirty-six years ago the Broadway and world career of the screen began with the motion picture as a novelty turn on a variety bill down at Herald Square. The motion picture unit of a thousand-foot reel was established by the time requirements of a vaudeville act. The film was a mighty vaudeville attraction for a time, and presently became the lowly "chaser" which emptied the house at the end of the show. The screen began to be important after it had achieved a theatre of its own. The feature picture took from the stage "the road" and now dominates the amusement capitals of the world as well. The passing of the Palace ends an era in amusement history.

The Palace, built by Martin Beck, was opened March 24, 1913, and presently the late E. F. Albee acquired an interest, leading it eventually into the great Keith-Albee-Orpheum combination. For many years the Palace acknowledged the existence of the motion picture only by the presentation, without enthusiasm, of newsreels. Every great name in vaudeville has blazed from its marquee. Now it is just another "Broadway account" on the motion picture sales manager's schedule.

One might wish that the capitulation of the Palace were a more direct and decided victory for the motion picture. It is, rather, a token of the decay of vaudeville. Recently it has had a succession of price policies. The theatre has a total of about 1,700 seats, of which 400, in the gallery, are in these days practically useless, being reached by a side entrance which no one will use. Its two-dollar top on week days and three dollars on Sundays were found considerably out of step with the amusement market as the depression began to settle down, and a continuous policy at prices from thirty-five cents in the morning down to an eighty-five-cent top at night was applied. Now, headlining pictures, it has a seventy-five-cent top.

The pictorial conquest of the Palace has been on the way all the years, working inward from the hinterlands. Narrower and narrower has grown the field of big time vaudeville and the exclusively vaudeville theatre. In recent months the Palace, as the only straight vaudeville house in the country, has experienced difficulty booking a show up to its standards, because a lone theatre can not support production. It is unlikely that the Palace, or Broadway in any theatre, will go back to straight vaudeville again, unless a whole circuit, promising support for a rehabilitated line of production, is established.

The passing of the Palace, as the vaudeville capital of the world, negative though the immediate circumstances are, is none the less a part of the evolution of the motion picture as the dominant instrument of the amusement industry. This week, with "Bring 'Em Back Alive," direct from a Broadway run of weeks at the Mayfair next door, the Palace is making a healthy showing—as a motion picture theatre.

ANOTHER RESOLUTION

WORD now seems to come from high places that a high resolve has been made to insist on adherence to a code of advertising practise forbidding suggestive phrases and pictures, in the motion picture business. This would be much more interesting and exciting if the makers of motion pictures had not laid down a formula of negation with respect to the Production Code. Both the Advertising Code and the Production Code were adopted with a flourish of publicity and from time to time are recalled to memory by a set of resolutions. Just now it is proclaimed that the writer of any objectionable advertisement will be subject to dismissal. Just how much do you fancy that the writers of motion picture advertising have to do with the esthetic, ethical and moral standards of the industry? About as much as the cameramen have in picture production.

EPHEMERAL WOES

A PAINFUL weariness comes of much reading of many charges of oblique conduct in financial sectors and in the corporate management of some imposing concerns in this industry. There is, however, a certain sort of reassurance, for those to whom the motion picture is a career, that day by day the evidence grows in proof that the troubles of the motion picture industry are not, after all, motion picture troubles. Viewed apart from a somewhat unholy aura of chicane, which has been imposed upon some phases of operation, the motion picture has acquitted itself with the public rather better than most industries, as revealed in these days of trial. Inherent in the screen are powers greater than men.

CLEAN-CUT CUT

THE crisply defined, decisive action of Mr. Nicholas M. Schenck and his associates in Loew, Inc., in putting into effect a salary and wage reduction of from 35 per cent downward across the organization, making no exception of any artist or executive, stands in exemplary contrast to a number of contemporary maneuvers called retrenchments. It encourages the impression that the motion picture industry is a business.

PARAMOUNT'S 900th feature is in production at the Hollywood plant. It is from the stage play "Riddle Me This." Paramount was born of an idea akin, Adolph Zukor's notion of famous players in famous plays. The 900th picture from Paramount is, for the amusement world, quite as much a milestone as that 1,000,000th Ford motor car, which so pleased the press a few years ago.

The Fortunes and Misfortunes of "Bird of Paradise": Story of Abiding Faith

¶ Over $600,000 Richard Walton Tully spent to maintain his authorship. He believed Hawaii had given him a drama for all men, all time

By JOHN O'HARA

THERE is a story behind every story ever written, but behind "Bird of Paradise" there is an American tragedy with a happy ending. Anyone remotely connected with motion pictures or the "legitimate" theatre recognizes the title "Bird of Paradise"—and all but a few associate it with phenomenal success and with a long, heart-breaking plagiarism suit which Richard Walton Tully bitterly fought for many years, finally to find a happy ending in the sale of the screen rights to RKO Radio.

The story behind "Bird of Paradise" really begins with, of all things, a bank failure. In Stockton, Calif., in the late '80's there was a flood, and a bank which, like most small town banks, depended on good crops, was swept away as completely as though the flood had carried the building downstream. The president of the bank was ruined. His children had enough to eat, but that was all. They had to give up ponies, dancing school and all the other things that they were accustomed to. But one of them, Richard, swallowed his pride, ate a large slice of humble pie and got a job as a theatre usher. There he would escort to their seats the fathers and mothers of the young aristocrats who, a month before, were his playmates. But between showing people to their seats and hawking candy, young Dicky Tully watched stock companies, saw Maude Adams and John Drew and many another visiting star. And he became a playwright. He wrote his first play when he was 14 years old. He had a knowledge of the show business which could be gained only by observing good and bad actors night after night. The "play" was produced —in a hayloft.

Young Dick Tully finished high school, and his father somehow contrived to give him money enough to embark on a college career. There was enough for his freshman year, provided the freshman peddled papers, hauled ashes and picked up an odd dollar wherever he could. But the University of California was no cheaper than any other university, and it began to look as though Young Tully, now a sophomore and author of the junior class musical comedy, would have to abandon the halls of learning and get himself a job. Just then, however, Mrs. Phoebe Hearst, mother of William Randolph Hearst, had a look at the musical comedy which Tully had written, and she loaned him the money to continue his studies.

That really was Tully's start. Free from financial worries, he was able to devote himself to the research that was his hobby and that later was to mean a fortune for him. He was interested in Hawaiian folklore, and he delved into it at every possible moment during the remainder of his undergraduate and post-graduate career. From his delvings came the manuscript of "Bird of Paradise."

It was, to be sure, out of the question for a young Californian to send on a first play and get it produced in New York. Not even the ambitious youth believed there was a chance of the play's being produced at that time. Nevertheless he did not ignore the play. He wrote subsequent plays which saw production, but his pet was "The Bird," as he calls it. He retouched it, rewrote it, smoothed it over, and finally brought it to the shape he desired. Oliver Morosco read it, and in 1911 he produced it.

That 1911 production was only the beginning. Immediately following the opening in New York, two companies played "The Bird" in England, and both ran more than a year. At the conclusion of the New York runs the play was put on the road, and for 14 years there was not a time when the play was not running somewhere.

Tully's personal financial gain was more than $600,000. He wrote other plays. One, "Omar the Tentmaker," had a thousand performances, a three-year season without a close in summer or winter. Another, "The Masquerader," toured the world. Tully was a rich man; but "The Bird" was his big success and his favorite play. He had given it years of research and study. In it he had introduced his own ideas of religion, psychology and even sociology.

But eight years ago trouble began. Mrs. Grace Fendler, believing she was the author of "Bird of Paradise," brought suit against Richard Walton Tully and Oliver Morosco. She based her suit on the allegation that she had showed a similar script

MPTOA LEADERS CARRYING FIGHT ON INDUSTRY ILLS TO HOME OFFICES

National Committee Seeks to Discuss with Film Executives Problems Presented at Unit's Convention at Atlantic City

The national executive committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will seek to discuss with film executives in New York the various socalled "evils" and "ills" of the industry which were subjects at the eighteenth annual convention of the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, held on Monday and Tuesday of this week at the St. Charles hotel in Atlantic City. The national committee met in conjunction with the Pennsylvania affiliate.

Attempts will also be made to get the approval of distributors on the 5-5-5 standard exhibition contract so that exhibitors may use this form this season. MOTION PICTURE HERALD reported last week that attorneys for distributors had delayed action on the contract and that it had practically been "shelved," at least temporarily.

Vincent Defends Exclusive Runs

A heated protest by Walter Vincent, Wilmer and Vincent Pennsylvania circuit executive, against the resolution passed by the national committee which condemns exclusive leasing of product in towns with more than one subsequent run, featured the closing sessions. Mr. Vincent said that if the organization adopted the measures, he would resign. He took the stand that exclusive runs meant the salvation of the circuits, that the circuits could not fight 10 cent admissions without such a policy, and he firmly endorsed exclusive runs, declaring that he was out to buy all his product exclusively.

M. A. Lightman, MPTOA president, said the executive committee had wrangled over the issue for two days and that it felt that while there should not be a general condemnation of exclusives, they should not be allowed in towns where the subsequents have always depended upon the product of the distributors concerned. The committee adopted the resolution, with Mr. Vincent contributing a solitary nay. Vincent refused, later, to say whether he would resign.

Adoption of standard zoning schedules would be automatic with adoption of the 5-5-5 agreement, Mr. Lightman said in New York Wednesday.

Other resolutions adopted on Tuesday by the Pennsylvania group included reaffirmation of the stand against the Brookhart Bill; opposition to the practice of distributors in "swapping" film prices; opposition to the alleged monopolistic control by Western Electric and ERPI and their socalled exorbitant service charges; neutrality in the current presidential campaign; demand that all distributors designate titles of pictures in deals to independents as well as in circuit dealings, as Paramount, M-G-M and Fox already do.

The MPTOA national executive committee went on record as endorsing the 5-5-5 contract; opposing double features, commending the stand of the QUIGLEY PUBLICATIONS in this matter; advocating a minimum 15 cent admission; encouraging freedom of the press whereby producers will not penalize the press for adverse comment; opposing publication of box office figures.

Highlights of the earlier session included an address by Mr. Lightman on protection. He said, zoning is not the cure-all for exhibitors' ills, citing instances in his own houses where he is forced to accept pictures where the first run has 90 days protection over him, in which instances he is able to make more than in other towns where he gets pictures on regular release dates.

George P. Aarons, counsel for the Pennsylvania MPTOA, spoke on credits and debits of the past season, and Jay Emanuel reported on the beginning of a public buying movement which had its impetus in Philadelphia last week. This includes use of theatre screens as a publicity medium for prosperity propaganda. The organization offered its support, although Marcus Benn, Philadelphia exhibitor, opposed the resolution, saying it was a Stanley Theatres idea.

Sentiment indicated that the unit is in favor of longer runs at a lower percentage in independent houses rather than an intended quick cleanup at 40 and 50 cents. It was indicated also that exhibitors preferred the privilege of paying for and shelving weak pictures to playing at a greater loss.

Brookhart Bill Opposition is Reaffirmed; Vincent Protests Vote Against Exclusive Runs; "Swapping" Film Prices Hit

The highlight of Tuesday afternoon was the Brookhart Bill debate between Sidney Samuelson, president of the Allied Jersey body, and Louis Nizer, speaking as an attorney. No decision was made, but applause of exhibitors indicated that sentiment was against the bill. The organization later went on record against it. Mr. Vincent was chairman of the debate, with P. S. Harrison timekeeper. Nizer attacked the bill as handing over the business to the Government, practically as a public utility, while Mr. Samuelson took the stand that government intervention meant protection of independents.

Mr. Harrison delivered an analysis of current product, at the afternoon session.

Approximately 150 exhibitors attended, and 200 exhibitors and exchangemen were at the dinner Tuesday night.

Platform Adopted

General discussion revolved around a platform of 11 planks, including one each on double features, "the exhibitors' right to exist," selective sales plans, the Brookhart bill, decentralization of circuits, "swapping" of film prices, freedom of the press, impartiality in the forthcoming presidential election, sound service charges and percentage playing. The platform drawn up by Pennsylvania MPTO executives, was approved unanimously on Monday. The 11 planks are:

"1—Double Features—We intend to continue to oppose the showing of double features in our territory whether by circuit or independent theatre. We believe it is an attempt to substitute quantity for quality, and is unsound economically.

"2—The Exhibitor's Right to Exist—We urge that the MPTO set up the necessary machinery to try to adjust the grievances of exhibitors who are oversold, or denied a fair share of the product available in their zones.

"3—Selective Sales Plans—Selective selling schemes and other such sales nostrums aim to set up an artificial aristocracy of the theatre. To deprive a section of our public of seeing certain pictures is arrogant, cruel and shameful disregard of those patrons' past loyalty.

"When a picture represents an unusual cost or possesses great box-office value, the distributor can give it the exclusiveness he desires by road showing it and subsequently releasing it to the neighborhood houses.

"4—Brookhart Bill—A debate on this subject resulted in a resolution of condemnation.

"5—One man in the booth—Attempts to impose two men in the booth of single shift houses are dictated by an arbitrary attempt to compel the exhibitor to shoulder an added unemployment burden. We recommend that the MPTO open negotiations to obtain the

U. S. GOVERNMENT ESTIMATES FILM RENTALS AT $220,000,000 YEARLY

Wages Totaling $17,978,258 Paid 9,342 Individuals in 540 Exchanges in 1929, Federal Study, Based on Census, Shows

The United States Government has selected the motion picture industry as the subject of the first of a series of wholesale trade studies, based on the nationwide census of American industry taken by the Bureau of the Census of the Department of Commerce in 1930.

In 1929, according to the Government investigation, there were 540 exchanges throughout the country doing an annual business of $220,740,675 in film rentals and in the sale of accessories. At the time of the Federal checkup, there were 9,342 individuals employed in all exchanges, and they received $17,978,258 in wages during the year.

Expenditures involved in distributing pictures are said to have totaled $34,629,281, but just what expenses are included in this figure were not made known.

Of the 533 exchanges used in the detailed analysis, 444 were owned by producers, 75 were independent exchanges operating in the domestic market, and 14 were export exchanges of which four were owned by producers and 10 were independent of producers. The producers' exchanges contributed 94.67 per cent of the total business, independent exchanges cared for 2.22 per cent of the volume, and export exchanges accounted for the remaining 3.1 per cent.

The analysis shows a marked concentration in wholesale distribution. Almost 99 per cent of the total domestic distribution is done out of 32 key cities. New York City alone is responsible for 16.34 per cent of the amount distributed through exchanges to the various exhibiting theatres in the United States, and in addition does all the exporting of films since all 14 export exchanges are located therein. Philadelphia ranks second, followed by Chicago, Boston, Los Angeles, Detroit and Pittsburgh, the seven cities together distributing about one-half of the total, based on conditions as of 1929.

"There does not seem to be any direct relationship between the number of theatres and film distribution as measured by the income derived therefrom," says the report. "Some geographic divisions with a large number of theatres show a small per capita film distribution, and vice versa. Even the number of theatres in relation to population fails to show a positive correlation with the revenue derived from the distribution of films by the exchanges located within the respective geographic divisions. Neither does the seating capacity of the theatres bear any direct relationship to income from film distribution by exchanges. A very good index to film distribution has been found, however, in the retail store sales. High retail sales per capita go with high per capita film distribution. Not only that, but as the per capita sales increase, the per capita film distribution increases more than proportionately," it was pointed out.

FEDERAL RANKING OF RENTAL VOLUME

The Government discussion of distribution is based on the following chart which Federal investigators compiled as a result of the 1929 checkup:

City	Number of Exchanges: Producers	Number of Exchanges: Independent	Volume of Business: Amount	Volume of Business: % of Total	Rank in Volume

* Does not include six exchanges with business of $128,253 which were omitted because of inadequate data.

† Includes 1 exchange in Birmingham, Alabama; Little Rock, Arkansas, 1; Tampa, Florida, 1; Kansas City, Kansas, 1; Louisville, Kentucky, 1; Portland, Maine, 2; Baltimore, Maryland, 4; Butte, Montana, 1; Columbus, Ohio, 1; Sioux Falls, South Dakota, 3; San Antonio, Texas, 2; Houston, Texas, 1; and Charleston, W. "While operating expenses for all the exchanges were but 15.7 per cent, they varied from as low as 8.5 per cent to more than 57 per cent. In the case of producers' exchanges the operating costs decreased as the volume of business increased. There was a further tendency for operating expenses to decrease as the sales per salesman increased and as the radius of operation decreased, thus putting the spotlight on the weak spots in the distribution of films which may be used as a basis for improvement."

Schenck Orders New Pay Scale

Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's, Inc. and of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corp. has sent the following order to all company employees and executives:

"During the entire period of the economic depression, the management has endeavored to maintain salaries unchanged. It was earnestly hoped that conditions would improve and hence there would be no necessity for lowering compensations.

"However, it is felt at this time that in order to keep the current financial position of the company secure and to withstand an even further slackening of business, all types of economies should be effected.

"At a consultation of all heads of departments and offices of your company it was the unanimous opinion that a sliding scale of salary reductions be determined and acted upon, starting with the week of July 18, 1932; but only to hold effect until such times as an economic recovery is manifest.

"I have no misgiving about the spirit with which this essential communication will be received. And while I am reluctant to convey this message to you, I am confident that your splendid loyalty and cooperation of the past will evidence itself in the present situation. I know you will realize that this step on the part of the management is a protection against the future and quite in keeping with conditions as they are.

"Be assured that our company, thus fortified the same sound successful organization it has always been."

Extent of the reductions is: Five per cent on salaries of $50 or under; 10 per cent on $50 to $75; 15 per cent on $100; 25 per cent from $150 to $1,500; 30 per cent on all over $1,500.

Midwest Exhibitors Gain By Livestock Price Rise

The rapid rise in the value of livestock in the last 30 days is encouraging all business in the Kansas City area and commercial leaders see in this a sign that the livestock industry is to lead the nation into financial recovery.

Hundreds of exhibitors in cattle raising and shipping communities throughout the Southwest and Middle West are benefiting by the two-thirds increase in the price of hogs and a 50 per cent rise in the price the farmer is getting for cattle and sheep.

St. Louis Suburbans Will Drop Price Cutting Stunts

"Penny Nites," two-for-ones, free coupons and similar gags for cutting below the regular admission prices will disappear from the neighborhood and nearby suburban theatres of St. Louis on and after August 1.

The decision was reached at a meeting of the representatives of the 70 theatres now operating in St. Louis, including the group of 20 houses in the St. Louis Amusement company circuit.

11% OF AD BUDGETS OF INDUSTRIAL LEADERS USED ON SOUND PICTURES

Second Classification in Survey of National Advertisers Shows 3 Per Cent Outlay for Silent Films in Year

Eleven per cent of the advertising and sales promotion budgets of a representative group of national industrial advertisers for the last year was spent on sound motion pictures used in the furtherance of their product. In a second classification of the survey, three per cent was the outlay for silent films. The results of the survey, completed late in June, were made known this week.

Two thousand industrial concerns, and manufacturers of nationally advertised product, were surveyed by the National Industrial Advertisers Association, in conjunction with the Association of National Advertisers and the United States Department of Commerce, and to the question, "Do you consider your film activities successful," all of the sound film users answered "Yes." Again 100 per cent replied that their sound film expenditures were "as resultful as the same sum spent on other sales promotional activities." The replies to these same two questions in the case of silent films were 82 per cent for "success" and 75 per cent for "comparison with other sales promotional activities."

That motion pictures prepare the sales background of an important number of the nation's industrial advertisers was strikingly demonstrated by the fact that the sales forces of 90 per cent of the companies reporting in the checkup tried to be present at film showings for customers and follow up the prospects present.

The questionnaire prepared by the NIAA, ANA and the Department of Commerce had these objectives:

1. To give a cross-action of actual experience with films in the industrial field.
2. To indicate the results obtained.
3. To present the judgment of users, both as to type of film and type of equipment.
4. To obtain their opinion as to the trend of the medium.

Sixty-seven Per Cent Use Films

Sixty-seven per cent of the companies reporting indicated that they use sound, silent or still films in advertising and sales promotional activities. Thirty-three per cent reported that they do not use films of any kind. Approximately 70 per cent use silent films. "It is interesting to note," the committee reported, "that the use of silent pictures far outnumbers the other types, but significant to observe that sound and still films are making rapid progress."

At this point we might add that development of the non-theatrical market, started vigorously and on a wholesale scale by sound manufacturers some two years ago, has been halted temporarily by economic conditions. The sound development in this connection is at the moment in a state of almost complete dormancy.

Thirty-five per cent of the companies reporting use 16 mm. film only; 17 per cent use 35 mm. and 48 per cent use both. Forty per cent reported they used films principally to depict "manufacturing processes"; 48 per cent are shown to indicate "operation and use" of the product; four per cent are for "dramatization of sales."

In ascertaining the length of existing silent films, it was found that of those reported:

37% were of 1-reel length	11% were of 4-reel length
27% were of 2-reel length	5% were of 5-reel length
14% were of 3-reel length	4% were of 6-reel length
	2% were of 8-reel length

On the committee which conducted the survey were Benjamin Miller of J. Walter Thompson Company; George J. Zehrung, Motion Picture Bureau, Y. M. C. A.; George S. McMillan, Association of National Advertisers; T. C. Fetherston, Union Carbide and Carbon Corp., and C. F. Ivins, Pathescope Company of America, Inc.

One, two and three-reels are about equal in number and predominated in the distribution of sound films.

The answers to the question, "number of silent prints in use," indicate:

Prints in Use	Cos. Using 16 mm.	Cos. Using 35 mm.
1 to 3	40%	27%
4 to 6	19%	15%
6 to 12	13%	17%
Over 12	28%	41%

The majority of sound film users reported more than 12 prints in distribution.

While most of the concerns screened pictures for sales staffs to acquaint them with product, both silent and sound films were shown to jobbers, dealers, prospects (industrial and consumer), engineering societies, students and the public. They were screened at theatres, film bureaus which were organized especially for the purpose, by direct shipment of prints and through portable projectors purchased and operated by the companies.

With regards sound films, 84 per cent reported that their sales force followed up prospects after viewing films. Eighty per cent follow up on silent showings.

The use of sound-on-film systems are divided about evenly with sound-on-disc recording and reproducing as used by the group reporting.

To the question, "Will silent films continue to have a place in promotional work?" 60 per cent reporting said "Yes"; 20 per cent said "No" and 20 per cent replied "Doubtful." Eighty-six per cent reporting believe that silent films should be superseded by sound films; only 14 per cent voted "No."

In comparison with motion pictures, slides were declared "As good," by 34 per cent; "Not as good," by 23 per cent; "Better than motion pictures," by 20 per cent; "Don't know," replied 16 per cent; "Can't be compared," 7 per cent declared.

The cost of silent films was listed at between $1,000 and $3,000 a reel, 35 mm. width, and for sound films, $2,000 to $5,000 a reel. The costs are said to include all scenario preparation and studio expenses.

The characteristics of projection equipment in use was reported as follows:

Type	Weight (lbs.)	No. of Pieces	Light Capacity (Watt)	Price
SOUND
16 mm.*	75 to 125	2	165 to 400	$400 to $750
16 mm.†	45 to 60	2	100 to 400	$460 to $600

SHORT WAVE RADIO USED ON LOCATION

There are few contributions of science which are not used by the motion picture studio to advantage in production. Paramount has installed a portable short wave radio transmitter and receiver which, it is said, has proved of real value on location. The set, of 15 watts, has its own government call letters, KGWX. Especially valuable in outdoor filming, the set was used during the shooting recently of "Devil and the Deep," with small boats six miles away being controlled from a microphone at the side of the director.

All Sound Film Users Pronounce Results Successful and as Fruitful as Other Sales Promotional Activities Employed

Picture Quality More Vital Than Cost Cuts: Kent

The improvement in the quality of motion pictures is of greater importance than the lowering of the costs of production, in the opinion of Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film, expressed on his arrival in London last week to view conditions.

Declaring that business is as good as the picture, Mr. Kent said: "There is no substitute for the picture." The executive noted the economic depression of the moment, the decline in picture quality and the tendency to drive children away from the theatres by over-sophistication in films as three major contributing causes of dull business. Mr. Kent expressed the belief that the end of the sophisticated type is in sight.

Mr. Kent declared: "Depression is not without its benefits, for we now fully realize the need of new ideas, and the way to secure them is to weed out the incompetents and put back into their old places the men who really know how to make pictures."

The Fox chief indicated that he had never been in favor of large theatre circuit acquisitions. He expressed the thought that the decentralization of the Fox theatres would lead to closer contact with the public.

BRITISH FILM INSTITUTE PROPOSED; PUBLIC FUNDS WOULD SUPPORT IT

Government Units Notoriously Badly Served in Advice on Picture Matters, Says Mooring; Censorship Called Negative

by W. H. MOORING
London Correspondent

Following two and a half years' close study of the film industry in all its aspects, the Commission on Educational and Cultural Films, sitting without Government status, under the chairmanship of Sir Benjamin Gott, has issued one of the most illuminative reports ever prepared on the subject of motion pictures.

Called "The Film in National Life," this report covers a very exhaustive field of inquiry and touches on the importance of the film in national life, both as an entertainment and a cultural force.

Of most value, however, is the crystalization of the commission's findings in definite proposals to be tendered for Government consideration.

The principal recommendation is that a National Film Institute be founded, to be financed in part out of public funds, and to be accorded a royal charter.

The objects of such an institute the commission defines as follows:

1. To act as a national clearing house for films.
2. To influence public opinion in favor of good films, especially those of more than mere entertainment value.
3. To advise educationists on the use of the film in education, and to obtain the active cooperation of expert teachers in the production of educational films.
4. To act in liaison between the various sections of the film trade and outside interests.
5. To undertake research work.
6. To collate and maintain film records and to establish a national repository of film of permanent value and to compile a critical catalogue of educational films.
7. To advise Government departments on matters concerned with films.
8. To act as certifiers of films for the Government.

With all of these objects every one fully cognizant of the willy nilly methods of the film industry in Britain will feel in sympathy.

The lack of a central organization to administer to the needs of the motion picture business has been felt these many years, and as time goes on becomes more and more obvious. It is unfortunate, therefore, that the report of the commission, though applauded as a lucid and honest effort, falls suspect in certain quarters for its reference to the formation, on public money, of a National Institute.

British Government departments are notoriously badly served as regards advice and authentic information on film matters, and, as the commission reports, "educational opinion has up to now been more ready to condemn than to investigate the value of the film as an educational instrument." I have ventured to predict in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, from time to time, that the progress of the educational film in Britain would repeat the history of the development of the theatrical film.

America will be left the clear field—Western Electric has been working hard for over a year past and is all set to wire up British schools—and when the time of fructification arrives, the ill-informed among our administrators and legislators will awaken to the fact that cultural influence and power has been annexed by the United States. Then and only then will they realize the extent to which the educational film bears upon national life. And when they realize this, they will impute all kinds of motives to the American companies responsible—for purely legitimate commercial reasons—for the introduction of a virile policy of screen education.

But the commission's report does more than focus attention upon cultural possibilities: it discusses and rebuts implications against the film in general, brought by the many authorities who, not content with the effects of the present film censorship, have striven to exclude juveniles under 16 from theatres where certificate "A" pictures are showing.

Restrictions of the kind, the report points out, may defeat their own objects if producers seek at all costs to obtain a "U" certificate for the majority of their pictures by producing fewer "A" films. This way some of the best work might be lost to the screen, and adults cannot be expected always to be content with films made specially with an eye on their suitability for children.

The commission points out that it is concerned only with promoting a constructive and not a restrictive influence on the cinema. It then goes on to deal with censorship, which it describes as "at its best a negative force." The report adds that "it is the function of an efficient censorship to reflect public opinion and not to lead it."

A point of special interest is made in apparent qualification of the urge that public funds should be made available for the Film Institute.

"Very properly," states the report, "any attempt on the part of authority to influence taste is suspect. We feel that a Government control in films, such as exists in Russia, is unnatural, unhealthy, and not in the national tradition. In Russia 30 per cent. of the funds have to be applied to the production of political or documentary films."

Even so, the the report might have added that the centralization in Russia of film resources, human and material, has served to produce a higher technical standard in Russian film production, and has proved, second to the colonization of motion picture talent in Hollywood, the value of a unified policy in the creation of a national film industry.

VALUE OF FILM IS RECOGNIZED

The Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, which forms the principal activity of Crystal City, Mo., has officially recognized the value of the motion picture as chiefly providing one of the necessities of life, entertainment. Every week the company distributes 2,500 motion picture theatre tickets among its 650 employees during the period that the glass works are closed. Various other features of employee aid are provided by the company, in addition to the distribution of theatre tickets.

Commission Warns Against Any Attempt to Influence Taste; Member of Parliament Seeks 33⅓ per Cent Imports Tax

Seeks 33⅓ Per Cent Tax on Foreign Films

J. R. Remer, Member of Parliament for Macclesfield, put down an amendment to the budget which, if accepted, would have had the effect of removing the existing nominal tax on films imported to Britain. Not that he was smitten with a sympathetic concern for the presently suffering American film concerns. Not at all. He had intended that this move should clear the deck for a further plan to institute in place of the present nominal scale, an ad valorem tax of 33 1-3 per cent on all foreign films imported. His plan will go forward to the next budget, and needs watching, for he is supported heavily by M. P.'s on the Conservative side, and may gain much support from the Labor side in the near future.

Lee Marcus May Leave RKO Soon

Lee Marcus, at present liaison officer between the RKO home office and the Hollywood studio, on Tuesday in New York would neither confirm nor deny current reports that he will leave the company on or about September 1.

Mr. Marcus was at one time vice-president of RKO Pathe and has recently been operating in his present capacity. He returned last week to the home office following a visit to the Coast, where he conferred on production matters with David O. Selznick, in charge of production.

RCA Shareholders Increase

Radio Corporation of America lists the number of its shareholders on June 30, 1932, at 108,833, an increase of approximately 5,000 during the first six months of the year, the company reports. June 30, 1931, the total was 93,000 and in 1928, 25,000.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

FOOD AND CONGRATULATIONS. As 650 film people of New York gathered at the Hotel Astor for a luncheon in honor of Edward M. Schnitzer upon his joining the sales organization of Educational-World Wide. Schnitzer was formerly with Fox. Among those at the speaker's table were Charles L. O'Reilly, James R. Grainger, Louis Nizer, Harry Buxbaum, Budd Rogers.

BACK TO PICTURES. Mr. and Mrs. Paul Muni as they arrived in Los Angeles, coming by boat from New York, where Muni achieved great success last season as the star of the stage play, "Counsellor at Law." Muni will now star for Warner Brothers, his first vehicle to be "I Am a Fugitive."

MAKING LIGHT OF IT. Arriving in New York isn't commonly a comical event, but Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy would see it that way. Accompanying the Roach-MGM comedians is Mrs. Hardy—resting mostly upon her Oliver, though not entirely ignoring the Laurel nearby.

REUNITED. (Above) And in another production of spectacular type. They are Ralph Graves, Lila Lee and Jack Holt, who were together in "Flight," and who are now joining their talents in Columbia's "War Correspondent," which is now well in the process of production.

JULY FASHION NOTE. For Chee-Ak, if not for you and me. Chee-Ak is the Eskimo hunter in "Igloo," Universal production.

IN THE BILLING. (Right) Kane Richmond, one of the new film players who has been named by MGM for featured roles. His first part in immediate support of the star is in the football story "Huddle," which is Ramon Navarro's current vehicle, produced under the direction of Sam Wood.

BACK TO WORK. Mary Astor, recently become a mother, who has been assigned to World Wide's "Those We Love," a little over a month after the birth of her child.

IN ITALIAN SERIES. Oreste Sandrino (left), who has been signed by Clemente Giglio (right) to star in a group of Italo-American talking pictures. The first, "Thou Shalt Not Kill," is in production at Fort Lee, N. J.

ON STAGE. Loretta Young, who is scheduled for personal appearances in the East following completion of First National's "They Call It Sin."

LITTLE MUNICIPAL ACTIVITY ON FILMS

levy a 10 per cent tax on amusements for local welfare purposes was passed. Fortier withdrew his state censorship bill, and one by Representative McKneely was killed in committee. Senator Holland's bill on stench-bombings and explosives was passed by the senate. The public education committee killed a House bill taxing amusements 20 per cent. A House committee defeated Senate Osrer's bill prohibiting exclusive runs, block booking, and zoning. Senate bill 290, making it a misdemeanor to sell more tickets than there are seats (s.r.o. bill), was reported on favorably with an amendment. A measure to license all projectionists and require them to appear before an examining board was reported favorably by a committee. It does not apply to operators having five years' experience. House Bill 760, levying a 10 per cent tax, was withdrawn. Representative Morton proposed a measure taxing theatres showing screen advertising from $50 to $850 per annum, according to population. Governor Allen this week signed a bill levying a franchise tax of $1 on every $1,000 capital, surplus and undivided profits of all state and outside corporations doing business in Louisiana.

CANADA

Since January 1, legislators of Canada have concerned themselves principally with amusement taxes, although there were some changes in censorship fees.

A bill passed in Ontario provided for amusement tax increases, effective May 1, but tickets up to 25 cents continued exempt. A similar law was adopted in Manitoba. Quebec adopted a new schedule providing for substantial tax increases on admissions. A heavy increase also was imposed in Nova Scotia. New Brunswick followed suit.

The film censorship fee was increased in Alberta from $3 to $4 a reel. Nova Scotia raised its fee for censorship from $2 to $2.50. The fee for appeal by a distributor from the decision of the Ontario board was raised from $10 to $20 a reel.

Ontario adopted a regulation requiring 25 per cent Canadian scenes in every news reel, effective June 18. Each news reel must contain at least 50 per cent British and Canadian topical views.

The Canadian government passed an order-in-council requiring payment of duty on sound trucks entering Canada, without privilege of rebate.

Hamilton, Ont., reduced theatre license fees from $100 to $50.

Toronto decided to ban all carnivals in public parks.

The Province of Ontario decided not to enforce the law requiring theatres to be fireproofed before licenses were renewed June 1 but many theatres have already voluntarily complied with the regulations.

The Ontario and British Columbia governments decided not to enforce the film quota laws.

Alberta last week suddenly sprung amusement tax revisions upon theatres which represent a substantial increase on low-priced tickets. The exemption on tickets up to 26 cents has been abolished and there is now a 2 cent levy on all admissions from 11 cents to 30 cents. This succeeds the tax of 2½ cents on tickets from 26 cents to 30 cents. The 5 cent tax on tickets from 31 cents to 50 cents continues but there is a slight increase on admissions from 51 cents to 75 cents, the advance being from 7½ cents to 8 cents. One result has been the decision by exhibitors to reduce the price of children's tickets from 15 cents to 10 cents. Other exhibitors are absorbing the 2 cent levy on 15 cent seats.

Other Alberta regulations call for classification of all short subjects, with the exception of news reels, either as "Passed U" or general, the former category being for family patronage.

Mexican Fans are In Accord with Herald Star Poll

by JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

The illuminating list compiled by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, based upon answers by exhibitors throughout the United States as to who is who among screen players in regard to box office value, is pretty well seconded by exhibitors in Mexico and by intelligent and educated Mexican film fans. The majority of exhibitors there immediately become optimists when they can book a picture in which Marie Dressler appears. It seems that the veteran comedienne's drawing powers have more to do with increased box office receipts than the vehicles in which she cavorts.

An element of Mexican women fans adore Joan Crawford; others cannot see her at all. Most male fans are altogether cold toward her. But everybody has kind words for Janet Gaynor. Constance Bennett has quite a following in Mexico. But it is largely feminine. They admire her because of her elegance. One would think that in this land of brunettes everybody would be favorable to blondes. But such is not altogether the case in regard to screen players. Some picture fans actually yawn when Ann Harding, for instance, is mentioned. Sylvia Sidney is rising high in the favor of both men and women Mexican fans, and Fay Wray is very popular. Dolores del Rio and Lupe Velez are not now as sure-fire box office draws as they were awhile ago.

Exhibitors and fans in Mexico are enthusiastic about Wallace Beery. His pictures are big draws. However, Maurice Chevalier presses him closely for honors. In the comedy division (male) favor and business are shared by Harold Lloyd, Wheeler and Woolsey, and Charlie Chaplin. Clive Brooks, George Bancroft, Cary Cooper, Paul Lukas, both the William Boyds, Eugene Pallette, Phillips Holmes, Fredric March and Warner Oland are favorites. Ramon Navarro is good for considerable business, although not as much as before.

'Model Hollywood' for Chicago's Fair

An official publicity release for the Chicago 1933 World's Fair says: "A Model Hollywood, comprising a generous slice of California's movie colony brought to Chicago and set down on the shores of Lake Michigan, will be one of the features of A Century of Progress Exposition. Here the public will see "talkies" made before their eyes, welcome their favorite stars in person and catch closeups of the life in Hollywood. Some of the attractions will be a model theatre, complete sound recording photographic studio, style and beauty theatre, an open-air Hollywood bowl seating 5,000, a movie lot for sample sets from famous productions and a Hollywood cafe."

Machnovitch Elected Educational's Treasurer

Sam Machnovitch, who has been for the last several months acting treasurer of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has been elected treasurer of Educational and its subsidiary corporations.

Machnovitch was for 22 years an employee of the old Pathe Company, surviving and progressing through the various mergers and changes in the company, and at the time of the consolidation with Radio Pictures was comptroller.

Kansas Decision Not Sales Factor, Distributors Hold

Distributors at Kansas City declare the recent opinion by the Kansas supreme court holding invalid certain clauses of the old standard exhibition contract, two of which are identical with parts of existing contracts, will have no effect on the sale or exhibition of pictures in Kansas.

Attorneys representing the distributors in the case in question, United Artists versus R. E. Mills, are understood to have advised them that the court's opinion denying a rehearing is not a clear-cut decision on two debated points and that the second decision modifies the original ruling.

The Kansas supreme court originally ruled the contract was illegal in Kansas because it specified a minimum admission in violation of the state's anti-trust laws and because the pictures sold to Mr. Mills were not approved by the censor board at the time of sale, as assertedly required by the censorship statute of Kansas.

Loew's 40 Week Net $7,374,805

Loew's Inc., in a comparative earning statement for the 40 weeks ended June 3, 1932, shows net profit of $7,374,805, which compares with net profit of $9,829,482 for the 40 weeks ended June 5, 1931. The net profit for the 1932 period is equivalent to $4.37 per share on the common stock, while the corresponding profit for the previous year equaled $6.03 per share.

The comparative statement indicates operating profit for the 1932 period at $11,213,000, with $13,951,685 as the 1931 figure; and depreciation and taxes for the 40 weeks in 1932 at $3,838,195, compared with $4,122,203 for the 1931 period.

Studio Changes to Better Films, Says Zukor at Boston

Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount Publix Corporation, speaking before 200 exhibitors and newspapermen at Boston Wednesday at a luncheon in the Copley Plaza hotel, declared that reorganization at Hollywood would result in better pictures. Mr. Zukor said that the old cement wall about the Paramount lot, which prevented people from seeing in and those inside from seeing out, had gone forever. He said a new era had dawned.

Many old directors are out of touch with the development of the industry, but Sam Katz is now in charge and he is in close touch with the exhibitors, Mr. Zukor declared. Mr. Katz is "listening to the voice of the exhibitors and it is up to them to tell Katz what they want," he concluded.

MPTO Denounces Brookhart's Bill

same rights the unions have accorded theatremen of the west.

"6—Decentralization of circuits—We applaud the wisdom of those circuit heads who honestly admit that chain operation of theatres has proved a blunder.

"7—Swapping of Film Prices—We condemn unreservedly the swapping of film prices by local exchange men as a vicious practice and a violation of the code of selling ethics promulgated by the Hays office.

"8—Freedom of the Press—We deplore the continued practice of certain distributors to punish adverse criticism in the trade press with a cancellation of advertising. The right to differ in opinion is a cardinal American principle and criticism honestly expressed is usually more helpful than agreement dishonestly voiced for selfish purpose. We urge the heads of our industry to adopt a broad-gauged attitude of tolerance to those who honestly differ with them and not to use the power of advertising patronage to stifle free thought and free expression.

"9—We strongly urge the exhibitors to continue the industry's time-honored policy of strict impartiality in the coming presidential election. Certain film executives, high in the council of the two major parties, may loosely pledge the nation's screen to one or the other candidate and may even try to favor their candidates in the newsreels and otherwise.

"10—We urge the MPTOA and Allied States Exhibitors' Associations to cooperate in any legal action aimed to break down the monopolistic control of Western Electric and its subsidiary, ERPI. The exorbitant and unjust service charges of these companies are helping to break the back of the industry.

"11—Your organization has d e f i n i t e knowledge that many theatres are now buying the best products for 15, 20 and 25 per cent of the gross. We oppose any percentage in excess of 25 per cent as excessive."

Ed Levy of the Connecticut Exhibitors Association has been named associate counsel of the MPTOA. Frank C. Walker is general counsel.

"THE OUTSIDER" Broadway stage hit. Produced in England. Directed by Harry Lachman, associate of Rex Ingram, in latter's greatest successes.

12 MARQUEE Pictures

Changing tastes during any year make it futile to prescribe at the beginning of a season what will be desirable entertainment for twelve months ahead. Marquee Pictures allow M-G-M a leeway in production that enables us to continue to deliver successful attractions. "Tarzan, the Ape Man" starring Johnny Weissmuller was not announced at the beginning of the current year; it was a Marquee Picture, typical of M-G-M's ability to create new trends, in line with M-G-M's policy of alert, progressive showmanship. There will be 12 Marquee Pictures in 1932-33.

BOOK and PLAY PROPERTIES

THE PAINTED VEIL—By Somerset Maugham. Cosmopolitan serial. Wide book sale.

HODKINSON PLAN WOULD INJURE SMALL OPERATORS, SAYS POWERS

Declares Proposed Integration Would Eliminate Competition, Benefit Chosen Few, Ruin Other Producers and Exhibitors

Holds Government Would Not Countenance Coalition and Public Would Not Stand for It; Sees Practical Obstacles

by P. A. POWERS
President of Powers Pictures, Inc.

MR. P. A. POWERS, whose observations anent Mr. W. W. Hodkinson's plan for the motion picture industry are presented here, is one of the few still active pioneers of the modern structure of the industry. He arose conspicuously in the field of production as an "Independent" in the battle against the Motion Picture Patents Company in the period of 1909-1914 and was one of the active figures in the founding of Universal. Mr. Powers' argument on the text of stern and strenuous practicality is based on a broad background of strenuous experience.—THE EDITOR

I have read with interest the plan for revision of the industry advanced by W. W. Hodkinson in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and I agree with him, as does everyone intimately identified with this industry, that the present systems of production, distribution, exhibition and exploitation of motion pictures are archaic, and that new ideas and new methods are imperative if the industry is to survive. On the other hand, while I agree with Mr. Hodkinson's plan in theory up to a certain point, I have grave doubts as to its success in actual practice.

Primarily, it appears to me that the Government would never countenance a coalition that has for its avowed purpose the complete elimination of competition among retailers, which, in the case of the motion picture, is the theatre. And, unless I misread Mr. Hodkinson, that is substantially what he proposes.

Sees Public as the Loser

In this connection Mr. Hodkinson says: "The first interest should be that of the public." I cannot agree that the public's interests will be best served by a system which grades and classifies pictures and thereupon allots them to houses of corresponding grades and classes. Inevitably this must mean that the privilege of seeing Class A pictures will be denied to those communities which are without Class A houses.

I further cannot visualize a supine public meekly assenting to the dictum of an Integration Corporation which despotically rules: "Here, Mr. Patron of the Class E Theatre, is your motion picture entertainment. You can take it or leave it."

Another feature of the plan is the simultaneous release of each picture. Assuming that there will be many, let us say, Class E houses throughout the country, just how many prints will be required for this simultaneous release, each print to enjoy but that single run which must necessarily be brief in houses of this class?

Mr. Hodkinson suggests the formation of an Integration Corporation whose principal function would be to grade and classify pictures submitted to it by producers. All producers would be accorded the privilege of offering as many, or as few, productions as they cared to, but they must accept the decision of the Corporation as to classification.

Certainly there would be no method by which it could be determined in advance into what classifications the many pictures submitted would fall, and, therefore, there would be no way of controlling the number of pictures which would be available to any particular class or grade of theatre. Would we not then face a situation where there might be far too many Class E pictures and not enough Class A to supply the houses of corresponding classifications, or vice versa?

Would there not always be the possibility that, faced by a shortage of Class A pictures, the Corporation might allow Class B pictures to slip into the A class? Or the same situation for other classes?

The function of classifying pictures would certainly present a situation fraught with headaches. Indubitably each producer would feel that certain of his pictures rated the A classification, and would claim discrimination and politics if they were graded otherwise.

Classification Problem

As to classifications, just how many grades or classes should there be? Each year we have a few outstanding productions which click decisively at the box-office. Do these rate no higher than Class A?

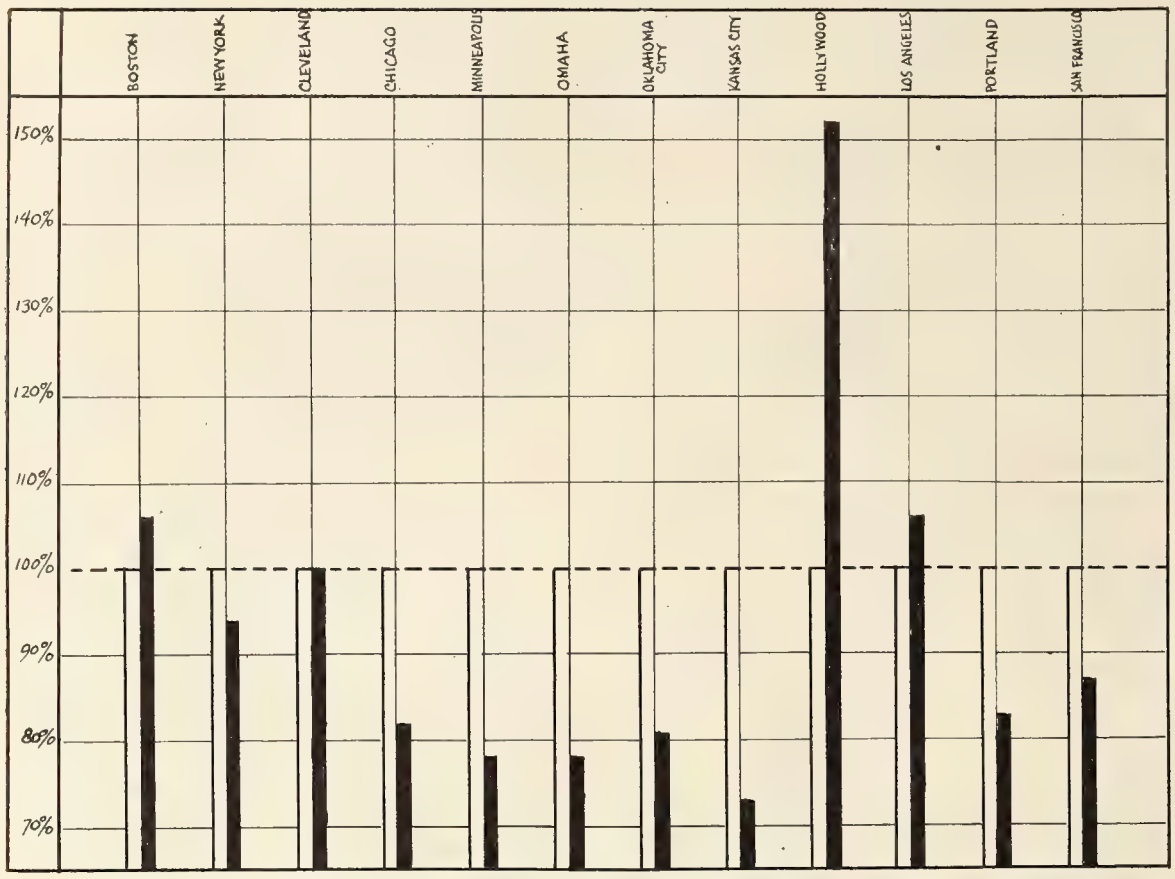
As I understand the plan, the ownership of the Integration Corporation would be vested in stockholders, with their interests in proportion to their participation in the plan and their present security values. Seemingly then, the Corporation would remain in control of the major companies who at present practically dominate the industry. Which would seem to leave the whole situation open to politics the like of which has never, as yet, been known to the business.

Next we come to the question: What will happen to houses of a given class in the same community? For example: in a town of 10,000 population there are two houses rating Class C. Do they both get the same picture at the time of its simultaneous release? Or, if only one is to get service, which is to survive? Who decides this vital question? Does the loser calmly fold his tent and steal away, or convert his house into a garage, as Mr. Hodkinson suggests? And if he refuses to abide by the high decision will there be some legal method of closing him up?

Summarizing the whole plan it appears to me that here is a proposition that will be hailed by a select and favored few, and execrated by the majority. It would seem to work out most profitably to a few producers and a limited number of theatres, and, contrariwise, ruthlessly spell bankruptcy and ruin to those not among the chosen.

I frankly admit that I have no plan to offer, other than good pictures, reasonably priced to exhibitors, honestly advertised and presented to the public. That this is not a cure-all, but rather an important step in the right direction, I also cheerfully concede.

As Mr. Hodkinson says, there is nothing revolutionary in the idea of a merger as the best means of salvaging the business. There have been several plans of a similar character in the past, few of which, I might add, have proven economically successful.



Pictures Must Be Sold

There is no question but that a central method of distribution would curtail the cost of merchandising, but, in this connection, one must not forget that motion pictures must be sold to the exhibitor and, through him, to the public.

Naturally, any organization controlling the sales of various companies would be in a most difficult position, as each company would feel that its product was superior and entitled to greater financial returns than that of the other companies in the pool, and the failure of returns to substantiate this opinion would inevitably result in internal dissention and eventual divorcement.

I am frankly of the opinion that any such thing as a complete unification of the industry would be wholly outside our existing laws and would not be countenanced by the Government. There is no analogy between such a plan as this and the combining of small independent telephone companies. In the latter instance a combination was unquestionably in the best interests, both social and commercial, of the entire country, and was effected principally because there were no competitive factors to be considered. Contrariwise, the plan advanced by Mr. Hodkinson advocates the complete destruction of competition among retailers.

I might add, in closing, that with the trend of the industry as it is at present, any opportunity for successful merging will soon be past, due to the threatened disintegration of the various companies, including their loss of control in the field of exhibition. This latter situation will eventually give rise to a condition whereby independent circuits will be born, and, in turn, this will encourage the formation of bigger and more ambitious independent producing companies to supply product to these independent houses. The result of such a policy is not difficult to envisage; burdened by heavy capitalizations and overheads, the present major producing organizations will not be able to compete successfully. In such an event the resulting chaos cannot be better described than as "confusion confounded."

The graph, based upon MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S weekly compilation of theatre receipts, provides a comparison of box office returns in twelve cities for the period of May 1 to July 9. The black columns are for the given period in 1932, the light for the same weeks last year.

U. S. SUES NEW ORLEANS CIRCUIT AS MONOPOLY

Charges United Theatres with Unfair Fixing of Order of Second-Run Showings; Large Film Companies Named Charging a monopoly has been effected by contracts and protection used in the distribution and exhibition of second-run motion pictures in violation of the Sherman anti-trust act, the Government on Saturday filed suit in the federal court at New Orleans against United Theatres, Inc., operating 18 New Orleans neighborhood theatres, to restrain the corporation from carrying out contracts the Government alleges it has with major producing and distributing companies. It is understood that the action follows a lengthy investigation by operatives of the Department of Justice.

The Government's suit, filed by United States Attorney Edmund E. Talbot, acting under direction of John L. O'Brien, assistant to the United States attorney-general, contends that United Theatres has obtained a monopoly of second-run pictures in New Orleans by entering into contracts which contain provisions arbitrarily and unfairly fixing the order or schedule in which the films should be shown in other theatres in the same town. Also named are: Paramount-Publix Corporation, Fox Film Corporation, Pathe Exchange, Inc., First National Pictures, Warner Brothers Pictures, Vitagraph, Inc., RKO Pathe Distributing Corporation, United Artists Corporation and Universal Film Exchange, Inc.

The suit sets forth that by the arbitrary arrangement of exhibitions of films in theatres controlled by United Theatres, other theatres are deprived of an equal chance of displaying second or third-run showings on a fair basis; that by the time they are permitted to show the film its value has been reduced.

The 18 neighborhood theatres named in the suit as owned and controlled by United Theatres are the Arcade, Capitol, Carrollton, Cosmopolitan, Dreamland, Escorial, Fine Arts, Folly, Granada, Isis, Mecca, Napoleon, Piety, Prytania, Poplar, Rivoli, Tivoli and Washington.

M. H. Jacobson of 1401 Tulane Avenue, New Orleans, is president and general manager of United Theatres.

Mr. Jacobs refused to comment on the suit.

Fox and RKO Considering Northwest Pooling Deal

A pooling of Fox and RKO Orpheum interests in Spokane and Takoma, Wash., is in the process of negotiation at Spokane. Charles Skouras, operating head of Fox West Coast Theatres, is discussing the situation with the officials of the RKO Orpheum, and a decision is expected shortly.

It is anticipated that the Fox interests will assume the management of the Orpheum in Spokane and that RKO will take over operation of the Fox house in Tacoma. The discussion is also concerned with the allocation of product between the two Spokane houses.

Max Balaban Dead

Death of Max Balaban in Chicago Monday removed one of the five brothers Balaban who, with Sam and Morris Katz, are credited with developing the de luxe theatre idea that has been synonymous with the circuit name Balaban & Katz. Mr. Balaban died at the Michael Reese hospital, at the age of 39, following a half year of illness. Funeral services were conducted Wednesday at Weinstein's Chapel, with burial at Waldheim's Cemetery.

It was 20 years ago that the Balabans—Max, Barney, Abe, John and Dave—opened the Kedzie theatre on Chicago's West Side. In 1917 they were joined by Morris and Sam Katz. The Central Park, Riviera and Tivoli introduced de luxe theatre construction for neighborhood houses. The Chicago and the Uptown brought further development of this idea, which extended into the service departments of the circuit, which, with subsidiaries, expanded into its holdings throughout Illinois.

Mr. Max Balaban in recent years had been film buyer, and booked theatres in Chicago and Detroit. He is survived by his wife and two children. Besides the four brothers mentioned there are Harry and Elmer Balaban.

Balaban & Katz theatres were closed until noon on Wednesday in tribute to his memory.

Westinghouse Net Loss for Quarter Equals $1,881,979

Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company reports a loss of $1,881,979 for the three months ended June 30, which compares with a loss of $1,320,148 for the three months ended March 31, a total loss for the six months of $3,202,127. Economies are claimed by the company to have resulted in monthly savings of more than $3,400,000.

RADIO INDUSTRY HAD DEFICIT DURING 1931

Federal Radio Commission, in Report to Congress, Upholds Present Broadcasting Policy; Sales Talk Has Little Time

America's advertising-supported radio broadcasting industry sustained a deficit during 1931, according to financial statements filed with the Federal Radio Commission during the conduct of its investigation into the radio industry, taken at the behest of the last Congress.

Investigated were 571 broadcasting stations, out of more than 600 in the United States. The statements indicated that in the aggregate, and including the two largest chains, National Broadcasting Company and Columbia Broadcasting System, these 571 stations had expended $77,995,405.68 in 1931. During the same period they had taken in $77,758,048.78, a loss of $237,356.89.

Hurrahs from Radio Men

The commission's report (comprising 325 pages) was turned over to the Senate last month. The result is described pointedly by "Tide," advertising and marketing publication circulating particularly among advertisers and advertising agencies, which said: "And radio men let out shouts and huzzahs, for the commission's findings constituted an unequivaocal exoneration of radio as is."

More cynical opponents of the present radio broadcasting practice variously expressed the opinion that the report was too much in the nature of a "whitewash" for the radio industry, and asserted that "facts" are apt to be somewhat misleading when reduced to averages and percentages concerning anything as variable as broadcasting.

The report embraced, in particular detail, a "typical" broadcasting week, that of November 8-14, 1931. Contrary to the long-held belief, the commission's findings indicated that only 6.5 per cent of the total broadcasting hours of all stations was occupied with sales talk. Commercial hours represented 36.14 per cent of the entire time and 18.11 per cent of the commercial programs was taken up in the "pushing" of product via the air.

Decry Reducing Sales Talk

Fifty-two advertising agency men contributed opinions concerning the feasibility of reducing or in some way more stringently regulating the amounts of sales talk. Their apparently unanimous opinion, consolidated briefly by "Tide," was: "If you cut down sales talk to mere mention of sponsorship our clients just won't advertise and the radio business will collapse."

The commission, apparently basing its conclusion upon that statement, found: "At present it does not appear practicable and satisfactory to permit only the announcement of sponsorship of commercial programs."

In the financial statements, and their illuminating indication of the profit, or lack of it, in the radio broadcasting industry, are figures from National Broadcasting Company and Columbia Broadcasting System. Each lists various regular expenditures, identified as for programs, employees, equipment replacement, line charges, international broadcasting, research and development. Identified regular charges, listed by NBC, totaled $6,110,138.10, with program costs noted as the highest—$7,868,692.49. The miscellaneous category in the financial statement of NBC, known as "other costs," reached $12,027,578.36. In the case of CBS, identified expenditures aggregated $4,950,764.93, with line charges as the largest figure—$1,939,443.26. "Other costs" for CBS reached $5,875,934.49. The specific nature of the "other costs" listing was not indicated.

In 1931, the financial statements showed, the NBC loss was $2,241,757.12, despite a gross advertising revenue of $25,895,559.34. CBS recorded a profit of $794,724.89, from a gross advertising revenue of $11,621,424.31.

What Federal System Would Cost

The commission estimated the cost of operation of broadcasting by the Government, if it were to take over the work. One plan required an initial outlay of $120,000,000 with $100,000,000 as the yearly upkeep charge, without including talent. Under another plan, $50,000,000 would be necessary immediately, with the same amount required annually for upkeep. Both plans provided for giving every one in the country the same quality and amount of radio entertainment. The existing expenditure of $48,000,000 in facilities gives evening reception of a sort to 89.6 per cent of the population. On the basis of 25 cents monthly as a tax on each of the 16,000,000 receiving sets in the United States, the Government would have only $48,000,000 to finance programs.

The commission's report was unsympathetic toward the often-agitated request that 15 per cent of all wave lengths be given to educational institutions. Since 1927, according to the report, the number of educational stations has dropped from 95 to 44, in most cases because of lack of public demand, and support. The report gave the view of the commission on this subject thus: "Educational programs can be safely left to the voluntary gift of the use of commercial stations."

RADIO COMMISSION ASCERTAINS FACTS

The 571 individual radio broadcasting stations which filed financial statements with the Federal Radio Commission expended $77,995,405.68 in 1931, and took in $77,758,048.78, a loss of $237,356.89. National Broadcasting Company sustained a loss of $2,241,757.12 in the year, with a gross advertising revenue of $25,895,559.34. Columbia Broadcasting System turned a profit of $794,724.89, with gross advertising revenue $11,621,424.31. In a typical week (November 8-14, 1931) sales talk occupied only 6.5 per cent of the total broadcasting hours of all stations. Commercial hours represented 36.14 per cent of the entire time, while 18.11 per cent of the commercial program time was taken up with "selling" product. The existing investment of $48,000,000 in broadcasting facilities gives evening reception to 89.6 per cent of the United States population.

Court Upholds Western Electric In Pacent Case

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, in New York, on Monday handed down a decision modifying the decree of United States District Court for the western district of New York in the case of Western Electric Company and others against Sol Wallerstein, Buffalo theatre owner, according to an announcement from Western Electric.

This action was originally brought against Wallerstein for the use in his theatre of Pacent reproducing equipment which was alleged to infringe Western Electric patents. The District Court decided that the Pacent equipment did infringe three of these patents, but that a fourth was not infringed. A fifth, the so-called Lowenstein grid bias patent, it said, was invalid.

Both Western Electric and Wallerstein filed appeals. The decision announced this week declares the Lowenstein patent valid and infringed but that the Pacent equipment is free of infringement and the other four patents in question. Western stated this week that the invention covered by this patent is an extremely valuable factor in the design of amplifiers used in the Western Electric sound system.

Wallerstein's interests were represented by Warner Brothers who set up an additional claim that because, as producers of pictures, they had a license to employ the Western Elcetric recording system, they had the right also to pass a license along to the exhibitor to show their pictures on any type of equipment. The court of appeals denied the contention as did the lower court.

"The decision in this case will have an important effect in other suits involving the Lowenstein patent now pending," said Western Electric.

EASTMAN, LOEW'S, HEARST, PATHE IN MOVE FOR 13-MONTH CALENDAR

Over 200 Important Manufacturing, Merchandising, and Publishing Concerns, Including Quigley, Apply System

Educating leaders of American industry to the benefits which are advanced for a 13-month calendar in business operation is said to have progressed to the point where well over 200 important manufacturing, merchandising and publishing corporations have adopted this system in recent years. Loew's, Inc., Eastman Kodak Company, Pathe Exchange, Inc., Quigley Publications, Hearst Publications and Sears Roebuck and Company are among the concerns operating on this auxiliary calendar, advantages of which are said to include:

Budget estimates can be more accurately made and checked from period to period.

True trends can be exactly determined without adjustment to allow for the irregularities of the present calendar, such as five Sundays in one month and four in the next.

Costs can be more accurately checked.

Each period is exactly alike with regard to the number of individual week days, and therefore truly comparable.

Past performance can be measured in equal units of time.

Payroll confusion caused by five payrolls in some months and four in others is eliminated.

Sales and purchases can be more easily followed up.

"Without waiting for the slow action of governments, more and more business concerns are quietly adopting the 13 months calendar, long advocated for adoption by international agreement," according to M. N. Stiles, American secretary of the International Fixed Calendar League, which has been campaigning for the new form. "Strictly speaking," continues Mr. Stiles, "it is not at present a 13 months calendar, but is a 13 period calendar, the periods consisting of four weeks each without regard to the months of the regular calendar, and used as far as possible as the basis of business records and operations."

The reason advanced by Mr. Stiles for the increasing use of the 13-period calendar is that "business executives are learning that accounting and management by four-week periods pays; they have learned that it is possible for their accountants to tell them the story of their company's past performance more accurately than by the civil calendar, to show more truly the trend of its business, and enable them to budget the year without danger of unpleasant surprises caused by the civil calendar's unequal months and their changing number of business days."

A census of business concerns in the United States and abroad that have now adopted four-week periods as the basis of their accounting and internal transactions, including payrolls, is being taken by the League.

Efforts to effect adoption of a simplified calendar by agreement among the nations have been in progress for a decade. The governments have deferred action, but in the meantime the rapid growth in the use of the 13-period system as an auxiliary calendar promises the establishment in the business world of a de facto reform before the official and universal reform is accomplished, according to Mr. Stiles, who said that "a vast industrial economic system has developed, international in its interchanges, swift and complex in its manifold activities. This new economic life demands more than ever before an accurate knowledge of economic facts."

"Herein the use of the calendar plays a new and fundamental part," he continued. "We find the facts by making comparisons and the comparisons are based on units of time, chiefly the months, because now we cannot wait for any longer periods to elapse. But when it happens, as it often does, that these monthly comparisons are seriously distorted by months of unequal numbers of days and the presence in one month of more days of individual business value than in another, owing to the changing number of producing, shipping, selling and paying days, we suffer the penalties of drifting along with inaccurate information."

"For example," he says, "the chain store (or theatre), whose sales are largest on Saturdays, seems to be doing a better business in a month of five Saturdays, although its business may actually have fallen off. The deflection caused by five weekly payrolls in one month and four in another is but one outstanding example of calendar caused misinformation in comparing monthly costs. Current monthly statistics, those of trade associations and the Government, as well as of individual companies, disclose such unadjusted calendar-caused deflections."

Ogden L. Mills, secretary of the treasury, was quoted as saying in a recent interview:

"If there is any hope of maintaining balanced conditions in industry and trade, in contrast with the haphazard adjustments upon which we have relied in the past, that hope lies in the gathering of accurate information. But more than this, it lies in the careful analysis of this information, the establishment of fundamental principles on the part of the people themselves. This last is essential, so that if we are lucky enough to have leaders endowed with wisdom and foresight, the people will have the necessary knowledge to back them up.

"We have made great progress in the gathering of current business statistics. This information can so readily, rapidly and widely spread that the business course of the future can be chartered by the light of this information. All this will naturally result in greater safety to individual industries and give some assurance of stability to our economic life."

"These remarks," according to Mr. Stiles, "are peculiarly pertinent to the simplification of the calendar, when it is considered that the inequalities and variability of the calendar are responsible for serious difficulties in the gathering of accurate information and for much misleading information."

The movement to change the calendar and provide the needed uniformity was initiated by the International Chamber of Commerce ten years ago. Three years ago, a referendum by the Chambers of Commerce of the United States among its members resulted in a two-thirds vote favorable to the holding of an international conference. As a consequence, a conference of government delegates from 44 nations met at Geneva last October under the auspices of the League of Nations. Although it recognized the need of calendar simplification, and recommended to the churches the stabilization of Easter, the International Conference deferred action on an immediate general reform on the grounds that public education on the subject was not sufficiently general and that the disturbed world conditions made the time unfavorable for final action, although some government delegates said simplifications would assist in economic recovery.

Advantages Include Accurate Estimating of Budgets, Trends, Costs, Elimination of Payroll Confusion, Better Sales Ideas

Thus the question was held in abeyance for expected reconsideration in 1935, when final action is anticipated.

The Conference did, however, point the way for the business world, and for governmental agencies as well, to obtain in a large measure the advanced benefits of calendar simplification by extending the present use of the auxiliary calendar of 13-periods of four weeks each.

The calendar system of four-week periods can be started on any date, it is said, but many concerns have been waiting until January 1, 1933, as the first day of the first month coincides with the first day of the week. The comparable fixed 28-day periods will then begin on Sunday and end on Saturday, with the following closing dates:

January	28	July	15
February	25	August	12
March	25	September	9
April	22	October	7
May	20	November	4
June	17	December	2

December 31.

The last period would consist of 29 days, including the one unavoidable day in each year beyond 52 weeks.

Cleveland Suit Near Settlement After 4 Attempts

The Cleveland independent exhibitors' monopoly suit against large distributors has finally reached the stage of a tentative out-of-court settlement after four attempts were made over a period of weeks to adjust differences over zoning and prices in the Cleveland territory.

Conferences in New York this week between Samuel Horwitz, attorney for the complaining theatre owners, and representatives of the distributors, headed by Gabriel L. Hess, of the MPPDA, resulted in the drafting of a tentative contract setting forth settlement terms. This was submitted to Leopold Friedman, counsel for Loew's, Inc., for approval or possible revision.

Mr. Horwitz was joined in the current discussions by a delegation from the protection committee of the Cleveland Independent Exhibitors' Committee, consisting of M. B. Horwitz, Meyer Fine, Max Lefkowitz and Percy Essick, all independent circuit operators of Cleveland.

The suit originated in a local dispute over Cleveland protection and admission scales involving Loew's theatres. Mr. Horwitz had planned to take depositions in New York.

ACADEMY AWARD PLAN INTO ACTION SOON

Nomination of Candidates in Each Section Starting at Once; Only Minor Changes Made by Selznick Committee

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

Preparations have begun in Hollywood for the election of the winners of Academy awards for the year ending July 31, 1932. The awards committee, chairmaned by David O. Selznick, will report Monday to the board of directors, defining the rules and regulations, and the branches immediately will begin nominating the candidates in each section. At a later date, these nominees will be voted upon in secret ballot by the entire membership. These ballots will be opened at the annual Academy dinner in October, and the winners announced. Gold statuettes will be given as prizes.

Although several minor changes have been made in the regulations this year, they are on the whole substantially the same as those of last year. Awards will be given for best performance by an actor, best performance by an actress, best direction, best cinematography, best art direction, best sound recording, best screen writing, most outstanding production and most important scientific or technical achievement of the year.

Balloting To Be Secret

In the case of performances, the actors' branch will vote by secret ballot, selecting those they consider the three best. Names of those getting the three highest votes will be submitted to the Academy membership as the nominees. The same will be done by the directors to select the nominees for direction. Heretofore the five highest nominees have been submitted to the membership. In the cases of cinematography and art direction, the branch members will vote for five each; then the three receiving the largest votes will be declared the nominees. In the case of cinematography, only black-and-white pictures, photographed in America under normal studio conditions, will be eligible. This will eliminate foreign, travel and color pictures, although such productions will be eligible for special Academy awards.

Each studio will submit five samples of sound recording, and the sound section will select from these three to five samples. Arrangements then will be made to show these samples to the entire membership so that a winner may be picked.

Writers will select the best examples of screen writing, nominating three, to be voted on by the members. The same will be done by producers in the case of the best production.

May Be Special Awards for Foreign

Pictures eligible are American-made productions only, released in Los Angeles between Aug. 1, 1931, and July 31, 1932, exclusive of previews. There probably will be special awards for foreign achievements.

Following are the members of this year's committee handling the arrangements for awards: David O. Selznick, chairman; Edward G. Robinson, Jean Hersholt, Lewis Milestone, Ernst Lubitsch, King Vidor, Walter Wanger, Louis B. Mayer, Oliver H. P. Garrett, Frances Marion, Alfred A. Cohn, Cedric Gibbons, Carl Dreher, Ralph Hammeras.

Among the outstanding productions of the Academy year from the various studios, the following are likely to be considered by the Academy in making the 1932 awards, either regular or special:

FOX: After Tomorrow, Dance Team, Delicious, Trial of Vivienne Ware, Sob Sister, Bad Girl, Ambassador Bill.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER: Arsene Lupin, As You Desire Me, The Champ, Grand Hotel, Hell Divers, Mata Hari, Sin of Madelon Claudet, The Guardsman, Strange Interlude, Emma, Tarzan the Ape Man.

PARAMOUNT: Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde, Ladies of the Big House, Miracle Man, Broken Lullaby, Make Me a Star, This Is the Night, American Tragedy, One Hour With You, Shanghai Express.

RKO-PATHE: Lady With a Past, What Price Hollywood.

RKO-RADIO: Lost Squadron, Bring 'Em Back Alive, Symphony of Six Million.

TIFFANY: Hotel Continental, Strangers of the Evening.

UNITED ARTISTS: Arrowsmith, Palmy Days, Street Scene, Tonight or Never, Scarface.

UNIVERSAL: Frankenstein, Igloo, Spirit of Notre Dame.

WARNER-FIRST NATIONAL: Blessed Event, Doctor X, The Man Who Played God, The Mouthpiece, Winner Take All, Alexander Hamilton, Alias the Doctor, Five Star Final, Union Depot.

COLUMBIA: Fifty Fathoms Deep, Miracle Woman, Platinum Blonde, Secret Witness, Final Edition, Forbidden, Attorney for the Defense.

FOREIGN PRODUCTIONS: Congress Dances (Ufa-Paramount), Doomed Battalion (Universal), Michael and Mary (Gainsborough-Universal), A Nous La Liberte (Rene Clair), Road to Life (Amkino), Reserved for Ladies (London Films-Paramount).

to Morosco before "Bird of Paradise" was produced, and she charged that Mr. Morosco had lifted her ideas and used them.

The case was fought back and forth for six years. Tully's fortune was swept away just as his father's fortune had been wiped out by the flood. Lawyers' fees and the attendant expenses of the suit took every cent Tully had made out of "The Bird," as well as the smaller fortunes which had accrued from his other plays. But Tully was satisfied to lose every cent if he could retain the rights of the play and suffer no loss of reputation. For a time it looked dark for Tully. But finally on March 18, 1930, the New York State Court of Appeals, highest tribunal in the state, decided in favor of Tully and Morosco. The opinion, written by Justice Lehman, was unanimous. It gave Tully full rights to the play, cleared him of the stigma of plagiarism, and threw out Mrs. Fendler's case.

It was complete vindication for Tully, but he was broke. Worse, he was deeply in debt, and he no longer was a young man. Married a second time, with a small daughter in school,—much of the acrimony in the suit was due to the fact that Tully's first wife participated as a witness for Mrs. Fendler—he had literally to start all over again. He had his reputation, and that was about all. All, that is, except his legal rights in "Bird of Paradise," which at the moment did not look very imposing. Then RKO Radio bought the rights, and Tully was on his feet again. He is 55 years old.

"The Bird" gave many an actress her start. Carlotta Monterey, Lenore Ulric, Laurette Taylor and Bessie Barriscale got their first big chance in "Bird of Paradise." The late Theodore Roberts was in the original company, and so were Lewis Stone and Guy Bates Post. It made the continuous run record of 14 years, and it made a fortune. And Tully firmly believes it is an ageless play, that it has avoided time's alterations and custom's staleness, and that it is a play for today or tomorrow as well as a play for a generation ago.

Eddie Eckels to Coast

Eddie Eckels, brought to New York some time ago by Harold B. Franklin to edit the RKO Theatres house organ, "Now," has left for the Coast, where he will take on new duties, designed to aid the home office advertising department, headed by Robert Sisk, with ideas from the studio. Ken Long will replace Mr. Eckels as editor of "Now."

Columbia To Do "Parole Girl"

Columbia will produce "Parole Girl," written by Aben Kandel, novelist and playwright, with a star, as yet not selected, in the title role.

Jaffee Sails on World Cruise

Bill Jaffee, representative of Nathan Burkan at Columbia's home office, sailed from New York this week aboard the S. S. Mauretania on a cruise around the world.

BRITISH PLAYERS IN 704 FEATURES MADE IN HOLLYWOOD IN 5 YEARS

Two More Provinces Protest Against Proposed British Quota for Canada at Imperial Conference This Week

by W. M. GLADISH
Toronto Correspondent

By way of indicating to the powers that be, at the Imperial Economic Conference opening Thursday in Ottawa, that the public is just as likely to be Anglicized as Americanized by the product of Hollywood, official statistics have been compiled to show the extent to which British authors, British players and British locale or story have entered into the makeup of film features produced by Hollywood companies in the last five years. This information has been received at Toronto from a strictly official source, the identity of which is not publicly revealed, however, and the data have been placed at the disposal of the Imperial Conference.

The statistics are in three groups, the first showing the titles of 128 features for which the authors of the stories were British; United Artists, 1; Fox, 22; Goldwyn, 4; Columbia, 4; Paramount, 49; MGM, 22; Universal, 15; RKO, 11.

704 Feature Britons

Another list shows that no less than 704 features have been produced in Hollywood in which there were featured British players in the cast.

A further group of listed Hollywood features is provided to show the number of pictures in the five years which had a British locale and/or British story. This list totals 112: United Artists, 2; Fox, 20; Goldwyn, 5; Columbia, 6; Paramount, 24; MGM, 37; Universal, 9, and RKO, 9.

Still another classification shows that 16 films produced in Hollywood within the last five years by the major United States companies were, in part at least, photographed on British or Dominion location.

"So far as our records go, no Canadian picture was ever made in Canada by a British producer," according to the statement. "No picture based on a Canadian theme or Canadian book has ever been produced in Great Britain."

The Toronto statement points out that no feature pictures were made by a Canadian company in 1929, 1930 or 1931.

Two more provinces have joined with Allied exhibitors of Ontario in the protest of independent theatre owners against the proposal for a British film quota. The Quebec Allied Theatrical Association, Montreal, and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Manitoba have forwarded resolutions.

The Quebec association pointed out that it is anxious to run British pictures, but insists that "the theatres should be permitted to run those pictures which will be most profitable to their business, irrespective of their origin."

Various officers of the Quebec association are members of Parliament and mayors. The president is Hon. T. D. Bouchard, speaker of the Quebec Legislature and mayor of St. Hyacinthe. The vice-president is Hon. Fernand Rinfret, M. P., mayor of Montreal, and former Secretary of State in the Canadian Cabinet. The directors include Senator P. E. Blondin, C. B. Howard, M. P., Ernest Cousins of Montreal, and Alderman Donat Paquin of Hull.

The conference will probably be in session until the first or second week in September.

Each of the self-governing countries within the British Empire is sending official delegates, the countries represented being Great Britain, Irish Free State, Commonwealth of Australia, Dominion of New Zealand, Government of India, Union of South Africa, Dominion of Newfoundland, Southern Rhodesia and Canada, with the smaller colonies also having representation.

General arrangements are in the hands of a committee headed by Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett, P. C., prime minister of Canada. The program chairman is Dr. O. D. Skelton, undersecretary of state for external affairs, Ottawa.

About 1,500 official delegates, advisers, secretaries, observers, industrial representatives and clerks from within the Empire are to attend.

Matters affecting inter-Empire trade relations will be the chief subjects of discussion. The conference itself will not make any actual and final decisions, but will adopt recommendations. Shortly after the conference, a special session of the Canadian Parliament will be held at Ottawa and this procedure will be followed in other British countries.

A special subcommittee will deal with the subject of motion pictures.

Imports from U. S. Drop

A summary of the trade of Canada, issued by the Canadian Government, shows that the imports of films in the 12 months ending April 30 totaled 10,294,460 feet, the value for duty purposes being $848,257, as compared with 16,202,482 feet, valued at $1,325,181 for the previous 12 months.

The Canadian Customs' figures show that, while film reports from the United States took a heavy drop, importation from the United Kingdom increased almost 20 per cent. In the latest 12 months for which statistics are available, imports from Great Britain totaled 1,294,460 feet valued at $102,547, as compared with 1,099,395 feet with a valuation of $90,243, for the previous 12 months.

Film imports from the United States to April 30 were 7,962,863 feet, valued at $677,223, as against 14,616,713 feet valued at $1,196,191 imported during the previous year.

British Producers Demand Fair Play

by W. H. MOORING, London

British film producers, who through their organization, the Films Group of the Federation of British Industries, are to be represented at the Ottawa Conference by Messrs. Isadore Ostrer, C. M. Woolf, John Maxwell and Neville Kearney, look to this assembly to promote the interests of British motion pictures, more on commercial than on national or political lines.

British Producer-Delegates to Ottawa Demand Fair Play and Removal of Artificial Barriers Favoring U. S. Films

Mr. Kearney, a permanent official at F. B. I. headquarters, said as he sailed:

"We feel that British films have now achieved a general standard of quality which fits them to stand on their merits and we do not therefore intend to ask for special protective measures.

"We do intend, however, to lay stress on the immediate need for a removal of artificial restrictions which have hitherto operated against British films in many of the markets abroad. The situation in many cases is parallel to that of the tied public houses of Britain. Such a situation makes no allowance for meritorious achievement, and is against the best interest of the cinemas and the public."

There is every indication that British motion pictures may provide the conference with one of its major discursive subjects.

It is reported that the Canadian Government has been sent several resolutions from public and semi-public bodies, urging special preference to be given British pictures, and there is every likelihood that the conference will consider resolutions aiming at ways and means of encouraging preferential treatment for British film product in Canada.

Attempts were made independently of the industry to reach with the Home Government an "understanding" which would enable delegates to give expression to threats of reprisals.

Waste of Time for Australia, New Zealand

by CLIFF HOLT, Sydney

As Australia and New Zealand are included among the Dominions, it can naturally be presumed that whatever quota recommendations are propounded by the Ottawa conference will apply to them, and if such is the case, the conference will be wasting its time.

A British quota for Australia and New Zealand is no longer necessary simply because both countries are taking every British picture available; in New Zealand, in fact, British films are on a releasing basis with American product. Then why recommend political pressure when that which is to be pushed can get along very well on its own accord?

A quota in Canada may be to the liking of British producers, for Canada in the past seems to have been closed to them as much as the United States, but as far as Australia and New Zealand are concerned, the creation of a quota would be silly.

IMITATION IN PRODUCT

Exhibitor Warns Independents They Have Big Opportunity if They Avoid Cycle Production

The makers of motion pictures have gone so far in imitating one another in product that for the new season "there is only one real program put out by all the producers," says Herman J. Brown, manager, Inland Amusement Company, Nampa, Idaho. In a letter to MOTION PICTURE HERALD Mr. Brown warns that the cycle method of production is particularly dangerous to independents, who, he says, have an opportunity to lead the procession if they will put out original pictures.

Forms of contracts offered by the distributors also come in for excoriation from Mr. Brown, who warns that "unless we get better contracts—far better than the 5-5-5, to say nothing of the illegal jokes used now —Hell will break loose in this industry, and it may mean the end of some of the few plaster-of-paris Napoleons who can still stand erect."

In support of his assertion that there is a deadly sameness in the product announced for next year, the exhibitor in his letter goes into detail on themes.

"Every company has from one to three jungle pictures and ape pictures," he writes.

"Every company has one football story. That means that nine football stories will be released around Thanksgiving Day, that they will hit the small towns in a bunch after the football season is over, and kill each other and starve to death.

"Every company has too many mystery pictures, each one having from two to four. This means that they must be spotted regularly about ten days apart by the exhibitor.

"Every company has from one to three political pictures. In my opinion these will die in the small towns. I may be wrong in this, but it is an awful cinch that the ten or twelve that are to be made this season will prove on the whole to be flops, if only because of the fact that it is so grossly overdone that the public can't digest them all.

"There is going to be an overproduction of air pictures. This is also true of pictures that concern the radio and columnists.

"The types of pictures above, plus Hot-Sex, constitute about 95 per cent of all the pictures we will get."

Mr. Brown declares that the announced plans of the studios are evidence that "our producers are rubber stamps, incapable of originality." On the other side of the product ledger he says that "there is obviously going to be a very big shortage of domestic comedy."

To the independent company, the exhibitor concludes, the moral is pointed. "The best thing," he says, "would be to strike out a path for itself, a path away from Will Hays and the gentlemen who with him believe that success in this business lies in monopoly and coercion, a company that will make product that is original, can absolutely command the box-offices and dictate the terms to the great even if mismanaged circuits."

Quota Tightened In Germany; New Tax in Mexico

Severe legislation against motion pictures was passed this week in Germany and in Mexico. Cable advices from Berlin indicated that Germany's kontingent had been given additional "teeth," which may result in a further diminished market in that country for American films. The new regulations make it compulsory for "dubbing" of imported pictures to be done in Germany, and also provides that German versions of talkers be 75 per cent German. Imports into Germany are also regulated and authorities in that country are permitted to juggle the number of imports permitted for next year. One clause bars producers of anti-German product from distributing in the country.

Effective July 26, Mexico will collect a new import tax of 10 pesos (about $2.90) on all foreign-language discs brought into the country. Spanish-language disc importations will be taxed two pesos, approximately 50 cents.

For the first time, censorship of motion pictures has been made a national proposition in Mexico.

Making film censorship national in that country has been brought about by the appointment by President Pascual Ortiz Rubio of Rafael Perez Taylor, chief clerk of the department of state, as a committee of one.

Managers of foreign affairs at home offices of American distributors are expected to meet shortly to discuss the Mexican and German situations with Fred L. Herron, in charge of foreign activities for the MPPDA.

Sheehan Returns To Former Title

A revised executive lineup at the Fox Coast studio finds Winfield Sheehan with his former title of vice-president and general manager. Sol Wurtzel is executive producer, and George L. Bagnall is listed as studio treasurer.

Al Rockett, Robert North, William Goetz and Lydell Peck are associate producers, and Edward W. Butcher is noted as studio manager. Julian Johnson is scenario editor and John H. Tracy has been placed in charge of the legal department. Jack Gain, at one time Paramount studio manager and later handling labor contacts for the producers' association, is the new casting director.

McNamee To Broadcast for RKO

Graham McNamee has been signed to announce the radio broadcast of "The Phantom of Crestwood," for RKO Radio, over 58 NBC stations. McNamee will not broadcast the first episode of the series of six because he will be in England on his vacation. He will, however, be on hand for the remaining five.

C. C. Burr Plans Twelve Features

Charles C. Burr, independent producer, plans 12 features for the 1932-33 season, with production under the firm name of Superior Pictures Corporation, Ltd., at Hollywood.

Four specials are included in the lineup. The titles of the other eight are: "Whirlwind Wilson," "The Master Magician," "Without the Law," "Kentucky Blue Streak," "The Silver Fang," "The Silent Barrier," "The Darling of the Gobs," "His Unknown Wife."

M. S. Rosenfield, at 1540 Broadway, New York, is the sales representative for Superior Pictures.

Foreign Distributor Moves

Foreign Talking Pictures Corporation, Chicago, has moved its headquarters to 806 South Wabash avenue. The company distributes foreign language films. David L. Apfelbaum is sales manager.

Pioneer Exhibitor Dead

John T. Stephens, 57, who operated the first open air motion picture theatre in Biloxi, Miss., died recently.

Australian Firm Is Liquidating

Subsidiary companies of Greater Union Theatres in Australia are now adopting a policy of reconstruction, following the liquidation of Union Theatres, Ltd., and the formation of Greater Union. To this end, Australasian Films has gone into receivership, and the directors of Spencer's Pictures, Ltd., have circularized shareholders proposing voluntary liquidation.

Out of the receivership and liquidation of Australasian Films has been created General Theatre Supplies, Ltd., which purchased the supply business of the old company some time ago; British Empire Films, Ltd., representing the distribution organization and Cinesound Productions, Ltd., being the producing unit of the old Australasian Films.

The liquidation is proposed because Spencer's Pictures, Ltd., holds no assets other than shares in Greater Union Theatres. In order that the shareholders of Spencer's shall become direct holders in Greater U. T., instead of through Spencer's, it is proposed that the Greater Union shares held by Spencer's should be allocated direct, in proportion, to holders of Spencer's stock.

HINT OF CLOSING N. S. W. HOUSES ALARMS INDUSTRY IN AUSTRALIA

Commonwealth Seeks State's Taxation Funds to Wipe Out Debt, but State Resists Payment; Industry Leaders Called

Exhibitors, Completely in Dark, Pay Dues in Usual Way, Money Going to Commonwealth; Several Possible Solutions of Crisis

by CLIFF HOLT
Sydney Correspondent

The industry in Australia is plainly alarmed at the suggestion that all places of amusement in New South Wales will be forcibly closed for an indefinite period by the N.S.W. Government.

The possibility is a direct result of the Financial Agreements Enforcement Act, a measure designed by the Commonwealth Government to extract from the state sufficient taxation money to wipe off the state's indebtedness to the commonwealth, a matter of approximately $10,000,000. Included in the N.S.W. taxation funds the commonwealth is endeavoring to obtain is the entertainment tax, and, as with the other sources of revenue, the state is resisting payment. But for refusal to pay, the state is leaving itself open to heavy fines under the act, and as far as amusement money is concerned the one sure method of thwarting the commonwealth's efforts to obtain it is to close down those places which supply it. The state has the power to take this extreme action. It simply would have to cancel all theatre licenses, and the Commonwealth Government would be powerless to reissue them.

While it is considered unlikely that the state government would actually cause a wholesale shutdown, merely to deprive the commonwealth of its dues without gain to itself, the danger is still there, and the industry is wasting no time in preparing for a crisis should it arise.

Amusement Interests Called

A meeting of all sections of the amusement business has been called, and an attempt will be made to define the industry's best line of action. At this stage it is regarded as imperative that closure must be avoided, no matter what happens. That's all very well; but if the state issues an order for an immediate shutdown, if state tax is paid to the commonwealth under the act, where does the theatre proprietor stand? If he pays, as the law demands, he will find his theatre of a sudden forcibly closed. If he refuses to pay, in order to keep his business in operation, he will be liable to fines. The position is unprecedented, and requires careful treatment.

The general conference will probably decide that its most important duty is to discover exactly what the state government proposes to do. Should a reply be given that no attempt will be made to cancel licenses, the exhibitor's course of action is clear. He must pay amusement taxation accruing from his theatre as the law demands—to the commonwealth. On the other hand, should the state threaten a wholesale closure if proprietors pay their tax away from the state, the exhibitor will have a knotty problem to solve.

There are possible outlets. As N.S.W. amusement taxation is of a comparatively insignificant amount, the commonwealth may be prepared to forego it rather than throw hundreds of people out of work. Such an act would, of course, be tantamount to a surrender to the state government, but at least it would avoid the revolution of an important industry. The other outlet is that exhibitors must obtain some guarantee of protection from the state, and then risk the commonwealth's fines by continuing to operate while paying amusement taxation contrary to the law. Whatever happens, theatres must be kept open.

At the present time, exhibitors are completely in the dark and, in the absence of better advice, are lodging their taxation dues in the usual way; that is, the money lodged by them is going to the commonwealth. They are in an unenviable position. At any moment the state government may bring about the crisis. And then what?

Newsreel Industry Makes Big Strides

Within the last twelve months the Australian newsreel industry has made a tremendous stride forward; and although overseas producers may not like to hear it, it is true that in Australia the local editions are far more favorably received than anything foreign countries have been able to send us.

The business of producing pictorial news items, always more or less in the limelight, attained headlining status subsequent to the opening of the Sydney harbor bridge at Easter time. Looked upon from the start as representing the greatest opportunity local newsreel producers had been given in their comparatively short history, the value of the bridge celebrations as screen news was magnified enormously by the sensational occurrence which is now famous here as the "De Groot incident." It will be recalled that Captain De Groot, an officer of the British Army and an official of the organization known as the New Guard (an organization of some thousands whose views are directly opposed to those of their government) galloped down the bridge just prior to the official opening, and, drawing his sword, slashed the ribbon which was waiting to be officially severed by the N.S.W. premier, J. T. Lang. The incident is linked in Australia to the tipping of the tea in Boston harbor in the days when America was fighting for her independence.

Cameramen Get Coverage

Already posted at vantage points on the bridge, the newsreel cameramen scooped practically the whole affair. Within a few hours the film was being run through city projectors, and by night about 60 Sydney suburban theatres were running the special as the featured item on the bill. Airplanes and cars were commissioned to transport this greatest scoop of all throughout the commonwealth; and then on the Monday (two days after the incident had occurred) came one of those things which make the life of the cameraman verily a hard road to hoe. All De Groot films were barred from exhibition in N.S.W.

A few hours later hope again was revived. Officialdom decided that there was nothing wrong with them and the ban was lifted. But not for long; two days elapsed and the ban was reimposed, not for the whole of Australia or overseas, but for N.S.W. only. The money lost to exhibitors of N.S.W. and to those in charge of the newsreel units could scarcely be even estimated.

Illustrates Political Interference

The banning of the De Groot films graphically illustrates the extent to which politics has entered motion picture censorship, and it emphasizes the grossly unfair fact that while newspapers are given free speech on all matters, while they are freely permitted to paint horrible pen-pictures of any sex-motivated murder, the screen is muffled just as soon as it obtains actual pictures of an occurrence which the public is eager to see but are not altogether in complete accordance with the policy of the government in power. Perhaps, some day, the motion picture industry will be given a reasonable chance of maintaining its existence free of political whims, and political prejudice. Some day!

Making Progress In Feature Field

Australia is not only progressing with the newsreel, but is also making quite an amount of headway in the feature field. Efftee Film, the principal producing concern of this country, has released its second program, consisting of "The Sentimental Bloke" and a group of excellently made shorts. Opening in Melbourne first, "The Bloke" has attracted business that not only surprised the company itself, but has also absolutely astounded the skeptics. And evidently this terrific business is no mere flash in the pan. Seven sessions a day are being run, and it's been capacity at every one of them for a fortnight. That the program will repeat its city success in the country can be regarded as a foregone conclusion, more especially if a line is taken on the success that has attended Efftee's first offering in the sticks. The latter, featuring "Diggers," has been a veritable cleanup, and there is little doubt but that it and "The Sentimental Bloke" will gross as much Australian money as any imported picture for 1932.

It will be interesting to see how the Efftee product fares overseas.

BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS FOR THE MONTH OF JUNE

WITH six so-called box office champions to choose, June found only four positions for them, yet insisted that those positions be occupied by eleven productions. This complex mathematical absurdity is accounted for by the fact that three pictures tied for second place, and six for fourth place. This is the first time since the inauguration of the monthly "champions" that more than seven productions have been listed.

Down to Earth

(Fox)

Comedy

Plaster the name of Will Rogers every place from marquee to snipe sheets and be sure that your patrons know the days that "Down to Earth" will play at your theatre.

It's Rogers in a picture that has for its theme a subject on which he has spread himself in newspaper and magazine articles, as well as over the radio—the depression. It portrays some of the things which brought on the period and illustrates the means which Will adopted to bring himself and his family back to normal.

"Down to Earth" is chock full of laughter. Besides the mirth-provoking lines written into the script by Homer Croy and Edwin Burke, Will does plenty of his own inimitable ad-libbing. Yet while the picture is essentially comedy, an element of drama is cleverly woven in. Dealing with one of those inside stories of the ordinary middle-class family which prosperity had caused to adopt all kinds of fancy money spending ideas, "Down to Earth" tells a story that is familiar to all.

There is a strong supporting cast worthy of a good play.

The story differs quite a bit from the usual Rogers style. Heretofore, he has majored in "kidding" things. In "Down to Earth" there's a load of whimsical seriousness.

The picture has plenty of human interest, as the wife (Irene Rich) tries to keep up with her high society neighbors, while the husband's business is being swept from under his feet. There's quite a bit of drama as Will delivers an oration to the guests at a grand ball held in his house in honor of the Grand Duke of Russia. There's a little tragedy as the lovable old couple separate. Then humor combines with pathos as they are reunited "back in the little home on Cherokee Street" to celebrate their son's marriage.

In short, but two things are necessary:

To put "Down to Earth" over, exploit the name Will Rogers, plus the timely topic of how to beat the depression, with Rogers showing the way in action and dialogue.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by David Butler. Story by Homer Croy. Screen play and dialogue by Edwin Burke. Photographed by Ernest Palmer. Release date, September 4, 1932. Running time, 73 minutes.

Unashamed

(MGM)

Drama

This original for the screen by Bayard Veiller seems to be a picturization of an incident which actually occurred in Pennsylvania. Whether you can dig into the records and capitalize on the case is something for you to determine.

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

At any rate, MGM has mounted this in its usual fine style and provided you with enough selling angles to make the prospective customers almost forget that they are fed up on murders and court rooms. They even spare you the scene of the jury's verdict by showing the crowds leaving the court room commenting on the fact that that the defendant has been acquitted.

The title is in that class where care and good judgment must be exercised, depending on the theatre, the location and the type of patronage drawn upon. In some sections you may be able to take that title and build up plenty of interest via the actual theme, but in others you may have to sell away from it direct in order to avoid adverse comment from those who would find fault with your selling angles.

You can add to whatever strength the title possesses such selling names as Helen Twelvetrees, Lewis Stone, Jean Hersholt, Robert Warwick (a grand actor) and Robert Young, a youthful type who soon is going to rate star billing. The girls ought to be going for him in a big way.

Audience reaction is excellent. Miss Twelvetrees gives a human and capable characterization of the young sister, and despite her foolish love for the villain (yep, you have one in the person of Monroe Owsley), wins the audience's sympathy to a limited extent. As the story works out, it leaves her holding the bag, as it were, and the important honors go to Bob Young and Lewis Stone.

Treat this one with care; back it up with a campaign that fits the clientele of your theatre; but don't play it on kid days or Sundays.—Lewis, New York.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Directed by Harry Beaumont. Original screen play by Bayard Veiller. Photographed by Norbert Brodine. Film editor, William S. Gray. Release date, July 2, 1932. Running time, 77 minutes.

The First Year

(Fox)

Comedy Drama

Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell in a beautiful adaptation of a popular stage play, "The First Year," should be a box office mop-up.

The supporting cast includes Maude Eburne, Robert McWade, George Meeker, Mina Gombel, Dudley Digges and Leila Bennett, but attention should be concentrated upon Gaynor and Farrell. William K. Howard has masterfully handled Frank Craven's story and Lynn Starling's scenario.

Besides possessing the elements that patrons look for in good entertainment, "The First Year" has touches that are decidedly novel.

While the detail of the story is essentially dramatic, comedy is the highlight. Not the slapstick kind, but the sweet, pleasing type that is the result of the dramatic sequences not being so tragic after all. There's the bashful but ambitious young real estate man who is going to make plenty of money and does. There's the fascinating little small town girl who wants to travel to New York, London, Paris. And there's the wise guy young civil engineer—always going to be a big shot, but blowing up.

No need to tell you further that you have a "natural" in "The First Year." The bigger first run houses will splurge on it, and the smaller houses will reap the benefit of all the excitement kicked up.

It is recommended for all kinds of audiences.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Back Street

(Universal)

Dramatic Romance

This true to life dramatic romance, well acted and expertly directed, is going to require extraordinary showmanship to sell it to the full extent of its scope.

While it is somewhat similar to such pictures as "The Sin of Madelon Claudet" and "Forbidden," it is vastly different in development. It is always close to the heart from the time that Walter Saxel meets Ray Schmidt in Cincinnati in the "gay nineties," until their romance reaches its climax in Paris in 1932. Although the cast is large, the plot centers around Irene Dunne and John Boles. Others in the cast except George Meeker and William Bakewell are incidental, yet each is effective.

"Back Street" is a big picture, not one that you can bill and sell as an electrifying sensation, rather one that is a faithful portrayal of a lifetime of love which must be lived in secret.

Maybe that portion of your audience that looks for a lot of hip-hip-hoorah in its entertainment will not find it appealing, but to those who are more intellectual, who can be entertained and at the same time do a little thinking, "Back Street" should be a treat. Make that thought the underlying basis of your campaign.

Sell this picture as a high priced attraction. You don't have to specialize. There is plenty of meat for both sexes from the adolescents to the oldest. By the same token, "Back Street" is not a children's picture. It probably will be over the heads of lots of grownups and it certainly is too deep for any child.

Naturally the names of Irene Dunne and John Boles will dominate, but get in your catchline the idea of a romance that endured for a lifetime. While he married, had children, had the respect of the social and business world, she sacrificed everything for the stolen moments of happiness when he came to her.

"Back Street" must be sold with dignity. It should not be cheapened by thoughtless exploitation that smacks of back street atmosphere. Don't try to work any heedless gags around "Back Street."—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by John M. Stahl. From the novel by Fannie Hurst. Screen play by Gladys Lehman. Dialogue by Lynn Starling. Photographed by Karl Freund. Release date, Sept. 10, 1932. Running time, 84 minutes.

The Man Called Back

(Tiffany)

Drama

The rejuvenation of a man forms the most important selling theme in this picture, and when that man is Conrad Nagel, and when an accidental death which looks much like murder becomes part of the plot construction, there is something for the exhibitor to sell. Though this is hardly an extraordinary film in any sense, it nevertheless is possessed of interest and suspense, good performances and names and has been done with intelligence, in story, direction and performance.

There is no lack of good substantial name value in the cast, which includes Doris Kenyon, John Halliday, Juliette Compton, Reginald Owen, Mae Busch, among others. The story opens on an island in the South Seas, with Nagel, as a dissolute but once famous surgeon, who starts on the trail back when he meets and treats Miss Kenyon. The picture shifts to London, where it remains, with Nagel returning to a lucrative practice when Millionaire Halliday, whom Nagel had saved in the South Seas, pays his debt by "putting him over."

Halliday happens to be the fast-living husband of disillusioned Miss Kenyon, which strengthens the story definitely. When Halliday is found dead in bed, Miss Kenyon is accused, through the effort of Miss Compton, mistress of Halliday. While this is rather unexpected, it builds new backbone into the structure. The English courtroom scenes are well done and appear authentic. Owen adds the occasional spot of comedy as the osteopath, with an exaggerated "stupid Englishman" manner which makes effective the well-spaced lighter moments.

The title is well chosen, since it conveys the theme excellently, is possessed of real punch and can make a particularly strong line in the advertising campaign, especially when it is closely tied with Conrad Nagel.

The exhibitor may well promise satisfactory entertainment, an interesting and well told story with reasonable assurance that his audience will agree. Strike the angle of the famed doctor who, as the result of the influence of a woman, "comes back" and "stays back." That theme, of course, is not exactly new, but it is substantial, always reliable, and in this case, has story, performance and complication to fortify it.—Aaronson, New York.

Radio Patrol

(Universal)

Drama

The title, because of its connection with police activities of recent months with radio patrol cars, can be made to fit into a most interesting campaign. You have no worthwhile names to sell along with it unless Robert Armstrong and Lila Lee spell activity at your box office.

Audience value is weak. There's too much shooting to make the picture advisable for children, and the same is true for the cop who is taking graft. His being killed at the finish did not seem to redeem him in our eyes, because the gun-battle in which he meets his death could have been prevented by him in the first place if he had not cooperated with the crooks. Such situations, as a rule, do not elicit audience appeal and will never help make a picture go over.

Summing up, you have the title and police background to suggest ways and means of bringing them to your box office.—Lewis, New York.

The Vanishing Frontier

(Paramount)

Historical Romance

Don't make the mistake of considering "The Vanishing Frontier" a "western." Rather, it is historical romance that has for its underlying theme one of the most stirring chapters of American history—the days when the state of California passed from the sovereignty of Mexico to a place under the American flag.

There's an interesting plot; a cast with good box office names and well directed; plenty of action; a romance that is audacious in its disregard for personal safety; with comedy supplied by Zasu Pitts, J. Farrell Macdonald and Raymond Hatton.

Johnny Mack Brown displays some of the fire and dash that has always been expected of him and you can sell him to your patrons safe in the knowledge that his work will live up to your promise.

It's clean and wholesome. Sex is absent, but romance is always vividly present. While photography and unusual scenery seldom are ticket selling assets, "The Vanishing Frontier" is a good looking picture, with beautiful outdoor scenery, well filmed, taking advantage of lights and shadows.

There are plenty of selling angles. Of course, if you play it later on in the season when schools are open again, you can look for all sorts of cooperation from them. It's a pictorial lesson in American history, illustrating the era in California when confiscation of property was the reward of the old Spanish settlers who hesitated to take the oath of allegiance to the United States. It depicts the methods adopted by the Spanish leaders, personified by Johnny Mack Brown, to end the military rule and bring about the introduction of civil law.

"The Vanishing Frontier" can be finely exploited along the lines generally used in "Cimarron" and "The Big Trail."—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced by Larry Darmour. Distributed by Paramount. Directed by Phil Rosen. Story and screen play by Stuart Anthony. Settings by Frank Dexter. Photography by James S. Brown. Incidental music by Lee Zahler. Release date, July 29, 1932. Running time, 70 minutes.

Freaks

(MGM)

Drama

If "Freaks" has caused a furore in certain censor circles the fault lies with the manner in which it was campaigned to the public. I found it to be an interesting and entertaining picture, and I did not have nightmares, nor did I attempt to murder any of my relatives.

It is quite unfair to the production to brand it as gruesome. If the picture has met adverse comment in any community that reaction can be traced back to the type of exploitation used ahead of the showing.

It is not necessary, or advisable, to present the picture as a gruesome shudder-film. In the first place, "Freaks" does not warrant that kind of billing. In the second, it is decidedly open to question whether your public will be intrigued by such exploiting.

Inform them that you have a picture that is real entertainment, with thrills. Excite their curiosity in the unusual, but do not attempt to cram a diet of shudders down their throat. The chances are that they don't want them, any way, and that you'll be treating both your prospective patrons and your box office to indigestion if you do. Handled in proper form, your campaign should bring them in and leave them willing to tell their friends they'll enjoy it.

The cast includes such names as Olga Baclanova, Wallace Ford, Leila Hyams and Roscoe Ates, the stutter-star, but your campaign lies in the promise of telling them the inside of the sideshow business.—Lewis, New York.

The Boiling Point

(Allied Pictures)

Western

Of all the recent Hoot Gibson efforts, "The Boiling Point" is undoubtedly the best. In directing the picture, George Melford departed radically from the customary standards of Westerns and introduced enough novelty in characters and sequences to give hard-bitten admirers of rugged outdoor action pictures some thrilling entertainment.

The story concerns a cowboy who can't control his temper. He usually wins in the brawls, but causes himself no end of trouble. He is put on probation to keep his temper for 30 days. Occasions are many when he reaches the boiling point. He suffers the ridicule of his pals, who call him a coward. The girl makes him her personal maid. Hoot bears everything until it looks as if the heavy is going to walk off with the girl. Then he explodes and a fight discloses the villain as the master mind of a gang of cattle rustlers and slick crooks.

Hoot Gibson naturally is your big selling angle. Yet the others of the cast turn in performances that will please the fans, with Wheeler Oakman, Helen Foster and Billy Bletcher outstanding. The title is good for all sorts of exploitation development—from advance teasers up to special ballyhoos.

Realize that you have a different kind of a Western, one in which the old outdoor standbys are welded to a lot that is novel. Get the idea over to your patrons that "The Boiling Point" is pleasingly different.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Allied. Directed by George Melford. Story by Donald W. Lee. Photographed by Harry Neumann and Tom Galligan. Edited by Mildred Johnston. Running time, 70 minutes.

The Widow in Scarlet

(Mayfair)

Drama

There is reasonably satisfactory entertainment in this independent product, though it is not in any way unusual. The cast contains several names which may well be reckoned of box office or marquee value to the exhibitor in the lesser situation, though the names and the film itself are hardly of the caliber warranting first run or major situation showing.

The title has drawing possibilities, but unfortunately the individual who is therein mentioned is nothing more than a name in the story. Though Dorothy Revier, husband-hunting divorcee, is at first mistaken for the "widow in scarlet," there is no further connection of plot incident with the title. For that reason it might be well not to emphasize it too strongly, avoiding possible adverse audience reaction.

Beside Miss Revier, there are Kenneth Harlan, Lloyd Whitlock, Glenn Tryon, Myrtle Stedman, all dependable, all capable to an extent, and all possessing possible name value to the smaller audience.

You have here complications involving a group of crooks, a wealthy owner of a valuable necklace, the flighty divorcee who wagers heavily that she can steal the necklace. The police make ineffectual attempts to guard it, and the crooks, headed by Lloyd Whitlock, are more successful until Miss Revier, bent on her own theft, spoils their play and wins for herself a husband, Harlan, and the necklace.

The film contains a fair proportion of action, interspersed with drawing room sequences, serving as interludes between the significant and more active spots. Sell this as a fairly entertaining, fairly interesting dramatic effort, not promising too much. The audience should not be disappointed.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Mayfair. Directed by George B. Seitz. Story and continuity by Norman Battle. Photographed by Jules Cronjager. Edited by Byron Robinson. Release date, July 1, 1932. Running time, 58 minutes.

Condemned to Death

(First Division)

Mystery

Here is well-sustained mystery, with the complication of several murders of strange origin thrown in to add to the pace of the product and provide a thrill or two. The most serious obstacle to selling the picture to best results is the fact that the cast is completely English, the picture having been made by Gainesborough, English producer. The name value, therefore, for selling purposes is cut considerably, although two names may carry some weight. In the lead is Arthur Wontner, well known and excellent English actor, who recently played Sherlock Holmes in several English pictures; and Gordon Harker, the often-seen sinister appearing butler, is in this case a crook, and in fine style. The other cast names will mean nothing to the American audience.

Where there is any audience objection to the use of the pronounced English accent in the dialogue, this factor may have some effect on audience enjoyment, though in reality it does not detract in the slightest degree from the fast-moving entertainment value of the film. The title is in keeping with the story, and may well be used to good advantage.

The mystery angle, which is by far the best selling point for the exhibitor, centers about the identity of the perpetrator of a series of stabbing murders among the prosecutor, judge and chief witnesses at the trial of a certain murderer, who at the beginning of the film, in an effective scene, is sentenced to be hanged. Scotland Yard works on the case, with the detective captain in love with the niece of the judge who presided at the trial. The best catchline to be used in selling the picture is the large sized and well-emphasized question mark: who is Jack O'Lantern? The latter is the name by which the police know the murderer.

The suspense is good, the mystery sustained, and suspicion readily falls upon any one of several persons. The exhibitor may be reasonably certain that his audience will feel satisfied with their entertainment on this film, considering, of course, those factors of accent and unfamiliar English cast.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced by Gainsborough. Distributed by First Division. Directed by Walter Forde. From the play, "Jack O'Lantern," by George Goodchild. Release date, September 15, 1932. Running time, 65 minutes.

SHORTS

The Queen Was in the Parlor

(Vitaphone)

Clever

Clever in idea and amusing in execution, this animated number of the Merrie Melodies cartoon series should be especially amusing to children, and the child in every adult will likewise react with enjoyment. The animated knight battles the dragon and subdues him, rescuing the fair damsel, while bits of nursery rhymes of Old King Cole and the queen in the parlor are amusing.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Cock-Eyed Animal World

(Principal)

Interesting

Interesting and possessed of a wide general appeal is this rather lengthy subject in the nature of a travelogue, wherein Carveth Wells, noted English explorer, takes his audience, via accompanying descriptive narrative, on a circuit of Australia. Initial sequences are concerned with the sights and conditions of the large metropolitan centers of the continent. Sydney, Melbourne, Perth are in turn visited. The succeeding reels of the film picture the lives and habits of the aborigines of the interior, with much interesting footage given to the several varieties of animal life, common to Australia, but most unusual in other parts of the world. A good subject.—Running time, 35 minutes.

Making Good

(Universal)

Amusing

This number of the "Oswald, Lucky Rabbit" cartoon series has its fair share of cleverness and amusement. The animated rabbit saves the old woman in the shoe from an embarrassment of riches via the stork in funny fashion. Accompanying melodies are threaded in neatly, and the whole will delight the youngsters and amuse the adults.—Running time, 7 minutes.

His Royal Shyness

Good Comedy

Real amusement and a fair number of laughs are features of this one-man comedy, built around Andy Clyde, one of Mack Sennett's ace comedians. Andy, doughboy lost on the battlefield, is shanghaied into the king's job, when the real king, who bears a striking resemblance to Clyde (he should), is carried away by conspirators. The palace is besieged by the hungry populace, while the villains attempt to do away with the fictitious king. Andy amusingly succeeds in vanquishing his enemies, then suddenly wakes from the nightmare and makes ready to march in the Armistice Day parade.—Running time, 21 minutes.

A Regular Trouper

(Vitaphone)

Ruth Etting Sings

A dramatic sketch, with Miss Etting the star performer in a traveling show, forms the background in this instance for the rendition of several popular numbers by the stage and radio singer. To impart a touch of drama, Miss Etting's sister steals her fiance, the show's manager, and the star goes on for the big night, putting her ballad over with a real incentive. For those who like Miss Etting and her voice, this makes a rather entertaining subject.—Running time, 19 minutes.

The Mad King

Novel, Amusing

Unusual and cleverly amusing is this number of the Terry-Toons, in which the animated Cat-King is stormed in his castle by a horde of infuriated mice under the leadership of the rebel-mouse. As the king teases his fair little animated captive in the dungeon, the attackers break down the doors. The king is knocked out in a prize fight, the fair maid is rescued. The youngsters will enjoy it immensely.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Movie Album Thrills

(Vitaphone)

Highly Amusing

Unusually amusing are these shots from the product of the motion picture's early days. They seem to draw more spontaneous laughter, supply readier enjoyment to theatre audiences than perhaps any other type of short subject on the lists. In this particular set, Marie Dressler, in a much less recent day, cavorts amusingly, while a sequence or two of the earliest western thrillers is delightfully humorous today. The running fire of descriptive and burlesquing comment adds to the effectiveness of the humor.—Running time, 10 minutes.

THE NEWEST PICTURES

15,000 Mass To See Luminaries At "Strange Interlude" Opening; Several New Films Interesting

By LEO MEEHAN, Hollywood

Hollywood Staff Correspondent

Metro's production of "Strange Interlude" is naturally the topic of the week in Hollywood, having been premiered with the usual fanfare at the Chinese theatre Friday evening. If you think the public has lost interest in pictures or in picture personalities, consider the fact that here in Hollywood, where people are accustomed to seeing stars, more than 25,000 gathered in the street to see the film luminaries arrive. Three hundred police reserves were unable to keep them in control. It came near being a riot, all to try and get a glimpse of a famous screen personality. When Clark Gable's car was being driven through the narrow lane kept open by the police, so many people jumped on the running boards that they broke down under the weight. Someone smashed one pane of glass so he could reach through and shake Gable's hand! Yes, the films and film people still interest the public.

"Strange Interlude" is a very unusual production. In it people speak their thoughts as well as their dialogue. This is cleverly done by pantomime while a special sound track, made later, recites the thoughts. Norma Shearer gives the most outstanding performance of her career. Other magnificent efforts are made by Clark Gable, Alexander Kirkland, Ralph Morgan and May Robson. Robert Z. Leonard directed superbly. Irrespective of its box office values, it is certain to be one of the most talked-of pictures of the year.

Several other interesting pictures were previewed in the week. In "Down to Earth" Will Rogers does a sort of sequel to "They Had to See Paris." In the last-named you will recall Bill struck it rich. In the new one the old stock market panic hits him and he and his family have to give up their luxury and return to the modest estate of former days. It gives Rogers plenty of opportunity for expounding homely philosophy and being just the "Down to Earth" character he is. It is the best of the Rogers shows for some time, in the opinion of those who've seen it.

Fox also is previewing "The First Year," made from Frank Craven's big stage success, and starring Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell. It deals with the trials and tribulations of a young couple during the first year of their married bliss (?) and is very amusing. It's excellent Gaynor-Farrell stuff.

"Back Street," from Universal, is an expurgated screen treatment of a Fannie Hurst novel which was considerably talked about. It brings back Irene Dunne in her very finest performance since "Cimarron." John Boles plays opposite her in a character similar to the one he played in "Seed." It is a story of a woman sacrificing everything—career, honor, future—for a man she loved, a man with a wife and family. It's pretty heavy, and not especially pleasant, but well done.

"Old Dark House" features Boris Karloff in a Frankenstein type of brute, and is made for spinal stimulation and gooseflesh production. The principals, who include Melvyn Douglas, get into a house full of lunatics, and there is plenty of excitement. Universal has made a specialty of these shockers, and this is true to the brand.

"Age of Consent" is one of the surprise pictures of the week. Geogory La Cava, Radio director, has gathered a delightful bunch of youngsters, put them into a collegiate atmosphere, and turned out a picture which is full of laughs and unexpected melodrama. There are no names to sell it, but if exhibitors will give it the once-over, they will find it has real entertainment value.

Bishop Cannon Strikes at Films as "Social Menace"

Condemning films as a "social menace," Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, terms them "subtle and flagrant violations of good taste and morals," in the annual report of the board of temperance, issued at Richmond. The bishop is president of the board and is reputed to be the author of the paper.

The report says in part:

"We regret that two federal bills for control of films at the point of production, for the correction of the evil of block booking, and the exporting of films calculated to give false impressions to foreign countries of American customs and attitude toward other nations have so far failed of passage, and we urge that favorable action be speedily taken by congress."

Warner and Paramount Working on a New Deal

Warner-First National announces negotiations for a "new ticket" for the showing of its product throughout the entire Publix national circuit. The new deal calls for the cancelling of existing franchises under which these companies have been functioning. Arrangements are being worked out by Sam Dembow, representing the Publix organization, and Major Albert Warner, A. W. Smith and Grad Sears, acting for Warner-First National.

Warner and Publix closed a deal on Wednesday whereby Vitaphone trailers will be used exclusively for all Warner and First National product in Publix houses on the current season's schedule.

Henabery and Hayman Form Independent Producing Film

Joseph Henabery, former Warner director, and Herbert Hayman, at one time Vitaphone casting director, have formed an independent producing company, known as Summit Pictures Corporation, with offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

Production will be carried on at the Coast. H. William Fitelson has been retained as counsel. The company plans eight films for the 1932-33 season, to be released on the state right market.

Allied Plans 26 Features During 1932-33 Season

Allied Pictures Corporation, of which M. H. Hoffman is president, plans 26 feature productions for the 1932-33 season. Four are specials, eight will feature Hoot Gibson, four with Monte Blue, six "Stage Classics," four "Classay" melodramas.

The specials are "Davey Jones' Locker," "Red Kisses," "Three Castles," "Slightly Used." The two Gibson specials so far titled are "A Man's Land," "The Boiling Point." The Monte Blue features include "The Stoker," "The Valley of Adventure," "The Intruder," "The Nestors." The "Stage Classics" are: "Vanity Fair of Today," "File No. 113," "Unholy Love," "A Parisian Romance," "Anna Karenina," "The Iron Master." The tentative titles for the four "Classay" melodramas are: "The Midnight Alarm," "The Cop," "Beyond the Law," "Dizzy Dames."

Allied has closed a contract with Mascot Pictures Corporation of Portland and Seattle for the distribution of the entire product of Allied in the territory comprising Washington, Oregon, Montana and Northern Idaho.

Hays Supported On Advertising

Will H. Hays was sustained this week by the executive committee of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, at a New York session in which consideration was given the threat of dismissal for writers of objectionable advertising copy.

Mr. Hays, while on the Coast recently, declared that all employees responsible for the preparation or dissemination of offensive advertising would be subject to dismissal. He also said that exhibitors making use of such advertising material would be denied industry support.

Members of the executive committee who supported Mr. Hays in his declaration were Adolph Zukor, Merlin H. Aylesworth, Harry Warner, R. H. Cochrane, Nicholas Schenck and Hiram Brown.

Publicity and advertising men representing nearly all major companies pledged themselves to guard against objectionable material in all future copy, at a meeting called by Mr. Hays at MPPDA headquarters on Tuesday.

FAMILY PICTURES

"Bring 'Em Back Alive," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Congorilla," "Igloo," "Tom Brown of Culver"

RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THE most discussed single topic among the Film Councils, club groups and national committees pertinently interested in the motion picture's relationship to the community, has been the family audience picture. Here is an open question on which there has been much surprising diversity of opinion. The theatre manager should throw his hat into the ring at this stage of the game. What do you think is the type of picture that falls properly into this classification? "What constitutes a family audience picture as you would interpret it for your patrons?

MOTION PICTURE HERALD has been very seriously interested in this topic. In these columns and in other departments, analyses of pictures have been printed as helps to the exhibitor. But there have been many opinions. The National Board of Review, representing as it does a highly intelligent cross section of national viewpoint, believes that sophisticated pictures may be written in as family audience entertainment. Highly organized local groups such as those functioning in Macon, Georgia; Rutherford, New Jersey; New Rochelle, New York; Los Angeles, California, are interested in listing the exotic for adults and the simpler commonplaces of everyday living with the poignant high lights of tragedy and comedy, travel and news, and decent simplicities for the family audience.

This subject tempts us to go a step further. In the near future these columns will bring to you the viewpoint of leading educators, authors, club women and other public citizens. These must be balanced against the experience of the producer and the exhibitor. The subject is rich in interest, for, after all, the very lifeblood of the motion picture theatre is the family group attending the show. Junior Shows have their place. Children's matinees are worth while even when they are not highly remunerative. They are builders of goodwill. But box office success is more definitely assured when the feature may be advertised as suitable for the entire family.

SUMMER SUCCESSES

Preference Polls, concerted convention voices and an avalanche of mail have made it quite clear that in this year there is a high note of demand for clean, simple pictures. The adventure films have won a preponderant acclaim; mystery stories have run them a close second. Comedy, music and travel have found their way to the top of the list. It is rather astonishing how small the written vote has been for sex, sophistication and the boudoir. Box office returns on the adventure pictures prove that the weather vane is pointing in the right direction. It looks as if the wind is blowing a normal, steady, more equable southwester.

The larger companies, quick to recognize public reactions, have accomplished a program of current releases of outstanding value. These, properly exploited, are important assets in the hands of any intelligent exhibitor. In the summer months that are usually lean, we have in this year of especial financial leanness, a gala display of worthwhile things. Here are some definitely important new releases:

Bring 'Em Back Alive

Van Beuren; Released by RKO Radio

The past two years have given us some authentic and thrilling jungle pictures. We have had "Chang," and "Simba." Then very importantly, we had "Trader Horn." These pictures, we are told, were true reproductions of photographed life in the darkest jungles of the world. This year, Metro gave us "Tarzan, the Ape Man," and was entirely candid in saying that the best jungle scenes were made in Hollywood. Oddly enough, "Tarzan" outdid the others in thrills and realistic beauty. In "Bring 'Em Back Alive," however, we have a new variety of thriller. This picture, directed by Clyde Elliott, featuring Frank Buck, differs from those that came before because the hardy adventurer did not seek to kill his animals, but was interested in bringing them back alive and in good condition to the zoos of the nation. He had taken good sound equipment apparatus with him into the wilderness. The picture is a truthfully recorded sound story of the jungles, its calls of birds, clash of beasts, roar and rush of waterfalls and intimate small sounds that only the jungle knows.

The sequences are accompanied by a running interpretation by Mr. Buck. He has found in his animals the humor, the selfishness, the social climbing and the wickedness that is duplicated in the human family. "Bring 'Em Back Alive" is entertainment. It is a contribution to the family audience.

Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm

Fox Films

The name of this picture is enough to sell it to all family groups. Rebecca has a classic background. She stands for normalcy, sweetness and the good that is accomplished through unselfishness. One would know instinctively that "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" was a fitting picture for young people. The film has fulfilled the tradition of the book. It has hewed its lines closely to the ideal of the story. Rebecca, the product of a big family, meets all with whom she comes in contact with a disarming and naive simplicity that destroys tawdriness. The motion picture version of the well known story has moments of fine humor, real beauty and important characterization. If there are other moments where one might wish that the director or the sound synchronizers had tempered their art a little, these instances are few enough to be set aside. Here is a clean, wholesome, pretty story with enough of action and suspense to give any picturegoer an evening of acceptable entertainment. Marion Nixon is Rebecca. She interprets the character truthfully, although she is a little old to have been cast for the part. We believe that "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" will find its way to a distinguished rating among the family audience pictures of the current season.

Fox Films

Fox has a second production to its credit in the photographed record of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson's latest expedition into the Belgium Congo. Martin Johnson is not an amateur in Africa. He has brought back other important documents of his exciting trips. "Congorilla" bears the earmarks of an added professional experience. Splendidly photographed and with natural sound effects, we have a new story of the zebra, the giraffe and the gazelle. Mr. Buck shows us the lion as the master villain in devastating conquest, and the wild dogs who will not permit the king of beasts to have his feast in peace. There are charging rhinos, elephants seeking water at the base of a falls, crocodiles sliding in and out of shadowed waters and back, and behind all of this always the almost human gorilla, playful, scheming, wicked and as gentle as any human creature could be.

This picture reaches heights of actual beauty with its millions of flamingoes on tinted waters, with its rhythm of barbaric dance and music.

"Congorilla" is important—as everything that Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson have done is valuable as a permanent record. It brings enough of the dramatic action, thrill and unusual charm to make it a strong box office attraction. It was edited by Truman Talley, who is also the executive head of the Fox newsreel organization.

Universal

Desperate weeks in a storm-bound Eskimo village, where the small round igloos seem to be obliterated by wind-driven snow, provide the time element in an impressive picture of the bitter North as we have rarely seen it. This is another type of adventure story, strung on the thread of romance wherein the great hunter of one tribe seeks his bride from the maidens of another village. The incredible wilderness of the North spreads out behind the action of this story, which tells the recurring tragedies of these hardy people whose lives are determined by their quest for food. Whale, walrus, seal become the very gods of their existence. When the wind bears down on them from a farther north, bringing desolation with it, when the waters become completely frozen over and hunting for food is impossible, then tragedy stalks into the igloo of the heroic Eskimo. This film has moments of photographic grandeur in the breaking up of the ice pack with its floes pressing their way into the sea. It also has moments of Hollywood stagecraft where square cakes of ice, like neatly stacked cards, are dealt out with a too convenient aptness. Nevertheless the picture has moments of excitement as well as real beauty.

Tom Brown of Culver

Universal

Last year Universal gave us "The Spirit of Notre Dame." It was a great college picture that met with immediate acclaim. It also registered itself very convincingly at the box office. The success of the football story has encouraged Universal to produce a second important college picture. In "Tom Brown of Culver" we have an outstanding achievement which has merited the immediate approval and high rating of all previewing groups. It is the strong story of the keen American boy who has in his heart the enshrined ideal of a doctor father, reported killed in the war, who left him as a lone heritage the Congressional Medal of Honor. Too often the only thing in his pocket is the priceless medal which cannot buy him food. Through the loyalty of a former soldier, friend of his father, he is adopted by the American Legion and sent to Culver to learn something of army manliness and discipline. This story rises to a fine dramatic climax in the return of the shell-shocked father, who had not been killed, but had deserted.

"Tom Brown of Culver" is a picture to anticipate. It was not planned for young children. It appealed to a higher grade than that. All adults, and particularly the college and high school students, will find it fine entertainment. It is interesting to note that the most critical of the reviewing groups have placed this film in the Exceptional Class.

FILM CRITIC OF NEW YORK DAILY NEWS . . LARGEST CIRCULATING PAPER IN AMERICA..CANVASSES BROADWAY CROWDS!

Irene Thirer

BECOMES INQUIRING REPORTER FOR PARAMOUNT

Personally asks a hundred representatives of a million passers-by how anxious they are to see "Movie Crazy," "Blonde Venus," "Night After Night," "A Farewell to Arms," "Horse Feathers," "Big Broadcast," and "Love Me Tonight."

-and here are typical replies →

"WHEN WILL WE SEE QUERY OF ALL AGES, VALUE OF THE NEW

THE QUESTION ASKED BY MISS THIRER:
"Here's a list of the new group of Paramount Pictures. Look at the casts, titles and stories... what do you think of them?"

PEGGY KELLY
315 West 113th Street, New York
MODELING

● "They all look good, but some more than others. I always see Marx Brothers, Harold Lloyd, and Chevalier because I like comedy most. Harold in Hollywood should be very funny. I read 'Farewell to Arms' and think Helen Hayes, Gary Cooper, and Adolphe Menjou should be great. To see Clark Gable and Miriam Hopkins together in 'No Bed of Her Own,' which I read in the Daily News, is a real thrill. Herbert Marshall was very fine in a play I saw, and I expect he will be a star after being with Dietrich in 'Blonde Venus.' I will see all of these pictures."

EDWARD PALIDINO
433 Van Dwyer St., Stapleton, S. I.
PATROLMAN

● "I don't get a chance to see many pictures, but I listen to the radio a lot and want to see Bing Crosby, Boswell Sisters, Cab Calloway, Burns and Allen, Kate Smith and all the stars in 'Big Broadcast.' This interests me most, and next, 'Farewell to Arms' which I have heard is a very good book. I always try to see Harold Lloyd and the Marx Brothers. Yes, if I have an opportunity I want to see these pictures; they look very attractive. I'd like to say that there hasn't been a good police picture yet."

MRS. CAROLINE NEUMAN
2362 Seventh Ave., Astoria, L. I.
HOUSEWIFE

● "Chevalier easily heads the list for me, but I will say that I will not allow my husband to let me miss many of these pictures. After Chevalier I like Dietrich, and 'No Bed of Her Own' and 'Night After Night' look like the type of heavy dramas we both like. I do not care so much for comedy, but my husband does, and so I see them anyway. I imagine he will be tickled with 'Movie Crazy,' and 'Horse Feathers.' Incidentally, isn't Fredric March a Paramount star? Why isn't he cast in these pictures?"

MISS JULIE VOLPE
1809 Longfellow Av., Bronx, N. Y.
HAIRDRESSER

● "There are certainly a lot of big stars in those pictures—most of my favorites, in fact. When I go to the movies, I don't pay much attention to the title but if it's got a star I like, then I don't want to miss it. Chevalier's my weakness, and after him Clark Gable. I think Marlene Dietrich is the best looking girl on the screen and the best actress. 'Blonde Venus' sounds good but why don't they put her in a picture with Clark Gable some time? I sure want to see Mae West in 'Night After Night.' I like Nancy Carroll, too. 'No Bed of Her Own' ought to make a swell picture. I read it when it ran in the tabs."

● "Gang pictures kept me away from the movies for some time and I am glad to see that Paramount is putting real casts into love stories and comedy. My first choice is 'Blonde Venus,' because I think Dietrich is fine in any story and this sounds exceptionally good. I read 'Single Night' by Bromfield and suppose that is 'Night After Night.' Why do they change the titles in the movies? I haven't read 'Farewell to Arms' but always wanted to and will be satisfied to see the picture, especially with Gary Cooper, Helen Hayes, and Adolphe Menjou in the cast. I do want to see all of them, though."

AL ABRAMS

SALESMAN

● "I think they are fine merchandise which the public will want to buy. I guess most salesmen are good movie fans, and I feel confident that I will certainly not miss Harold Lloyd, the Marx Brothers, and Chevalier, because we all need laughs nowadays. 'No Bed of Her Own' sounds like a woman's picture, but 'Farewell to Arms' should appeal to everybody. I wasn't a Dietrich fan until I saw 'Shanghai Express' which changed my opinion, and I certainly want to see 'Blonde Venus.' They look good to me."

JAMES HEALY
539 West 144th St.,

PROPERTIES

● "The thing that attracts me most is Harold Lloyd. Why doesn't he make more pictures, and also the Marx Brothers? They seem so few and far between. I suppose that 'The Big Broadcast' will be shown at advanced prices, but I think this is a mistake because it doesn't matter how big the casts are, the public cannot afford to pay more these days. All of these pictures attract me and I have a feeling that they are going to be good shows by looking at the casts and titles."

MISS ETHEL KENT
164 West 44th St.,
New York
ARTIST

● "They all look mighty entertaining. I've been wondering when some movie producer would be smart enough to make 'Farewell to Arms.' Helen Hayes is perfect for the part of the nurse. There's my old friend, Harold Lloyd. Where's he been lately? I'll certainly want to see him in 'Movie Crazy.' My whole family are Marx Brothers fans but personally I like Lloyd's type of comedy better. Maybe you can tell me why a star as popular as Dietrich makes only a few pictures a year. 'Blonde Venus' is the first one I've seen advertised since 'Shanghai Express.' Guess I'll make a note of 'The Big Broadcast'—it's about time a radio picture was made on a big scale."

Motion Picture Critic, New York Daily News

● For the first time in the history of this business a producing company has been brave enough to invite the critic of the largest daily newspaper in the country to personally get public reaction to coming product! ● It isn't what we want . . . it isn't what you want . . . it's what the public wants that counts . . . Paramount's daring in this move is only because of their complete faith and assurance in the box office power of these eight coming Paramount Pictures.

Paramount's PARAMOUNT Year

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended July 16, 1932, from 105 theatres in 20 major cities over the country, equaled $1,246,503, a decrease of $68,150 from the previous calendar week, ended July 9, when 109 theatres in 20 cities grossed $1,314,653 in the aggregate. The difference is at least partially accounted for by the fewer number of theatres represented during the later week. Eight new low individual house record figures were established during the more recent seven-day period, while no new high individual house records were recorded. A similar number of new "lows" and again no new "highs" were noted in the previous week.

A PICTURE THAT WILL LIFT UP THE SPIRIT OF THE MILLIONS!

Magnificent in theme. Glorious in execution. Packed with punches and fine in sentiment

With Tom Brown, Slim Summerville, Richard Cromwell, H. B. Warner, Andy Devine, Russell Hopton, Ben Alexander, Sidney Toler, Willard Robertson. Produced by Carl Laemmle, Jr. Story by George Green and Dale Van Every. Directed by William Wyler. Presented by Carl Laemmle.

TOM BROWN

The story of a young man who said "Aw, what's the use of anything" and then pulled himself up by sheer force of character and a great love!

exactly the right picture at exactly the right time

Even finer than "The Spirit of Notre Dame"

BOOKED BY WARNER'S AND RKO

The world-famous

CLARENCE DARROW

is coming to your screen in 4 reels of the most amazing show of the season!

THE MYSTERY OF LIFE is probably the only picture ever made that is too short! But it is

THE MOST BALLYHOOABLE SHOW YOU EVER SAW IN YOUR LIFE!

The birth of the earth! The beginning of the movie fan! Cockeyed animal scenes! A human with a tail! What came first? Man? Monkey? Chicken? Or egg? Let your fans see the story and the more violently they agree or disagree with Mr. Darrow, the better for you!

AN ADDED ATTRACTION THAT WILL LICK YOUR FEATURE!

Arranged by Dr. H. M. Parshley. Edited by W. W. Young. Directed by George Cochrane. Presented by Carl Laemmle. Produced by Classic Productions.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 135.—(A) What sets the practical limits of distance from light source (arc) to collector lens? (B) Should the projectionist refuse any condenser lens containing color, or do you regard certain color tints of sufficient advantage in softening the light to justify the loss set up by their use? This last question will not be counted on the "right or wrong" side. It is asked solely to obtain an expression of opinion as to the possibility of obtaining a satisfactory softening of the light tones through slight color tint added to the converging lens. (C) Will a collector lens, the face of which is pitted considerably, cause sufficient light loss to justify its discarding? (D) Does a pitted collector lens cause any ill effect other than light loss?

Answer to Question No. 128

Bluebook School Question No. 128 was: "(A) Tell us what a condenser does, meaning the optical sort. (B) What similarity is there in the action of a condenser and a curved mirror such as is used in connection with reflector type lamps? (C) Describe a plano-convex condenser such as is used in projection work. (D) Just what is a "collector" lens and why is it that? (E) What is a "converging" condensing lens and why is it that?"

The list of replies was long, but a surprising number fell down flat on section B. Moreover, strange as it seems, quite a number, 38 to be exact, confused the parabolic condenser with plano-convex.

Here is the list of made-gooders: Lester Borst, C. Rau and S. Evans, T. Van Valkenburg, Bill Doe, S. G. Williams, G. E. Doe, R. J. Arntson, J. Alruzzo. (I trust that is correct. Please PRINT your names.) J. Wentworth, H. Edwards, H. D. Schofield, D. D. Davis, D. L. Sinklow, C. Ray and T. Taylor, G. Tinlin, P. T. Garling, Dave Goldberg and L. Hutch, P. O'Brien, Nic Granby, G. Deckson, A. Bailey, D. Emmerson, A. Zerach, N. McGuire, R. Geddings and L. Grant, J. Rathburn and D. Little, O. L. Darls, F. F. Franks, D. Lambert and T. Davis, A. Johnson, D. L. Monehan and L. B. Bryant, D. V. Peterson and L. H. Grimes, A. Giebto, R. Singleton, A. Breaston, J. Billings, F. D. Tomlinson, S. Kay, W. Broadbent, S. L. Averson, D. L. Mason, F. Ferguson, J. Cermak, A. Wells, K. L. Knight, P. L. Davis, A. Ilks, J. L. Hanson and F. Hanson, S. Carroll, S. Patterson, H. B. Coates, D. Holler and T. R. Peters, E. Rymer, T. McGruder, J. Williams, H. D. Tyler, O. L. Evans, P. Jackson and B. Diglah, J. Daniels, D. K. Ormie and J. B. Buckley, D. Anderson, L. B. Heitner, J. Ahrenson, T. Murphy, H. M. Jackson, G. Farmann and H. Kuri, A. Jones, S. D. Love and W. Love, F. Davis and L. V. Kobbe, L. D. Simmons, C. Peters, S. Howard and D. L. Kurts, D. Andrews, O. L. DeVerney, L. R. Mitchel, L. Buehler, D. R. Kleinberg, R. F. Takagi, M. E. Garvin and L. D. Jaffray, J. DeLuca, H. D. and B. L. Palmer, L. Ross, P. Jansen, A. L. DeMar, F. Harrlor and G. Harrison, L. Grabou, B. Wheeler and B. Walker, P. L. Jensen, M. H. Lonberger and D. Gill, L. D. Michelson, P. K. Daniels, F. Rickey, D. U. Granger, J. Hendershot and R. D. Konley.

I have given all of these men credit for correct answers, yet as a matter of fact only one man out of the more than 1,000 who answered this series of questions gave a really fully correct answer to section A. He was K. L. Knight, who replied as follows: "(A) The condensers used in motion picture projectors pick up a cone of diverging rays emanating from the light source. This cone is approximately 4.5 inches in diameter. The condenser, viewed as a whole, refracts these rays, projecting them forward in the form of a converging beam to the cooling plate of the projector mechanism, where they form what is known as the 'spot,' in the center of which is the projector aperture. Aside from this function the condenser, viewed as a whole, absorbs and dispenses a considerable percentage of the invisible heat rays sent forward to it by the light source."

There, why didn't the rest of you remember the fact that the condenser absorbs and radiates or disperses heat?

I think we must also permit friend Knight to answer section B, as he is the only one who has done so fully. He says:

"The action of the condenser, viewed as an entirety, is to refract and converge the light received from the light source at the projector cooling plate, and to absorb a considerable percentage of the heat contained therein. The action of the curved mirrors used with non-condenser types of reflector type light sources is to receive and reflect the rays emanating from the light source and reflect them in accordance with the well known optical law which reads: 'The angle of reflection is equal to the angle of incidence.'

"The ultimate result, insofar as concerns concentration of the light at the projector aperture, is essentially the same with condenser and mirror except that (a) the mirror absorbs and dissipates but little heat as compared with the amount absorbed and dissipated by the plano-convex condenser. (b) Because of its larger diameter, the fact that it is as close or closer to the light beam than is the condenser and because it faces the light source squarely, which the condenser does not, the mirror picks up a much greater percentage of the total light than does the plano-convex condenser. Moreover, because the non-condenser mirror, which is the type I understand the question to be based upon, ordinarily is further from the projector aperture than is the face of the plano-convex condenser converging lens, although its diameter is greater than is that of the condenser, it nevertheless sets up little if any more divergence of the beam between the aperture and projection lens than does the condenser.

"The net result of all this is that, within its amperage limits, the mirror is very much more efficient than is the plano-convex condenser under consideration. It collects and projects forward more light, but does not absorb and dissipate as much heat, hence the spot produced by a mirror working without a condenser is of higher temperature than is the condenser spot, screen illumination being equal."

As to section (C), we will listen to brother S. G. Williams, who says: "The plano-convex condenser consists of two plano-convex lenses, the collector lens (rear one) of 6.6 inches focal length. They are mounted with their convex surfaces facing each other, spaced not to exceed 1/12 inch apart. The closer the better, as long as actual physical contact is avoided. The diameter of such lenses is standardized at 4.5 inches, the free opening of the lens mount being approximately one-fourth of an inch less. The lens next the light source is known as the 'collector lens.' The other is the 'converging lens.'"

G. E. Develops New Motor

General Electric has announced a new hysteresis synchronous motor, claimed to be the first governorless type self-starting synchronous motor ever built for phonographic reproduction. The device may have a value for sound film reproduction.

Dear Herald:

On our way over from Ludington to Mt. Pleasant Sunday we stopped and called on Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Rhoads, who operate the Lyric theatre at Evart.

Mr. Rhoads at one time had a theatre in Cleveland, Ohio, and later one at Ada, but has been running the Lyric at Evart for about eight years. We had a delightful visit with these people, but that boy Rhoads knew our weakness, for he told us of a lake close to Evart where he and two other fellows caught 65 small-mouth bass in one day. He said there was a creek close by where they catch rainbow trout that weigh eight and 10 pounds, and he wanted us to stop over and go fishing with him. Now, we ask you in all fairness, could a man do a meaner thing than that to a friend? He knew we couldn't stop; he knew we were a working man, and he took this means of tantalizing us, and 'taint fair. The next time we call on him we are going to fool him. We are going to stick our feet under his table and after that we are going to say, "Where's your lake and where's your trout stream? Lead us to 'em." Well, anyhow, they are delightful folk and we wish them all the good things of life.

Monday was the Fourth of July, and since nobody in the HERALD office works on the Fourth, we decided we wouldn't, either; we never like to break a long-established custom. We got into Mt. Pleasant the evening before and Mr. Ward of the Broadway theatre framed up a foursome for the next day with him and yours truly pitted against his two sons. Did they beat us? The chair will declare the question out of order.

We wouldn't want to say that our partner lay down on us and threw the game, but we have our suspicions, for when a man will shoot 57 on a 36 par course while his partner shoots 58 it makes one think about that colored gentleman in the woodpile.

The Broadway is one of the finest theatres we have visited in northern Michigan, and this, together with the popularity of the Wards, is responsible for the best Monday night house we have seen in a long while.

Mt. Pleasant is located in the heart of the oil field where development work is still going on and that always makes good business until the development work stops and the oil goes into the pipe-lines, then it is different. But Mt. Pleasant is also surrounded by a good farming community, which, after all, is the backbone of any community, and we are therefore predicting stable business for the Broadway.

Theatres Pretty Thick

Alma has two theatres. One belongs to the Cassady circuit of Midland and the Strand to C. A. Miller. Just three miles away is St. Louis, Mich., where there is another house, and this makes the theatres pretty thick for that community. The one at St. Louis dropped the admission price to 10 cents and Mr. Miller said he had had to do the same thing and had expected it would ruin him, but he says that, on the contrary, it has stimulated his business. Formerly he was playing at 25 cents to three to four hundred on Saturday and Sunday nights, whereas now he plays to twelve to fourteen hundred.

Mr. Miller contends that the foundation upon which the picture industry was built was low-price admissions, that as long as prices were maintained at a low level the business grew and expanded, but as soon as it got high-hat notions and thought the public would stand for anything it began to slip and slide all over the map. We believe Mr. Miller is right. We used to buy our service for 18 dollars a week and we ran it at 10 and 15 cent admissions and we made more clear money then than at any time since, and at that time everything was rosy all around. Mr. Miller knows his onions when it comes to diagnosing the ailments of the industry. He ought to, he was born and raised in Beatrice, Neb., and that's recommendation enough, and, aside from that, and in spite of that, he's a swell fellow.

Ralph Benedict is another Nebraska boy. Ralph used to vote for Jim Dahlman for mayor of Omaha when he ought to have known better, but Ralph was young and inexperienced in matters political and therefore excusable.

Ralph now manages the Strand and Capitol theatres for Colonel Butterfield at Owosso, and we doubt if the Colonel could have found a better manager than he. Some of Owosso's factories have closed and that makes business somewhat dull around the Strand and Capitol. If these theatres can be kept open we'll bet that Ralph is the boy who can keep them open.

We didn't get to meet G. F. Smith of the Lyric at Lapeer, but we met his operator, Cal Gillett, and Cal impressed us as a youngster who knows what it's all about. A lot of these operators do, as we have learned on a number of occasions; in fact, some of these operators can tell a lot of us a whole lot of things, and that's why we are strong for the operators.

Good Management

Bernard Leach has taken over the management of the Strand theatre at North Branch. Bernard said he couldn't do a good job of managing without the HERALD and we agreed with him, that's why he is now in the HERALD family. Good management is dependent to quite an extent upon the HERALD; they go hand in hand, but some managers haven't learned that yet, and some have only got one hand.

We never have cared to meet any nicer folks than Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Anderson, who operate the Star theatre at Sandusky. There's no darn sense in making 'em any better. Every time we call on them we want to kick ourselves for being a working man and having to hustle along on the job.

We presume that Mr. Anderson is either a Nebraskan or a Swede, and one is just as good as the other, and where they are both that's plenty good enough for anybody. Mr. Anderson says that operating a theatre in these times lacks many of the elements that go to make up one long, grand and glorious holiday. He suggests aspirin as the best remedy for headaches, but he gave us a remedy that he said was made of dandelion and other ingredients which was more pleasant to take. We found it was, but we failed to get the recipe.

Mr. Anderson has a very nice theatre and Sandusky is located in a fine farming locality.

Peach Brandy or Jam

W. R. Paul has the Palace theatre at Romeo, and the Palace is a nice enough theatre for Romeo or Juliet. Romeo is where they raise the peaches.

We saw one peach orchard there two years ago from which they claimed they would pick 50,000 bushels. Gosh, what a lot of peach brandy that would make, and yet we'll betcha they made the most of 'em up into jam and peach butter. Some people just ruin things that way.

They built Harbor Beach clear up in the "Thumb" of Michigan right on the shore of Lake Huron, and that's as far as you can go without getting your feet wet. After they built the town they built a starch mill to make corn starch and that's where our corn starch pudding comes from. After they built the mill they built the Community theatre and they got Mr. Shipley, the secretary of the mill company, to operate it. To sit on Mr. Shipley's front porch for a couple of hours of an evening and visit with Mr. and Mrs. Shipley is to remember Harbor Beach for a long time. We heard less talk about the depression here than at any point in the state, due to the fact that this starch mill employs 200 people and hasn't laid off a person, and that means a lot to a town of 2,000 Wolverines. If we had built that corn starch mill in Harbor Beach we would have built it out in Neligh, Neb., where they grow the corn. And if we had built those woolen mills down in Massachusetts we would have built them out in Idaho where they grow the wool. That shows you that some people look at things differently.

If you want to see a nice country you should go up in the "Thumb" of Michigan. Their corn isn't much, but they grow excellent wheat, clover, timothy, potatoes, fruit, some Democrats and a lot of Republicans. Mr. Shipley says he expects that an early frost will hit some late potatoes and a few Republicans this fall. We are predicting an early frost ourself, everything seems to indicate it.

GOODWILL PRESIDENT—HE'S GEORGE M. COHAN

Goodwill President of the United States. That's George M. Cohan, the "Yankee Doodle Boy," and the appointment was made official by the Board of Governors of the Friars Club at a meeting called this week by Charles Pope, secretary. The movement was started by the Breakfast Club in Los Angeles. "We Need a Man" is the latest song from Mr. Cohan, who makes his talking picture debut in Paramount's "The Phantom President."

MGM Plans 40 to 50 Foreign Films During 1932-33 Season

MGM will produce between 40 and 50 foreign language pictures at the Coast studio for the 1932-33 season. From 20 to 25 pictures will be made in French and a like number in Italian.

The company has ceased the production of German language films, because of the "kontingent" regulations in Germany. Approximately 20 German language films on the current season's program have been completed.

11 Features, 8 Comedies in Work

Eight comedies on Educational's 1932-33 program have gotten under way, with two completed and six in various stages of production.

Eleven World Wide features are in various stages of production at the California Tiffany Studios, the Metropolitan Studios and the Mack Sennett Studios.

Kennedy at Educational

Tom Kennedy, former New York trade paper writer, has joined the publicity department of Educational, under the supervision of Gordon White, department director.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB OF MOTION PICTURE HERALD

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

TODAY IS IMPORTANT TOO!

YOUR CURRENT BILLS MUST be paid with money you take in now. Therefore your chief problem is to get business and get it now. Today—this week—NOW—is of greatest concern. Not next week, the week after or next month.

I accepted an invitation last week to accompany a local circuit supervisor on his rounds. About the third house we visited we listened to a most enthusiastic manager telling about his future plans. He had a scheme in mind to tie up the entire membership of the local Chamber of Commerce. He was working on a newspaper contest that would result in thousands upon thousands of free lines of publicity and advertising. He was formulating plans for the most unusual and wide coverage ever attempted in a direct-by-mail contact with every family within a radius of fifteen miles of the theatre.

His enthusiasm was so contagious that both the supervisor and myself were getting all excited ourselves. Here indeed was a marvelous individual who was capable of doping out new and unique methods to get business.

BUT, after we had time to catch our breaths, the supervisor asked this man just one question:

"WHAT ARE YOU DOING OR WHAT HAVE YOU DONE FOR THIS WEEK?"

And like the balloon that was touched with a pin point, so did this human dynamo deflate and lose all of his wind.

But he is not alone. There are many others in the same class. All full of enthusiasm, possessing a million ideas but actually accomplishing very few. Men who spend so much time doping out how to make millions that they never find time to make dimes and nickels. Men so wrapped up in future ideas that they have completely lost track of the present.

But those bills must be paid. If you are doing no business now you may never get a chance to work out those gigantic ideas of the future; the theatre may not be able to survive that long. Now is the time to show what you can do. Now, with hot weather and bathing beaches competing against us, we must make use of every possible slant to get business into the theatre. Now, when every penny counts, you must work out those ideas that will show definite results at the box office. Next week or the month after may be too late.

AFTER A MOST HECTIC SEASON in which red seemed to be the predominating color you are apt to find the spirits of many showmen at a particularly low ebb. Which is not so surprising when you stop to consider what they have had to put up with these past six months or so.

Now, more than ever before, is the necessity for organization and individual loyalty of major importance. The morale of each man and the entire group as a whole must be bolstered up and pepped up until they again start hitting on all cylinders and are again imbued with the desire to plug like the devil to accomplish things for their theatre and their circuit.

These words are not being addressed to national circuits alone. It goes just as strong for those smaller independent groups of two or more houses where bad business has had an even more depressing effect than on the larger circuits. They must remember, too, that they owe a greater debt to their house managers than the larger outfits, because the manager of an independent theatre has far more responsibilities, far more work and a greater burden to carry than the manager of a large circuit house.

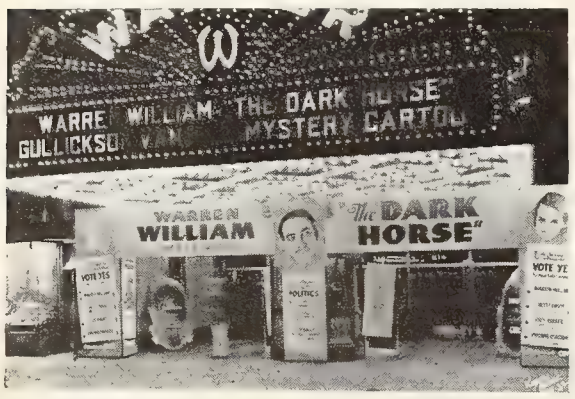
He must work out practically all of his own problems, dope out his own newspaper ads, book his own pictures, create his own merchandising ideas, etc., etc. No home office exists for most of these independent managers where the work is handled and sent to him ready for use.

They must be good executives, too, because they have control over expenses and can therefore effect many savings.

There is no question that all of these men have been laboring under a terrible mental handicap. They know that business has been way off. They know that money is scarce. They realize what their superiors are going through trying to keep in business until the tide turns. And they have feared for their jobs because of all this.

Any little gesture that will tend to make them feel confident that their jobs are safe and that the home office and bosses are with them a hundred per cent will work wonders in the way of aggressive effort to bring their theatres out of the red and hold them in the profitable class. To so encourage them is to materially help in bringing business back to normal via the most sensible means possible—namely, the house manager. "CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!



PARADE AND LOBBY DISPLAY EFFECTIVE PLUG FOR BEN KATZ

A parade and an elaborate lobby display helped Ben Katz, well known exploitation man for Warner theatres in Milwaukee, with his campaign on "Dark Horse." The accompanying photos will convey a fair idea of both stunts.

The main features of the parade were a large brass band and a crowd of men and boys carrying typical political parade signs such as "Vote the Straight 'Dark Horse' Ticket—Warren William, Bette Davis—Warner, Now, and The Laugh of the Nation—The Dark Horse—Warner—Now."

His lobby display consisted of a large area of Guy Kibbee and Bette Davis, under which were placed large ballots with the names of the featured members of the cast.

A plug was also put in for two Vitaphone shorts on the same bill.

The parade of Ben's is reported as an effective attention-getter and one shouldn't have a great deal of trouble getting up an economical one these days, with all the unemployed around. The whole country is political-minded right now and there ought to be some grand chances for exploitation on this picture. We'll publish other gags as fast as they come along.

BILL HENDRICKS IS JOHNNY-ON-THE-SPOT SELLING JOE E. BROWN

All you have to do to instill some super-activity in the person of Bill Hendricks, manager of the Smoot Theatre, Warner house in Pittsburgh, Pa., is to hand him a Joe E. Brown picture. You will recall that Bill was winner of the first prize in the "Fireman Save My Child" contest.

When putting over "The Tenderfoot" he had printed a novel card which contained a list of various activities to be checked off and mailed by busy husbands, wives and sweethearts on vacations. On the top was placed a box with copy reading, "(Use Check Marks to Avoid Writer's Cramp and to Allow Time to See the Year's Laff-Hit) Joe E. Brown in the Tenderfoot—Warner Theatre" (playdates). The copy was placed on the back of a postcard form suitable for mailing.

There's no use trying to reproduce one of Hendricks cards for reason that it was blue-colored. That's a color that the engravers can't handle. Perhaps we can describe it and if we can't, maybe Bill will send one to any interested Club member. Here's the way the start-off of the message goes: "Darling, or Dear—sweetheart, brother, sister, friend, family (all in parenthesis). It is very (parenthesis) stormy, pleasant, cold, disagreeable—I need (parenthesis) money, loving, you, clothes, sleep, food—I spend my spare time (parenthesis) in bed, at the Smoot, studying, thinking of you, gossiping, playing bridge."

You can go on from the above and make your own post card message. All you have to do is keep in mind what recipients might be doing on their vacations and group them in parenthesis following the lead sentence.

Novel Throwaway!

A novel throwaway in the form of an enlarged $2 theatre ticket was used to advertise "Symphony of Six Million" when that picture played the Paramount Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

The reverse side of the card read: "If you were on Broadway—the most show-wise street in the world—you would have to pay $2 to see 'Symphony of Six Million.'" Balance of copy stated that this was convincing proof that Paramount-Publix was bringing exceptional show value to town. Name of theatre and playdates were of course included.

BRODIE PUBLISHING FINE THEATRE PAPER FOR HARRY HUFFMAN

After glancing through the second issue of the "Denver Mirror," a tab-sized paper published by Steve Brodie in the interests of the Harry Huffman theatres, if we know anything at all about house organs of this sort then this one seems to be a corking effort.

At present the paper enjoys a circulation of 41,000 and consists of breezy stories for the fans, news of exploitation activities, display theatre announcements and even a cross word puzzle.

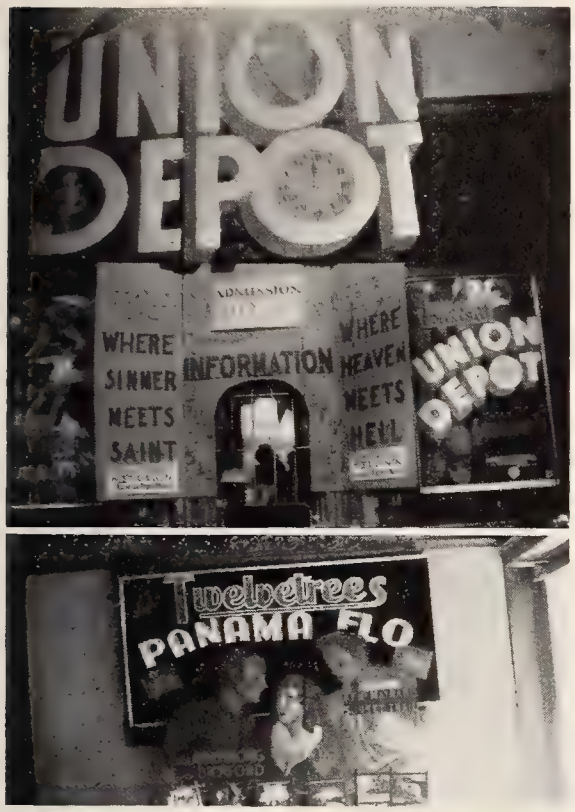
The headline on the number before us announces that "25 Denver Girls Await Galaxy of Fun" as the result of a free vacation contest in force at the several Huffman houses. It is being conducted in the usual fashion, patrons obtaining entry blanks at the theatres and voting for popular girls.

Another little gag mentioned on the front page is a Family Gossip Contest, that of answering questions concerning different movie stars. Contributors are rewarded with guest tickets. A movie critic letter stunt is also apparently meeting with favor and first, second, third and fourth class awards are being made for the best. We also note that among several ads inserted in the paper by local merchants a number of them are tying up copy with merchandise bearing the Mickey Mouse brand.

All in all this eight-page tab seems destined to be a successful one, whether it lasts through the ages or not. While it is in force, handled as it is by Brodie and his staff, we predict it will bring the desired results. Steve is director of publicity and exploitation for the Huffman interests and we hope he'll find time to keep the Club acquainted with what's going on in Denver.

Incidentally, if some of you showmen would like a copy of the "Mirror" drop us a line. We have several extra copies on hand.

A MONSTER CUT-OUT!



Who said that the Great White Way was not show-selling? Here is the way the Capitol enlarged a head of Jean Harlow to such proportions that it attracted no end of attention and comment from the strollers on Broadway. It was eighteen feet high.

MARCY HOUSE STAFF MAKING ATTRACTIVE SIGNS FOR STOFFER

The boys who turn out art work for the Marcy Theatre, a Randforce house managed by Edw. Stoffer over in Brooklyn, N. Y., have been making up some very effective displays, among which was the one illustrated here on "Union Depot."

Note the big block letters in the upper portion of the photo, with one head leaning out of the "O" and the other from the "D" of title, and also the second "O" which was made into a station clock. These were hung directly over the box office, which was made to represent an Information Booth.

The lower portion of the photo shows an inside display made by the same house staff for "Panama Flo," with cutout effects and artistically framed scene stills from another picture, "Sunset Trail," placed in the foreground.

We are looking forward to receipt of another photo from Stoffer showing a shadow box made into a stage effect by his staff and hope that it will be sharp enough to reproduce for the benefit of his fellow Club members. In the meantime we wish him and his associates continued success.

STAR PUT TO WORK PEDDLING TICKETS FOR JOE LEFKOWITZ

Quick to take advantage of the personal appearance of a star at his theatre not long ago, Joe Lefkowitz, manager of the Regent Theatre, Paterson, N. J., tied the actor in with an unemployment affair which the city had been sponsoring for several weeks. The actor was Bert Lytel and the stage was the City Hall. Lytel sold auto raffle tickets for the benefit and autographed every one.

All of which points out that Manager Joe was up to his usual tricks of extracting as much publicity as possible when any opportunity arises. And then he follows up by getting it in the newspaper columns. We hear he is planning a stage wedding. Maybe he'll let the Club know all about it.

PAUL KUNZE NOW IN CHARGE OF THEATRES IN PLYMOUTH, MASS.

Our old friend and Round Tabler, Paul Kunze, formerly of Stoughton, Mass., is now in charge of the Old Colony and Plymouth Theatres, two fine Interstate houses at Plymouth, Mass., and as these lines are being written he's probably well along his program of establishing the same kind of Kiddies Club which he and "Big Sister" Natalie Tolman (Mrs. Kunze) put over so well in Stoughton.

The juvenile organization referred to above has been flourishing for some time under Miss Tolman's direction and her name will be just as familiar to Plymouth people on account of her broadcasting activities during the past two years. Her Stoughton Club has been spoken of as one of the most successful groups of its kind in existence and much credit for this is due to the untiring efforts of this capable showwoman. This time it is planned to combine a Kiddies' Club with a Buck Jones Rangers Club.

Possibilities for extensive exploitation in Plymouth are much broader than in Stoughton and we also may expect to hear of some interesting campaigns put over by Kunze. He takes William ("Bill") Resnick's old post, following this well known showman's resignation a short time ago, and we'll be on the lockout for further word from this New England representative.

Resnick expects to engage in show business on his own and we also hope will let us hear from him just as soon as he gets set. As a parting gesture to friends and acquaintances made during his eight years' association with the two theatres, he had published in the local newspaper a box headed "Appreciation," thanking all for their support and stating that he would soon engage again in business.

JULIUS LAMM MADE BIG HIT WITH KIDS WITH COWBOY STUNT

Appearance of a real rope-spinning cowboy at a school scored a big hit with the youngsters and started a whole lot of word-of-mouth advertising for Julius Lamm, manager of the Variety Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, when campaigning "The Tenderfoot."

The photo shows the cowboy surrounded by a horde of admiring youngsters. A rope-spinning contest was announced for Saturday afternoon and prizes were awarded to the best spinners.

And that's the latest information we have of Julius Lamm and his Variety Theatre, which, of course, is evidence that this Round Tabler is still reaching out for trade. We'll tell you more just as soon as our sleuthhounds gather additional material.

GLEN CARROLL HAS BEEN USING BALLYS AND OTHER METHODS

A few small snapshots from Glen Carroll, manager of the Midland Theatre, Coffeyville, Kan., show that this Club member has been using a variety of effort to attract patrons to his house.

The small photo reproduced here shows a bally he arranged in connection with a Wheeler and Woolsey picture, consisting of an old Model T Ford and three young fellows. Two of them impersonated the comedians as the car was driven through town.

The other snaps are rather faint and small, but show a front made for "Tarzan" and another ballyhoo car. In the case of "Tarzan" it looks as though Carroll succeeded in getting some decorations for his marquee that might have come right out of the jungle. Weird looking hanging moss, or whatever it happened to be, was strung along the full length of the big canopy. The bally was made from an auto stripped right down to chassis, with signs advertising the attraction.

Next time we hear from Glen Carroll maybe he'll see that we get some larger and clearer photos and a detailed account of some of his recent campaigns. We're sure he's doing interesting work out in his town and that means he'll have some good tips to pass along to his brother Round Tablers.

Broadway Doubles-Up!

One of the latest picture policies to go into effect along the Main Stem in New York City is a double feature grind at the Globe Theatre, Longacre Square.

Brandt Brothers, well known exhibitors of Brooklyn and elsewhere in the Metropolitan district, are sponsoring the move, with Louis Brandt in charge of operations.

The idea is to bring back old favorites. "Bulldog Drummond" was one of a recent pair. The Globe seats about 1,050 and a 40-cent top will be charged. Figure it out yourselves. We hear business has been pretty good.

MORE ABOUT TYPE!

Ken Long Continues His Discussion About Make-Up From Last Week's Issue!

IT is important the ad-writer know that his body copy will take the amount of space allowed in his layout, otherwise difficulty may arise when the ad is being set in type.

If insufficient space has been allowed, part of the copy may have to be eliminated and thereby possibly ruin the continuity of the entire ad, or it may necessitate the buying of extra space. On the other hand, if too much space has been allowed for body copy, the entire ad may appear loose-jointed. Therefore, the amount of space this copy will take, or the amount of copy to write for a given space, should be figured by some method until the ad-writer is experienced enough to estimate it.

Estimating Depth!

Here is one practical way of estimating the depth a certain amount of copy will take when the width is known. For example, we want to know how much depth to allow in our layout for the following copy set two inches wide in eight-point Roman leaded. Here's the copy. . . .

> Get away from home routine for an hour or two . . . you'll do a better job when you come back. Get away from the heat; you'll feel better! The healthy excitement of first-class entertainment in a cooled theatre is a happy program for any afternoon. Why not make it this afternoon? Make a date, and make it the Rialto . . . where it's always cool!

Look at a sample block of eight-point Roman type in the Type Book your local newspaper issues, and count the number of letters and spaces in two inches of one line. You will find approximately 37. Now type or write the copy to be set in lines of approximately 37 letters and spaces each. In this case. . . .

Get away from home routine for an hour or two . . . you'll do a better job when you come back. Get away from the heat, you'll feel better! The healthy excitement of first-class entertainment in a cooled theatre is a happy program for any afternoon. Why not this afternoon? Make a date, and make it the Rialto . . . where it's always cool!

Counting the lines of type, we find there are nine, and set in eight-point leaded, each line will be 10 points deep. Knowing there are approximately 72 points to an inch, about seven lines of eight-point leaded type can be set in a space one inch deep. Our copy has nine lines, thus the depth taken by it will be approximately one and one-quarter inches.

If this same copy was to be set eight point solid, in the same width, it would take a depth of approximately one inch.

Measuring Space!

Here is another method of measuring body type space. To use this method in estimating the depth of the above copy, count the number of words in the copy . . . 61. There are approximately 24 words of eight-point Roman leaded type in one square inch. Thus there are about two and one-half square inches of this type in this copy. Divide the width the copy is to be set, two inches, into the number of square inches of type in the copy, two and one-half inches, and the answer will be the depth . . approximately one and one-quarter inches.

In using this method, the approximate number of words to the square inch of the size of type to be used is needed. This may be obtained by actually counting the words in a few square inches of that type and finding the average number in one square inch.

Make Up This Table!

If this method is used, why not make a table with the various sizes of type, solid and leaded, and their approximate number of words in the square inch. This method of measuring is very simple once the table has been prepared.

If the layout is made before the copy is written, this same method may be used to determine the approximate number of words to write. For example, if the space is two inches wide and one and one-half inches deep, the area is three square inches. Set in eight-point Roman leaded, the space will take three times 24 words to the square inch, or approximately 73 words.

LONG SERIES WILL RESUME NEXT MONTH!

"A most constructive and helpful series," is the opinion expressed about Ken Long's fine ad suggestions and type articles which have been running on the Club pages for the past eight weeks.

However, we must tolerate a brief intermission due to the fact that Ken is now editor of "RKO-Now," official house organ of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Theatres under Harold B. Franklin.

Long takes the place of Eddie Eckles, who is returning to the coast, where he will be affiliated with Don Eddy at the studios.

As soon as he gets caught up with his new job, Ken Long will again resume the ad suggestions and articles in this section. Until then, we bid him adieu and lots of luck.

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

"JUST A SONG AT TWILIGHT---??"

OLD SHOWMAN STUFF SAYS ASHMANN, BUT IT SOLD THE SHOW

Shortly after being transferred from the Kinema Theatre to the Stadium, another Randforce house in Brooklyn, N. Y., Maurey Ashmann, with the assistance of Manager George Davis, put over a most effective campaign on the Chevalier film, "One Hour With You." "Old showman stuff," says Maurey, "but it sold the show."

Chevalier, the man, the singer, the lover, the inimitable, was stressed in all copy. A sound trailer was used on screen two weeks in advance of playdates. The trailer was placed in feature spot and displayed with color lights at every show. A shadow box was placed in the inner foyer, featuring Chevalier head-cutout, a cutout clock, catchlines, titles, dates, and a caricature of Chevalier head as a background. Included were 40 by 60 display cards and head cutouts on mirror. The 20-foot lobby display consisted of an art study of Chevalier, cutouts of star heads and sales plugs. Head and title cutouts were pasted on doors leading to theatre proper to create a front in keeping with the Chevalier sales angle. Lobby hangers were also used.

An effective tie-up was made with a Five and Ten Cent Store which resulted in an entire window on the busiest corner in the neighborhood. Entire window fronts were used to sell the picture, with theme song records, photos and one-quarter sheet snipes all prominently displayed. The inside of the store was literally covered with window cards, photos, one-quarter snipes and other material.

Other effort included the distribution of 15,000 heralds of special design house to house and in prominent spots; the use of upright banners; a political type banner swung across street intersection; use of a loudspeaker in lobby for playing of theme song from phonograph, and use of public address system to convey manager's personal endorsement of picture and introduction of theme song. A request to join in the chorus was enthusiastically received by the audience.

Ashmann made it possible for us to receive a couple of photos of the tie-up he made with the Five and Ten, but they are clouded up too much for clear reproduction. Next time maybe he'll see that we get some better ones. Like many of the fellows on the Randforce circuit, Maurey is a go-getter and without doubt will prove a valuable helpmate to George Davis. We will hope to hear more from both of these Club members.

DEMPSEY AND AIDES KEEP LOWELL STRAND BEFORE PUBLIC GAZE

Whenever Jim Dempsey of the Strand in Lowell, Mass., puts over an idea, he wants the world to know he has a corking staff at his theatre and that they helped him with his campaigns.

So meet, typographically, John Sharples, stage manager of the house, who helped Jim recently with a "Magic Flame" stunt that netted some great results. McAuliffe, the staff artist, you already know, so there's no need for introducing him.

Well, the trio got to work after Jim contacted a local refrigerator dealer, and arranged a display in the lobby that was certainly an eye pleaser. Sharples did the construction work, McAuliffe did the art work, and Jim put on the showman touches. The refrigerators made the lobby look like a million dollars. As a result of this stunt, Jim received free advertising and lots of good will. The refrigerator company plugged the theatre in all their advertising and heralds.

It was a worthwhile promotion. But Ezra Bailey, Jim's assistant, went out not so long ago, and promoted nearly everything in town. His idea was to give away the goods to fortunate patrons. And did those patrons flock to the theatre! One look at the lobby display arranged for the gag sold them. They were in the house every night seeking gifts, with the result that business boomed.

There are plenty of live-wires in Lowell, and they don't miss an opportunity to get into the headlines or plug the theatre in some manner. Even fire prevention week was turned to good newspaper use.

Jim was tipped off that the local sheet was planning a special section. He immediately corralled a fire lieutenant and a reporter. The result: the lieutenant addressed the theatre staff on fire prevention, and the reporter wrote a big story.

That's showmanship as Jim displays it in Lowell, and we are certain you will agree with us it is good showmanship anywhere.

"TAKA–CHANCE SHOW"

Jameyson and Lawler Are Now Reviving a Surefire Seat-Seller from the Silent Days

"SOMETHING different" being the predominating influence in show-merchandising today many outstanding showmen are reviving ideas of yesterday and the day before, too, bringing them well up-to-date by means of a slightly new twist or dressing them in brand new garments.

In this connection we are pleased to convey the information that H. E. Jameyson and D. S. Lawler of the Fox Theatres in the midwest have brought back to life one of the swellest seat-selling ideas ever created, and while on the subject of creation may we call your attention to the fact that Jameyson originally presented this particular idea as far back as 1924, so don't let the chislers try to tell you that they originated this stunt.

Getting back to the subject at hand, it is best known as a "TAKA-CHANCE SHOW." Does that sound familiar? Of course it does. You've probably heard of it being used time and again in the past and maybe it has been featured in your own theatre.

A week or two ago we commented on the successfully engineered "Mystery Excursions" of several midwest railroads and at the same time suggested that wise showmen could work up something similar in connection with their theatres. The issue containing that item was hardly dry when we received information that Jameyson and Lawler were hard at work on their "Taka-Chance Show" idea and it has been moving along swiftly and smoothly. No doubt our next reference to it will be to report the complete success of the stunt. Such is our faith in the ability, yes and ingenuity of these two showmen.

For the benefit of those who would like to try something along these lines we are showing here some of the teaser slugs and one of the newspaper ads pertaining to this show. Note, especially, the novelty make-up of the larger ad and you will no doubt agree that it must have created the attention that was desired when it was worked out.

There is a certain amount of fascination to these Mystery or Taka-Chance Shows when properly handled and exploited. The assurance that they will NOT be fooled gives the patron a certain amount of confidence in buying a ticket without really knowing anything at all about what they will see. Then again it can be surrounded with other inducements, where other inducements are necessary, in the way of organlogues, community singing or popular songs, the free distribution of cold drinks, and other selling angles. These may be used entirely as a sort of surprise without advertising them at all.

A word of caution is, however, very important. Be absolutely certain that the show you are going to give will be entirely satisfactory to the greater majority of your patrons. Don't dare risk their displeasure by making them sit through a poor feature or any other screen fare for that matter. If you fall down once you will never be able to regain their confidence again in one of these Mystery or Taka-Chance Shows.

"High Brow Appeal"

Although it has no bearing on the subject discussed above, we want to pass along another good idea from Jameyson and Lawler. An idea, by the way, that can be used wherever a good sized batch of high-brows are residents of any community.

These two Wichita showmen made up an interesting two-page folder in which they talk about the "better" pictures that play the theatres in that city and have a particular appeal to the so-called better classes. This folder invites a selected mailing list to list the names of ten friends who, like themselves, would be glad to receive special notification of the better pictures.

They have developed a most impressive "special" mailing list which it used only when they are to play a picture that should appeal to the High-Brows of the town.

Incidentally, those who fill out the list of ten names can use that list as a free admission by presenting it at the theatre. Another swell way to insure a pretty good response and many additions to that special mailing list.

Other showmen interested in such an idea are invited to write to Mr. Jameyson for a copy of the folder and such other information as they may desire. We feel certain that he will comply.

JUNETTE ISSUED A NOVEL CHECK WHICH SENT MESSAGE OVER

A novel little stunt was used a short time ago by Leon E. Junette, manager of the Fox-Martin Theatre, Globe, Ariz., when announcing a change of policy.

Checks, printed up in voucher form (folded) were mailed out to about one thousand prospective patrons. The face of the check carried name of theatre, date line, notation that check did not have value after certain date and the sum of two cents was made payable to Mrs. Jane Doe. The checks were bona fide copies issued by a local bank and bore the signature of "She Wanted a Millionaire" Company, countersigned by Leon E. Junette.

The voucher portion of the check was headed, "Time Is Valuable—The average person's time sells for about one cent a minute. The approximate time consumed in reading the important announcement below will be two minutes—therefore this check pays you to read our ad and is redeemable for two cents at the Fox Martin or the Valley Bank at Globe, Ariz." Balance of space on voucher was devoted to announcement of new price policy, mention of Ladies' Bargain (25c) Night and the current attraction. A dotted line was printed at the bottom for endorsement.

A neat little gag, we believe all will agree, and one which can be adapted to various occasions or pictures. It should be practically costless except for printing, as not many people would take advantage of such a small rebate. However, we'll gamble that it will serve as an attention-getter. It has the additional value of bringing in names for the mailing list.

CLASSIFIED ADS HAD NAMES OF PATRONS SCATTERED IN THEM

Contacting his local paper netted Lou Kusner, manager of the Apollo Theatre in Martinsburg, W. Va., additional business and quite a bit of free advertising.

Lou arranged to have names of several theatre patrons—taken from the mailing list—scattered among the various classified ads. A box on the classified page announced that persons finding their names among the ads, and identifying themselves at the theatre would be presented with free tickets to the current picture. It is interesting to note that everyone whose name appeared in the ad showed up at the theatre for the tickets.

Perhaps you have a spot in your local paper where you can use a stunt of the sort Lou pulled. Why not get set and let it go? We want to thank Lou for sending his gag along to us, and we hope we'll hear from him again very soon.

Good gags never grow old, and they can always be used to plug picture after picture. For this reason, we pass along a stunt used some time ago by Frank Boucher at the Capitol Theatre in Winchester, Va.

It happened when Frank played "Street Scene." He obtained a full-page co-operative ad in the local paper and plugged the picture in all of the dealers' ads. An eight-column line across the top of the page informed Winchesterites they would be given free tickets to see the film providing they wrote a 100-word letter telling of the greatest bargain ever purchased by them on the town's Main Street. A newspaperman selected the letter.

As stated above, the angle is one you can use at almost any time, and is sure to prove a big hit with the merchants. Thanks, Frank, and we know we don't have to report the picture did tremendous business.

WHO WILL CAPTURE THE PRIZE MONEY?

Just a short time ago M-G-M published the winners of the "Tarzan, the Ape Man" contest and at the same time announced another exploitation contest on "Red Headed Woman."

The prizes offered in this exploitation competition are as follows:

First Prize	$100.00	Third Prize	$30.00
Second Prize.....	50.00	Fourth Prize	20.00

The idea of some of the companies offering such inducements to stimulate further activity in the field of show-merchandising appeals to the Round Table Club because that is our forte. We are constantly shouting about the box office possibilities of exploitation and advertising.

Now you can roll up a record gross for your theatre on "Red Headed Woman," send in the full details of how you accomplished it and stand a good chance of winning one of the cash prizes, plus the national publicity that goes with it. Contest ends September 30th.

Round Table members have always stood high in every contest ever conducted during the past three years. We know that when the winners for the "Red Headed Woman" contest are announced, Club members will again prove our boastful claim that the smartest and most aggressive showmen in the business are members of this organization.

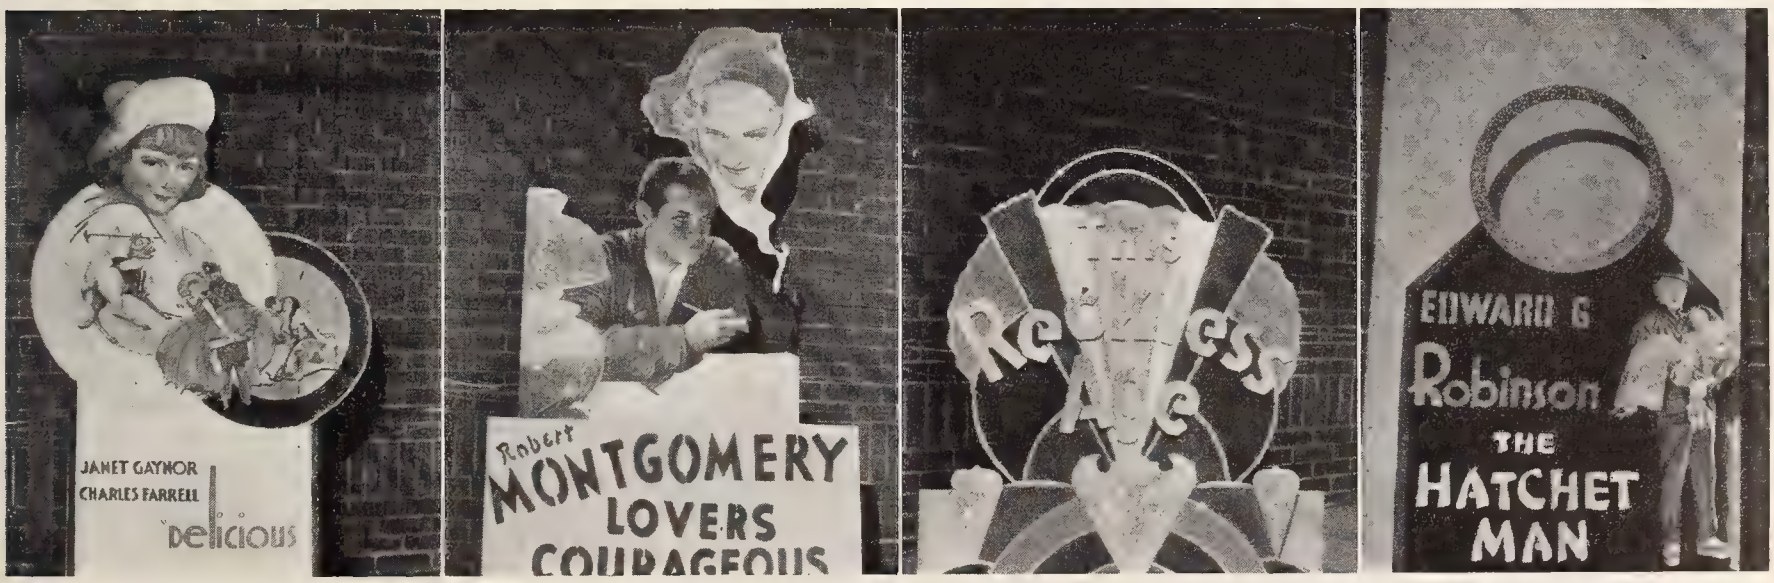
"CHICK"

EMORY WILL FOLLOW UP A KIDDIE REVUE WITH 3 MORE SHOWS

A recent Kiddie Revue staged by Lou Emory, manager of the RKO Uptown Theatre, Highland Park, Mich., turned in one of the largest Saturday grosses that showman has had for some time.

At no expense to the theatre, not even the special programs which were paid for by a dancing school, Lou has lined up three other similar Revues for the summer months. He calls them "Rhapsody in Dance" and most every youngster in town, with any talent at all, is looking for a chance to take part.

It's nothing new for this department to call attention to the box office potentialities of a well staged Kiddie Revue, for we've consistently plugged the idea ever since we can remember. However, Emory's success with his show will serve as a reminder.



HEAT NO BOTHER TO TOM KANE AS HE SELLS HIS SHOW

Hot or cold, wind or rain, snow or sleet, fair or warmer—it's no use talking, the weather never gets under the skin of Tom Kane, who handles the Sequoia Theatre in Redwood City, Cal.

Tom finds time always to keep his theatre's name before the public, and tries to make it an everlasting point to perform the deed at no cost to the house. And so he hiked over to the local newspaper office and promoted a big ad by offering 4 admission tickets—two adult and two children—for each subscription of a month or more.

The editor thought this a great stunt and you may be sure it will react in Tom's favor whenever he has other gags to pull. Playing ball with the local sheets is usually productive of favors that the showman finds an aid.

E. R. MEDD SUGGESTS SOME ATTRACTIVE DISPLAYS!

It's been some little time since we've had the opportunity to offer photographic evidence of the work of E. R. Medd, former manager of the Carolina Theatre, Lumberton, N. C., and now exploitation man for the Howard-Wells Enterprises in North Carolina, but the strip cut on this page will show that he hasn't lost his knack of turning out attractive work.

Medd is now located at Wilmington, N. C,. and although he'll be on the loop taking care of work for the different houses, we hope he'll find time to send along other material to Club headquarters. Details of current campaigns will also be appreciated from the various houses on this circuit.

ANOTHER GOOD "USHER" PLUG!

A long, long time ago we carried an interesting usher gag which caught on so much that it was used by theatres all over the world. In fact, it was one of the first examples of the Round Table Club Clearing House idea wherein one showman could benefit by the activities of the other.

Now, through the courtesy of Walter Morris, who sent it along to us (but we cannot say whether he or anyone else was responsible for the idea), here it is:

Your Usher Is Not An Eavesdropper

But he cannot help overhearing your comments on pictures. Listening to your opinions nightly, he believes he knows the kind of entertainment you like best. That's why he can't resist this opportunity to give you some GREAT News.

It's about THE MOST OUTSTANDING PICTURE of the year coming to the Broadway Theatre . . . Warner Bros.' Hit, "SO BIG," the picture starring BARBARA STANWYCK by which you'll always remember her. It is an epic of American Womanhood! Based on the novel by Edna Ferber, authoress of "Cimarron" and "Show Boat."

The cast includes BETTE DAVIS, marvelous new star discovery, supported by George Brent and Dickey Moore. William Wellman, director of "Night Nurse" and "Public Enemy," directed it.

Ten years from now, when you talk about . . . BARBARA STANWYCK, you'll be proud to say, "I saw her in 'SO BIG,' the greatest picture she ever made." "SO BIG" will be at Warners' Broadway Theatre for one week starting Monday, May 2nd.

Your usher will be waiting to seat you.

—YOUR USHER.

If you like this idea, try it out on your next good picture. It has always been a different form of attracting attention and creates a sort of warm feeling between patron and usher.

WE THINK BARNEY HAS LOTS OF FUN WHILE RUNNING MOUSE CLUB

Somehow, it seems to us, that showmen derive as much, if not more, pleasure out of running a Mickey Mouse Club than the kids who belong to them. We sort of gather this impression from the reams of stuff that wends its way into Club headquarters on the Mickey activities.

Take, for instance, Barney Gurnett of the California Theatre in Santa Rosa. Barney is a showman who is always on his toes, but it appears that he is happiest when figuring out stunts for the kids belonging to his Mickey Mouse Club.

Recently, he tied up with the local newspaper and arranged to take the 500 Club members to the municipal pool for a swim. And there was Barney and an editor from the paper right in the middle of a load of kids, and enjoying it immensely. In fact, Barney is going to hold an all-day party and outdoor picnic for the kids very soon. And the paper is going to help him again. The paper gives him plenty of publicity, too, such as three-column pictures.

Another angle he made use of not so long ago was a half-page co-operative ad requesting readers to: "Patronize These Stores—They're Your Official Mickey Mouse Model Monoplane Campaign Stores."

As can be seen from the copy quoted, Barney is handing out model monoplanes to the Club members. And that's why we wonder if he isn't getting a big kick out of doping new surprises for the kids, and doesn't consider it as work at all.

We wish Barney or some of the other live-wire showmen having Mickey Mouse clubs would give us the lowdown on the situation.

MILLER PROMOTING FREE VACATION GAG FOR CHEYENNE HOUSE

By the time these words appear in print two fortunate young ladies will be well on their way toward winning their right to participate in the elaborate, free vacation trip promoted by Chet Miller, manager of the Fox-Lincoln Theatre, Cheyenne, Wyo.

Chet is one of our several Club members to get behind a move of this kind during vacation time and it's being conducted along the usual lines. He lined up a newspaper and 13 local merchants and the three-cornered tie-up has arranged a trip to Hollywood and return. While in Hollywood the girls will visit the Fox studios and see the Olympic games, with all expenses paid and $100 in their jeans to spend on knick-knacks and spending money.

The vote getting period runs for 30 days and all the fair Wyoming damsels have to do is to clip a vote coupon from the paper to become a nominee. They can even nominate themselves. Naturally, all merchandise purchased at stores of merchants represented in the stunt have vote-procuring qualities. Any 18-year-old girl residing in southeastern Wyoming is eligible to enter her name, providing consent of parents or guardian is obtained. It is not a beauty contest, winners being judged by a committee of three on number of votes resulting from popularity and the efforts of their friends in their behalf. The two winners will travel to Hollywood together.

Always Surefire!

Many Round Tablers have found the above stunt a corking method of keeping interest in their theatres alive during the hot weather months. In Miller's case the newspaper broke the story with a three-column head on the first page and the middle section carried the double-truck reproduced here. Daily mention will, of course, be given the stunt by the paper, along with screen publicity at the theatre. Much word-of-mouth publicity will naturally result from efforts to secure votes for the many candidates. Then the grand finale at the theatre when the winners are named.

Wide Area Covered!

When the amount of territory embraced is taken into consideration it will be seen that Miller is due for extensive distribution of advertising. Ballot boxes are generally provided in the theatre lobby for the votes. That means a trip to the theatre. Sometimes the newspaper handles all the votes. The advertising manager of the newspaper generally takes care of all entries, explaining the rules, etc. Past issues of the Motion Picture Herald have carried the plan in detail.

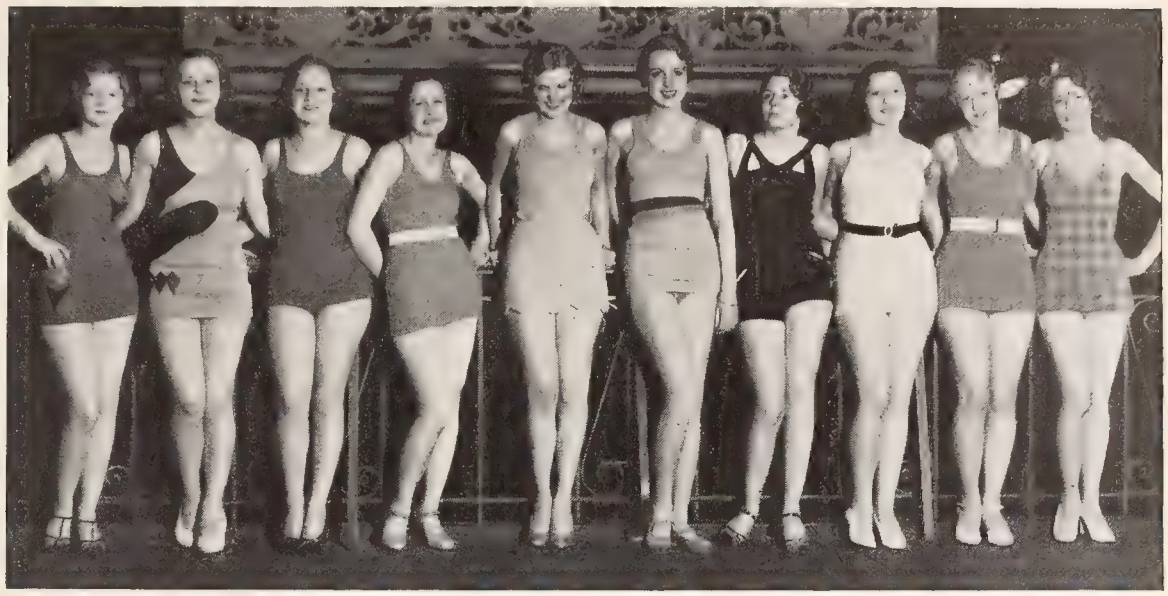
At the conclusion of this event we hope Chet Miller will drop us a line and let us know just what was accomplished. Often new twists arise during the running of one of these stunts which will be of value to others. If he will oblige Club headquarters with the story, we'll pass it along for the benefit of his fellow showmen, who we know will be looking for further information about this business promoter.

STRAUSS' LONG RECORD, 26 YEARS WITH LOEW'S, AND ALWAYS A BOOSTER

Sigmund Strauss, manager of the Palace Theatre in Brooklyn, for the Loew Circuit, has been with that organization continuously for the past twenty-six years. Truely a record well worth crowing about. But "Sig" being that kind of a chap that never lets his voice rise above a whisper (when talking about himself), just kept plugging along minding his business.

We rather like the idea of talking about Sig Strauss, because we met him personally some six or seven years ago. At that time he was making the Palace one of the real money-makers of the circuit and doing things that many others thought radical and even revolutionary, but he, at least, had the courage of his convictions and perhaps that is one of the reasons why he can boast of a twenty-six year record with one circuit.

It might be a good idea to mention at this time that Loew's is one of the circuits well worth being with at any time, whether it be a short or long time record. Somehow or other we have often wondered what kind of "it" the Loew Circuit possessed that made it the goal for most showmen to try and reach. We can recall a few years back when a manager we know for quite some time came into our office and with a smile that spread itself from ear to ear proclaimed with enthusiasm: "Well, Chick, NOW I'm set. I've landed with Loew's." He's still with them and happy.



We are rather proud of lining up showmen like Sigmund Strauss. He is a genuine old timer in the sense of the word that he has made showbusiness his life's work and he's proud to be a part of it. Whatever little he can contribute to the activities of our pages, we know, will be well worth reading for every other man in the theatre business. Welcome, Sig, and we hope to say it in person very soon.

RANDFORCE ART!

Below is an example of art work being turned out by men on the Randforce Circuit of Brooklyn, N. Y., this one resulting from the workshop of Harvey Fleischman, manager of the Embassy Theatre. Each theatre on the circuit has its individual shop and all are becoming well known for being able to produce show-selling displays at minimum cost.

LYKE'S BATHING BEAUTY SHOW!

Some time ago we made mention in this department that J. E. Lykes, manager of Loew's Park Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, had made a tie-up with the large Danceland Ballroom in his neighborhood for the holding of an elaborate Bathing Girl Contest, a stunt which is held high in the esteem of many showmen as a means for boosting trade during the hot weather months. It is now our pleasure to report that the show was a great success and the accompanying photographic evidence will support the claim that ten beautiful Cleveland damsels were finally adjudged the pick of the district.

The ten ladies you see in the photo were picked from a flock of forty-five that paraded at the Ballroom on a Thursday night. The ten winners appeared at the theatre on the following night for award of the ten prizes donated by local merchants. To make it interesting the audience was asked to pick one girl by popular applause for winner of the first award of a ten dollar gold piece. The rest of the girls received the balance of the awards, which included a dress; pair of shoes; a hat; bathing suit; a compact; lingerie; permanent wave; hosiery; purse and candy. All these articles were displayed in a large showcase (see photo) in the theatre lobby one week in advance of judging night. The Ballroom displayed two large banners, two 1-sheets and printed and distributed 15,000 tickets that offered a discount on regular admission while the contest was on. The Ballroom also made daily announcements at the hall and over the radio.

All three newspapers carried announcements and status of the contest and the photographs for the theatre were promoted free of charge from a local studio that cashed in by selling prints to nearly all the girls and merchants who participated in the stunt. A one-sheet in the theatre lobby on opening day, with photo of the ten girls, helped receipts at the box office.

Lykes advises us that the above stunt attracted a lot of attention and consequently helped boost trade over the period. This department has plugged this stunt consistently since the start of the season and we hope that many other Club members have cashed in on the move. There's nothing novel about holding a Bathing Beauty Contest, to be sure, but these old stunts are certainly worth trying again and again. We will be glad to hear from other members who have used the same stunt this summer.

THE FARTHEST NORTH MICKEY MOUSE CLUB IN JUNEAU, ALASKA

Mickey Mouse, that hilarious rodent, and his girl friend, Minnie, have stolen into the hearts of the patrons of the Capitol Theatre in Juneau, Alaska, and they just won't let them go.

The adults like the mischievous mouse and his sweetheart. But the kids go simply crazy over the pair! So it was up to E. Paulson, manager of the theatre, to start a Mickey Mouse Club. This he did, and it is going along like a house afire.

The Club even has a special paper in which is recorded all the "doin's" of the week. And it is interesting to notice therein an item stating that four small boys recently stole some chickens which they intended to roast in a "pirates' den." Captured by deputies, the youngsters were brought before the sheriff. The arm of the law, instead of sending the kids to the woodshed, barred them from the Mickey Mouse Club meetings for a month, which proved a very severe sentence to the youngsters, who were almost heartbroken when the order was passed.

The club has an orchestra, a jazz band, a glee club, a sick committee, and an art school. There is a membership of 297 in this farthest north Mickey Mouse Club, and activities hum weekly.

Paulson is certainly to be congratulated on his enterprising showmanship and we are sure his fellow members and showmen think the same way and want to hear and see some more of his work. Right?

BATHING BEAUTY REVUES!

The reason we are back again on this idea is because last week's mail revealed the fact that close to twenty-five more of these revues have been successfully put over by showmen in various parts of the country. When we say "successfully," we mean it in every sense of the word. They not alone brought valuable free space for the theatre, created word-of-mouth publicity for the theatre and the idea, gained free displays and circulars in the best shops in town, but came close to or did smash box office records and at a time when such an achievement is badly needed.

Aside from the appeal to the eye for the average patron, these Bathing Beauty Revues can be made to mean a steady flow of business over the period they are spread. One or two nights a week is quite possible, with a grand finale that is certain to be a sell-out from the moment you open your box office sale of tickets.

Tied into the Revue you can attach a Popularity Contest slant, as well as capitalizing on the talents of the girls participating. Besides, you can work out innumerable other angles all tending to build up popular interest in the entire idea.

This is the summer when showmanship must stand the acid test at the box office. Never before has so much activity and effort been centered on warm-weather business stimulants, and here is one that is as close to be surefire as anything ever thought of.

Get busy and start your Bathing Beauty Revue within the next two weeks. Have them run until late in August, with a whirlwind windup for a big finish. It will mean an S.R.O. show at least one night in the week and that may be just what you need to keep out of the red this summer.

NANCE THINKS TIME HAS COME TO REVERT TO CIRCUS BALLYHOO

Believing with others in this industry that what it takes to sell pictures these days is the old-time circus method, F. D. Nance, general manager of Hall Industries Theatres, Beeville, Texas, decided on "Scarface" as the vehicle for experimentation along these lines. We cannot give readers the result of his campaign at this writing, but we can advise that the sensational angles were stressed and that the "no children" line was written into all advertisements.

To begin with, an unusually flashy front was built for the theatre, with enough material to stop the average passerby. Among the different "stoppers" prepared was an electric chair with a trick coil arrangement, so as to make a spark jump across the three-foot space between top and bottom of chair. This made a sharp, crackling noise and was plainly visible in the daytime.

Nance mapped out a most complete advance campaign, all presented in concise style in a well arranged booklet. He had a number of special one-sheets printed, plugging the picture, and these were posted in all surrounding towns along the Hall Circuit. It was also planned to use newspaper tie-ups, cooperative ads and word-of-mouth advertising right up until opening day and arrival of bally. A special truck body, in keeping with picture, has been made and the bally will make the different towns at the proper time.

The adult angle was stressed both on account of the selling possibilities in a move of this kind and the fact that the original, uncensored version of the picture was being sold. The several managers were all instructed to charge top prices, hence no children's tickets were issued for these showings. Trip passes were also counted out for the occasion, only annual passes being honored. Bill posting men were instructed to tell store-owners, etc., that paper handed out would not be accepted at the box office for admissions on "Scarface."

In short, Nance handled this picture on a roadshow basis and shaped his campaign accordingly. He has a limited number of his booklets on hand and will be glad to mail them to interested Club members on receipt of a card or letter. We can assure any Round Tabler that show-selling suggestions set down in print by this showman are worth looking over.

Reprints Not Available!

In response to numerous requests we must advise that there are no reprints available on the Ken Long ad suggestions. Inasmuch as they were primarily intended as just suggestions our advice is that you frame your local ads along the lines laid down by Ken without trying to actually duplicate them, and it might be a good idea to also try making up some experimental ads.

We are soliciting further expressions regarding this fine series and would appreciate some comment from the ad artists in the larger cities so as to get their opinions. They are in a good position to offer some constructive criticism because the type of ads suggested by Long are supposed to be the solution to the problem of exhibitors without the services of ad artists.

MAC EACHRON NOW INDIE EXHIBITOR IN WEST HELENA

It is indeed a pleasure to see that J. B. (Mac) MacEachron is making good as an independent exhibitor in West Helena, Arkansas, and right at the start of this story, we want to wish him the best of luck.

He informs us that he is charging only 10 cents admission, and must play to volume to get out from under. This he is doing. While working as city manager and manager for various corporations he learned a lot of tricks that stand him in good stead at his present spot.

It used to be his pleasure to make up unique heralds, and he is now doing them again, distributing them in outlying towns and getting surprising results. Another of his stunts was to run an article plugging theatre parties in the local paper, informing the public that ten people could see his excellent shows for a dollar. This, he explained, was perhaps less than the radio cost to run, or electric lights to burn, and surely cheaper than automobile riding, Many people responded to this story.

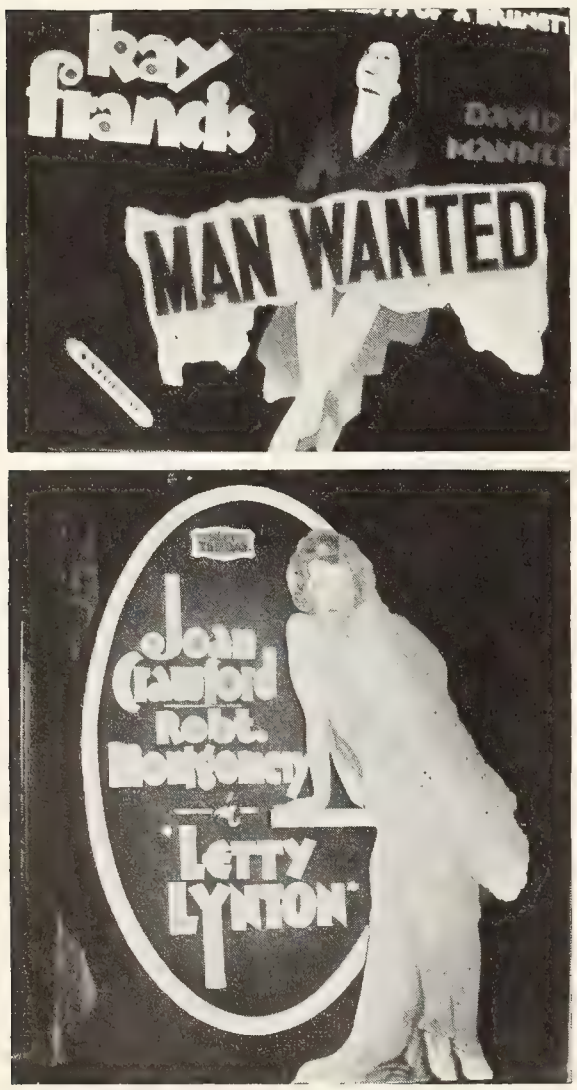
Mac has also been busy plugging the angle that families should visit the theatre. As a result, merchants in the town have been bringing their families and receiving a cordial welcome from Mac, who stands at the door every morning "helloing" to his patrons and instructing his ushers to do the same inside the theatre.

The idea has been clicking wonderfully well and it looks to us as though Mac, through his live-wire showmanship, is going to have a busy little house. And we certainly hope our prediction will come true, Mac.

A STUNT THAT REALLY ATTRACTS!

Arnold Stoltz, publicity director, and Charlie McCleary, manager of Loew's Century Theatre in Baltimore, doped out this unique ballyhoo gag which attracted plenty of attention. The fake movie equipment mounted on the truck was manned by two ushers dressed as cameraman and director. They would shoot a scene enacted by two characters located a few stories from the street level, and when enough of a crowd had gathered the two actors would release a long banner sign directing attention to the picture then playing. Good gag, boys, bet it had the natives laughing and talking about "Make Me a Star."

- HERE IS ANOTHER GROUP OF FINE NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING IN WHICH EXCHANGE MATS PLAY AN IMPORTANT PART.
- HARRY BOTWICK, MANAGER OF THE PARAMOUNT THEATRE, RUTLAND, VT., IS THE SHOWMAN RESPONSIBLE FOR THESE ADS AND CHALKS UP STILL ANOTHER STUDENT IN THE EXCHANGE MAT ADVERTISING SERIES BEING CONDUCTED BY KEN LONG ON THE ROUND TABLE CLUB PAGES.
- OTHER SHOWMEN USING EXCHANGE MATS IN THEIR ADVERTISING ARE INVITED TO SEND IN TEAR SHEETS.



HERE'S A NEW KIND OF DISPLAY USED BY DOUGLAS, SIOUX CITY

Something different in lobby set piece work is being turned out by Roland Douglas, manager of the RKO Orpheum Theatre, Sioux City, Iowa, and from all reports this innovation has been coming in for considerable comment on part of the public. It is called the "Ragagraph," because practically all of the piece is made from cloth.

The accompanying illustration only briefly describes the attractive results produced by the process, but will serve to portray a fair idea of the finished display. The first step is to take a photograph of the Star you wish to feature, blowing up same with the machine. Then a pattern is made, along the same procedure a dressmaker would follow in the design of a dress. Felt cloth of different colors is cut to fit the figure. Everything in the upper portion of the photo of "Man Wanted" was made from cloth with exception of the title. Seven different colored cloths were used.

In the lower portion of the photo showing the "Letty Lynton" set piece, five different colored cloths were dressed after the figure was painted and cut from composboard. Even a pair of shoes was used, split, because only half of the shoe shows. Recently, when making heads of Edmund Lowe and Claudette Colbert, the same method was followed except that a real shirt, neck open, was placed on Lowe. Likewise, Colbert was dressed with a real hat, patent leather belt, gloves, etc.

We've described the above displays as well as possible under the circumstances and feel that most any ingenious showman can duplicate the stunt if it appeals to him.

H. B. FRANKLIN SAYS:

(From "R.K.O. Now")

We cannot over-estimate the importance we should place upon advertising. In the business of Showmanship, it is a major item, accruing an annual expenditure equal to any other financial problem facing us.

It demands constant, shrewd attention . . . carefulness of creation and preparation . . . the measuring of every word and the avoiding of hackneyed phrases.

Simplicity is a keynote from which one does not dare deviate without wasting time . . . space . . . Money!

Frankness is a style that is imperative, if confidence is to be invited . . . with daring, if necessary, to get over our message.

Sincerity is the builder of Prestige . . . the rock, upon which we cast our lot of continued existence . . . then leadership . . . and continued leadership.

Truthfulness must guide every step . . . for without it the largest space is wasted.

My earnest wish is that you never fall for the temptation to exaggerate. In preparing to fight the heat, do not call your theatre "The Coolest Spot in Town." Your public does not want to believe that. . . . But they will be inclined to believe it is "ONE of the Coolest Spots in Town."

It is also wise to add . . . that it is "Carefully Cooled." Those two words speak volumes, illustrating both brevity and common sense.

You are dealing with Human interest . . . be Human . . . and write your copy along Human lines.

No greater example of combined brevity and human interest can be found than Arthur Brisbane's daily column.

He tells lengthy feature stories in short paragraphs. No words wasted there. Even syllables count. Elaborate phrases would be as out of place in his column as they are when they get into theatrical advertising.

WHITE SPACE IS COSTLY, BUT NOT HALF AS COSTLY AS SPACE SMEARED WITH USELESS WORDS.

And it is still over-costly, if over-crammed with exaggerated "high pressure" copy . . . not a few resent being screamed at . . . even in print.

Take more time in solving your advertising problems. Take more time in creating your layouts and copy. Take more time in juggling every inch of your space-budget to get the maximum results.

How to advertise more effectively . . . yet less expensively . . . requires managerial skill of a high order. . . . The extent to which theatre advertising cost should be limited depends entirely on local conditions. It is essential, holding to a limited advertising allowance, to choose the media which attracts the largest number of persons. In this respect newspapers are entitled to receive favored consideration.

Medium sized space . . . appropriately illustrated and straightforward, logical copy will give best results during ensuing months.

As Douglas states, a manager doesn't have to be a Pansy in order to work out one of these affairs. If you can't handle it, call in the wife, sister or girl-friend. In case you want additional information, we believe Douglas will furnish same. He tells us the women were quite nutty over the sets, and that even the men hung around them.

HERBERT SOBOTTKA has succeeded William Houck as manager of the RKO Orpheum Theatre, Seattle, according to a recent announcement by Homer W. Gill, Northwest division manager. Sobottka has represented Fox-West Coast in Yakima and Wenatchee for the past eight years. His position as manager of the two Fox houses in Wenatchee, Wash., is being filled by Glen Gennoway, according to information from Frank L. Newman.

SIMONS PROMOTED A RADIO LOG AS GIFT TO THEATRE PATRONS

As a courtesy to all patrons attending his theatre a certain week a short time ago, Hoy O. Simons, manager of the Fayette Theatre, Washington Court House, gave each family a nicely gotten-up radio log of all stations in the U. S. possessions and Canada, the entire cost of which was promoted without cost to theatre.

Advertising secured from local merchants and printed on the inside and back covers of the booklet took care of the cost. The front cover was "stolen" by the theatre and carried the name of house, the slogan, "Where Sound Sounds Best," and a reproduction of the photo of this page. Incidentally, this shows a special 5 Cent Matinee held for all teachers and school children a few weeks ago on "Washington, the Man and Capitol." It was necessary to hold two shows to accommodate the 1,600 patrons.

Apparently there are lots of people who still take their radios seriously, for we understand the booklet described above met with appreciative response from patrons of the Lafayette. A foreword in the book pointed out that it was a useful article, in no sense an advertising specialty and was distributed by a progressive merchant through support of the advertisers

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Starting in showbusiness at 20 years of age, John R. Elliott, manager of the RKO Palace Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, first tried his hand at bill posting and selling song books and after a whirl at that decided he liked the game.

John R. Elliott

His connections in the past include Chas. Hoyt's musical comedies, Cohan and Harris, the Nixon, Cohan and Harris Circuit, the Barnum and Bailey Circus and twenty-two years with Keith's. He either managed a company or theatre when connected with the afore-mentioned concerns.

Elliott was born in Youngstown, Ohio, Feb. 19, 1879, and was educated in the public and high schools of that city. He went into showbusiness because he liked it and there isn't any thought in his head at the present time of ever leaving for another field. He is married, the father of two children, and belongs to the Elks, Masons, Rotarians, Friars' Club and Jesters' Club.

FOR PICTURE THEATRES

PLAYLETS

Lew Cody
New York Capitol

This villain of the films steps out of character and offers several amusing anecdotes about Hollywood. After a somewhat dramatic bit in which he emotes with a French-Canadian dialect, Cody assumes the role of a movie mogul and Una Merkel is the little girl from Dixie who wants to be a star. A bit of hokum comedy with Jack Benny supplying the big laugh.—H. P.

Danny Duncan and Company (5)
Baltimore Hippodrome

Here's an excellent musical playlet with snappy dialogue, good songs and dances, and put over in delightful style. In a special living room set, Danny Duncan and a woman take the roles of an old husband and wife worried about their daughter's squabbles with her husband. It is all put over with songs, dances and special costumes in a fast manner. The act is entitled "Old Sweethearts."

Joe Morris & Co. (4)
New York Palace

In this comedy skit Morris, as the henpecked husband, and a youngster who plays his wisecracking son, provide the comedy which gained hearty laughs from the audience. The bit in which Morris and the boy occupy seats in the box was particularly well received.—H. P.

Jack Benny
New York Capitol

Benny offers a comedy skit taking the part of a motion picture producer and is assisted by Una Merkel. He easily gets laughs throughout the bit and then acts as master of ceremonies for the show, his every appearance resulting in amusing comedy bits. Benny is a master showman, a polished entertainer and possesses personality to the *n*th degree.—H. P.

Gus Edwards' Radio Discoveries
San Francisco Fox

The setting is that of a radio studio and Bill Arnson acts as announcer. Eddie Bruce puts on a clever Amos and Andy stunt, imitating all the voices, and also takes off Rudy Vallee and Bing Crosby. Kate Fair, a contralto, does a Kate Smith song, and a quartet of girls present a Boswell Sisters' act, singing, dancing and playing musical instruments. The affair is a good takeoff on radio advertising.

Jean Hersholt
New York Capitol

Jean Hersholt received a nice hand on his appearance and offered a bit from his latest picture, "Unashamed," which also appeared at this theatre this week. During his makeup preparation, he eulogizes the late Lon Chaney, with whom he was intimately friendly for 18 years.—H. P.

75 at San Francisco Get Opportunity in RKO Revue

In cooperation with the San Francisco Chronicle, the RKO Golden Gate theatre, San Francisco, put on an Opportunity Revue for a week, with 75 participants. The winner, selected by the judges, will be sent to join the RKO National Opportunity Revue. The local judges included Mayor Angelo Rossi; "Terry" Duffy, Pacific Coast stage producer; Mrs. W. B. Hamilton, clubwoman; Ronald Telfer, head of the Children's theatre, and William R. Woodfield, Jr., director general of the Shrine convention to be held in San Francisco this month.

Acts Four Times Daily To Avoid "Doubling Up"

Vaudeville shows at the RKO Orpheum theatre in Seattle now are appearing four times daily, every day in the week. This was the first move made by Herbert Sobottka, new manager. Heretofore stage shows appeared three times daily, except on Saturday and Sunday. The new schedule allows patrons to see a complete show, including both stage and screen entertainment, at any time they enter the theatre, without "doubling up" of film presentations to accommodate former schedules.

Stage Policy for Two RKO Cincinnati Houses

Tentative plans for next season, which are reported as practically certain, for Cincinnati, contemplate reinstatement of vaudeville at the RKO Albee and the inauguration of a stage policy at the RKO Palace. Both houses will play the stage attractions in addition to pictures, the change to become effective Labor Day.

Theatre Musician Dead

Theodore A. Hahn, 41, formerly violinist with orchestras at the Lyric, Strand and Old Walnut Street theatres in Cincinnati, is dead. Mr. Hahn was recently on the staff of radio station WLW in Cincinnati.

To Write Film Songs

Harry Warren, film and revue song writer, under contract to Warner music publishing companies, is in Hollywood writing the songs for Bebe Daniels' forthcoming film, "Radio Girl." Al Dubin will write the lyrics.

Kentucky Organist Moves

Haden Read, former organist at Loew's State, Louisville, Ky., has been named organist at the Kentucky, also in Louisville.

NOVELTY

Gaston Palmer
New York Palace

Offering a variety of juggling and difficult balancing bits, with steady comedy chatter, Palmer stopped the show cold. Making the most of a situation in which he unsuccessfully endeavors to spoon a dozen glasses, he finally completes the trick for a spontaneous reception. An ace act that will please anywhere.—H. P.

Lottie Mayer and Girls (15)
Cincinnati Albee

This aquatic miss with her company of 14 diving mermaids presents one of the most picturesque acts seen at this house in a long time. In addition to plain and fancy diving by the girls in general and Miss Mayer in particular, the girls do a complete change of costume under water each time they go into the huge tank on the stage. To prove their versatility, they do some intricate dance steps before taking their initial plunge.

Red Donahue and Uno
Cincinnati Albee

Donahue in blackface enters in a buckboard drawn by Uno, a highly educated donkey, who kicks against the dash just at the opportune time to fit in with the comedy lines. With the buckboard finally collapsing, Uno is released for a series of biting, kicking and balking, which seems to be done intuitively at the right moment, and apparently without command. The highspot of the act is where the donkey deliberately sits on Donahue. The act is crammed full of laughs.

Jack and Jerry
Denver Denver

Irish lad and lassie—the lad can scoot clear across the stage sliding on his shoes—must have rollers in them. Jack gives an imitation of the Prince of Wales riding a horse—and falling off. Jerry does a tap number on the stairs and both dance on roller skates.

The DuPonts
New York State

The male member of the team offers a routine of clever juggling, the while going through an eccentric dance. He is accompanied by his pretty partner in a martial rhythm, each using three balls and a drum. For an encore DuPont juggles an apple, a plate and a wooden club, biting the apple at each catch until it is gone. The audience liked this opening act.—H. P.

De Vito and Denny
Omaha Orpheum

"Lady Harrower's Reception" is a novelty in surprises, invoking many laughs. They clown as the two musicians who are to play at the reception. Their nonsense includes jumping upon a musician in the pit, pulling down drops center stage to expose others in dressing rooms, jumping from a balcony on what would seem to be a grand piano, but proves to be the frame work well fitted with coil springs, so they bounce aplenty. A violin is crashed over the head of one of the pair, a fire extinguisher is operated upon the other by the pit orchestra leader. Both have nearly all their clothes stripped from them toward the end of the act, as does the pit orchestra leader. It is a rough-and-tumble affair and keeps the house guessing and laughing.

Niles
Cincinnati Albee

This impersonator has a fairly good feminine appearance, an elaborate and complete wardrobe, and, above all, an excellent singing voice for this type act. However, his really clever impersonations suffer considerably by his constantly changing to a man's voice between song numbers. The act would have clicked much better if the audience were not deprived of the illusion by the changes of voice mentioned.

Bob Garney (3)
With Miss Greenwood and Harry Pollard
Baltimore Hippodrome

A nice singing, dancing and chatter act with plenty of comedy that goes over well. It was applauded generously.

Stoopnagle and Budd
Detroit Fisher

These clown radio announcers found a warm reception here. Their act is similar to one of their broadcasts, including a garbled sports radio report, impersonations of Bing Crosby, Rudy Vallee, Calvin Coolidge and Al Smith, and an assortment of foolish gestures and gags. Insistent applause carried over into the next act.

Senator Murphy
Cincinnati Albee

It is like turning back the hands of time to hear this veteran trouper again deliver his famous old monologue on the political situation, and the country in general. It is brought right up to the minute. His style of delivery and his German accent have not changed through the years, and he goes over just as big. A few of his lines are a trifle blue for a mixed audience, but otherwise the act is okey to the nth degree.

Hobart Bosworth
New York Palace

Using slides, Mr. Bosworth tells the history of Hollywood in an interesting fashion. He shows a still of the first picture made there, in which he played the principal role. After the act he assumes again the kindly mien of "The Miracle Man," telling the audience that faith will carry them through these times. This informal bit can hardly be called an act, yet it is different and highly pleasing.—H. P.

Harris and Brookins
Omaha Orpheum

Bill Harris and Tom Brookins, colored entertainers, have an act of pianologue, song and clowning, augmented with a tap dance by Harris' younger brother. The act carries well. The younger Harris draws more applause than any other single number on the week's bill. Harris' and Brookins' "Repeal Song" makes a hit. Brookins sings "Mother Macree" effectively. "Sleepy Time Down South," sung as solo and duet, also is executed artistically, while a parody on the Japanese-Russian-Chinese situation draws laughs.

Thurston (19)
Detroit Michigan

There is no penetrating Thurston's tricks. Five times a day he saws a girl in two, heedless of her blood-curdling screams, but it has not been reported that he employs five new fair assistants daily. Thurston opens his performance by inviting about 60 youngsters to the stage. The alacrity with which all the youngsters in the house responded is an indication of the effect of the magician's genial manner on them. Having about an hour to himself, Thurston offers a generous fare from his bag of tricks. From large collapsible hats he draws everything from handkerchiefs and parasols to assistant performers. A rod is passed through a girl. A cage suspended over the heads of the orchestra and beneath the eyes of the balcony contains a girl who vanishes into thin air. The show closes with the "Mysteries of the Water Fountain," in which the wizard makes fountains spring from everything he touches.

Big Bill Blomberg
And His Alaskan Huskies
Baltimore Hippodrome

The dogs do jumping tricks and some comedy bits, while two assistants help Blomberg. In one specialty a dog balances on a slack rope to applause. Three men and seven dogs are in the act.

INSTRUMENTAL

Abe Lyman & Orchestra
New York Capitol

Abe Lyman's orchestra is one of the finest stage bands in the country. The boys have youth, stage technique and are accomplished musicians. Opening with a rhythm bit played in sections, a vocal sextet offers a satire on famous operas, singing the lyrics of "Piccolo Pete," which proves extremely amusing. The band then goes into a medley of "Blue" songs consisting of "Blue Heaven," "Blue," "Blue Days" and "Under the Spell of the Blues," the latter with a vocal recitation by one of the band, who receives well-merited applause. Abe closes his act with a hot instrumental arrangement of "Milanburg Joys," and takes several bows.—H. P.

Russ Columbo & Orchestra
New York Palace

Opening with the theme song which he made famous, "You Call It Madness," Columbo directs his band into a series of popular songs, including "Keepin' Out of Mischief Now," "Paradise," "Between the Devil and the Deep Blue Sea," "Pris'ner of Love," "My Mom," and "If You Were Only Mine," and sings the vocal to each. For the finale the orchestra plays a hot arrangement of "I Got Rhythm," Columbo offering a violin solo. Columbo would do as well minus the band.—H. P.

Master Eugene
Detroit Fisher

This energetic xylophone performer is about 12 years of age. He offers his own arrangement of "Humoresque," a fast version of "Now's the Time to Fall in Love" and "Happy Days Are Here Again." He interrupts his second number for a brief tap dance interlude.

COMEDIANS

Douglas Leavitt and Ruth Lockwood
New Orleans Orpheum

This turn is called "Satires" but is more truthfully a series of burlesques on the times. Leavitt, following Daphne Pollard, manages to wring laughter from an exhausted audience through the brightness of his material. With Miss Lockwood, he presents the usual before-and-after marriage skit, ludicrously effective, a scene between two deaf people in a movie, gags with Miss Lockwood and his pianist, Charles Strickland, and practically takes the house with his burlesque on a radio broadcast. The act was placed in a closing spot, but carried itself over through showmanship and ability.

Chas. "Slim" Timblin (3)
New York Palace

This standard blackface comedian offers a satirical sermon which kept this audience in howls throughout. Following his monologue, his performance of a marriage ceremony, aided by two assistants, continues the comedy without a letup. This act should go well anywhere. —H. P.

Daphne Pollard
New Orleans Orpheum

Miss Pollard tells the audience in a thank you speech that this is her return to vaudeville after an absence of five years making pictures. Vaudeville needs comedians like Miss Pollard. From the moment she steps on the stage with her exaggerated walk and sings a song, until her last routine, which she calls a bit from one of her pictures, she provides continuous laughter. She sings three songs, one about her charms in a bathing suit, a mother song with dramatic overtones which go ludicrously astray when the child in the crib turns out to be a huge dog, and the one with which she opens.

Bernie and Walker
Milwaukee Wisconsin

These two lads pack a big comedy wallop. They toss plenty of wisecracks back and forth and act nonsensically in general. The one is also good for some chords on the piano assisted by his partner dusting the boards at tap dancing.

Ray and Harrison
Baltimore Hippodrome

First they present a jazz song, interrupted by the man, whereupon they go into comic chatter. He does a novelty soft-shoe dance and she a burlesque toe ballet, the two combining in burlesque adagio work for the finale. They won many laughs.

Buddy Doyle
Baltimore Hippodrome

Doyle does his routine of songs, dances and comedy chatter in blackface. He sings "But I'll Take Potato Pancakes." Best are the imitations he gives, asking the audience to recognize them, including Crosby, Downey, Amos 'n' Andy, and Cantor. He also sings "When the Clouds Roll By."

Al Bayes and Harvey Speck
Detroit Fox

This pair delivers an acceptable brand of song, dance and patter.

REVIEWS OF STAGE ACTS

DANCERS

Armida
New York Capitol

Armida, the Mexican star and a protege of Gus Edwards, offers a pleasing routine of singing and dancing. Her feature, a "Bullfight" dance, was well received.—H. P.

Twelve Parisian Steppers
Baltimore Hippodrome

This troupe of six boys and six girls did several specialties in the tabloid version of "Fifty Million Frenchmen" and in the ensembles worked with the girls of the chorus. They did fast work and were applauded. Their big specialty was done at the opening of the second part in a hotel lobby set when they sang "Somebody's Going to Have a Party," with the girls as maids and boys as bell hops. Their next was with Clark and Barnett in "Paree, What Did You Do to Me?" in a novelty "drunk" dance.

Stone & Gibbons (6)
New York Palace

Assisted by a quartet of girls who dance well, this team offers a routine of adagio and acrobatic dancing which pleased this audience. Gibbons does well in an acrobatic bit, followed by Bernice Stone, who gracefully goes through a solo dance featuring a dive over the four girls. This act rates better than an opening spot.—H. P.

Art Frank, Vivien Peterson
Baltimore Hippodrome

Art Frank came on as usual in Civil War veteran costume as an old man in search of women and fun. He is joined by Miss Peterson in black, which she later removes, exposing black tights. They go into comedy chatter about the old man being as good as ever with the girls and then Miss Peterson goes into high kicking dance, Frank into eccentric dance. The two compare rhythm tap steps prior to the combination finale. The act gained good applause.

Buck & Bubbles
New York State

This colored team is one of the best entertainers of the type. Offering up-to-the-minute rhythm in both dance and piano, Buck and Bubbles intersperse their routine with comedy chatter which clicks. Their efforts were enthusiastically received.—H. P.

Carl Shaw & Co. (3)
New York State

Aided by a boy and a girl, Shaw offers a bit of clowning and acrobatic dancing which clicked. His dance, in which his partner is a dummy, provided a hearty laugh, after which Carl proves his versatility by singing "Who's Your Little Woozis" to advantage. Good entertainment.—H. P.

Lucille and Laverne
Detroit Fox

These two toe dancers give a performance free from the stilted grimaces characteristic of much of this type of work.

Jessie Draper
Denver Denver

A neat little specialty dancer, one who can dance with a lot of clothes on and get away with it. She is mighty limber.

SINGERS

Ben Alley
New York State

This radio star received an ovation, opening with "When Day Is Done," using a microphone throughout the act. In a pleasing tenor he sings "Home," "Paradise" and "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling." Alley encored with "Song of Songs." His radio popularity should draw the customers anywhere.—H. P.

Anna May Wong
New York Capitol

This Chinese screen star is brimful of personality. She opens with an old Chinese folk song, following this with a song entitled "The American Girl." Then dressed in a silk topper and satin evening gown, Miss Wong sings a novelty song called "Any Minute Now," gaining a nice hand. For a finale she thanks the audience in English, French, Chinese, German and Jewish. Darn clever the Chinese, especially this one.—H. P.

Henri Therrien
Milwaukee Wisconsin

Henri Therrien is a tenor who should click most anywhere. He made a hit singing "Cuban Love Song" and "Angela Mia," winding up with "Farewell to Thee." His voice has a highly pleasing quality.

Martha Vaughn
Denver Denver

She can hit the high notes, and sings pleasingly in Spanish. In company with Eddy Peabody, she does a neat tambourine number.

The Brox Sisters
Cincinnati Albee

These girls possess charming personalities, and offer a series of songs in a manner which leaves no doubt with the audience that their talents for harmony are natural rather than acquired. The act is dignified and refined, and will appeal to any type of audience.

Eddie White
Baltimore Hippodrome

His songs and jokes warm the audience quickly. He sang "I'm So Alone in a Crowd," "Making the Best of Each Day," "Second-Hand Mose."

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

TED CRAWFORD (Phoenix Orpheum) presented a timely solo which turned the minds of a large audience away from the outside temperature of 110 and incidentally earned for himself an encore and an appreciative reception. The solo, titled "Two Weeks With Pay," began with a cleverly worded parody on "Good Old Summertime," bemoaning the fact that since most people were too broke to take a vacation, he would take them places (in song) instead. First, those who wanted to go to the country were asked to sing "By a Lazy Country Lane;" those who wanted the mountains sang "Springtime in the Rockies." For the seashore, Crawford offered a parody to "Moonlight Saving Time," which wisecracked the local nude bathing going on in these parts, and he closed with the new hit, "With Summer Coming On." The hand at finish was so big that an encore was necessary.

CLARENCE LEVERENZ (Kalamazoo State), the popular "boy" organist at this theatre, offered two first-class organ novelties for this week, playing "It Pays to Memorize" for the first half and "Popular Melodies of the Day" for the last. The first solo was built up of the "Merry Widow Waltz" and was played in various styles. The story used as continuity concerned an organist and music director who knew only one number and would change its tempo and style while traveling. Though the audiences were small the first half of the week, enthusiastic "hands" were given Leverenz. For the last half, Leverenz offered his own individual styles for each of the popular tunes. This proved a pleasing contrast to the previous solo and evoked much appreciative response from the audience. Numbers used, each being played in different styles, were: "Somebody Loves You," "Every Time My Heart Beats," "Lawd, You Made the Night Too Long," "Goofus," "My Mom" and "Paradise."

EGON DOUGHERTY (New York Astoria Triboro) further enhanced his usual good solo this week with a background of color film, projected on the wide screen. To this reviewer's knowledge this particular stunt has never before been done and it certainly added to the effectiveness of the solo. Comedy and seriousness were both incorporated in the effort, the comedy first, with Dougherty taking a firm stand on the "wet plank," and playing "Good Bye, Mr. Dry," and special lyrics to "Let's Get Together and Repeal It," the audience lustily joining in. For the serious part, Egon played in concert style, "Lullaby of the Leaves," "Call Me Darling," "Why Dance" and "Paradise." Each of these numbers had the film as background. For the grand climax, a film of parading soldiers was used as the audience sang "I Love a Parade." The popular Dougherty received the most enthusiastic reception ever accorded him at this house.

ROBERT G. CLARKE (Detroit Hollywood) after five years of exceptional success at this console plays a farewell solo. The change of policy will separate him from the audience with which he has become a favorite for at least the duration of the summer. Clarke's final solo, under the title, "Kiddin' On The Keys," includes "You Try Somebody Else," "Dream Sweetheart," "In the Gloaming by the Fireside," "Was That the Human Thing To Do" and a depression parody of "The Million Dollar Baby From the Five and Ten Cent Store." The audience responded with its usual rousing heartiness.

ADA RIVES (New Orleans State) gets a nice hand on her solo "Love." The introduction is a parody of "Whoozis," parody on the "Farmer in the Dell," then gets down to a song slide with "Somebody Loves You." A Scotch Lassies number to the "Highland Fling" follows, getting laughs. Then comes Miss Rives's microphone announcement that if love doesn't run smoothly why "Can't We Talk It Over?" Then "Love You Funny Thing." A short solo, popular with the audience and well lighted.

ARSENE SIEGEL (Detroit Fisher) wraps his pleasant swinging rhythm around a solo entitled "A Singing Marathon," including such favorites as "Sing A New Song," "Lawd, You Made The Night Too Long," "You're My Everything" and "Whistling In The Dark." One version of "You're My Everything" carried a parody lyric in the manner of 12th Street (local colorful Jewish neighborhood). "Night Shall Be Filled With Music" proved a splendid choice for a closing number.

THE TWO JACKS (Brooklyn Savoy). A mediocre organ presentation was offered by Jack Meyer, organist, and Jack, the Singing Usher of this neighborhood house. The solo consisted of the playing of a number of popular songs, with no thought given to continuity or novelty. The only originality shown in the entire solo was the two theme songs, "See You in My Dreams" and "Bye Bye Blues." The first was used to open the solo and the other to close. Jack, the singer, obviously has a nice voice, but forcing caused him to flat several high notes.

ARMIN FRANZ (Detroit Fox) admits having difficulty in finding a variety of fresh numbers, but succeeds in pleasing his audience twice a day nevertheless. His solo, "Animal Antics," a fanciful trip through a zoo. includes "Snuggled On Your Shoulder, "Auf Wiedersehn," "Somebody Loves You" and "Night Shall be Filled With Music." A second chorus of the final number, played softly, brought out a good audience response.

CHARLES DARRIN (Mansfield Straughn Hall) presented a novel solo which offered this college audience a chance to sing old and new favorites. Songs included in the program were: "Sweet and Lovely," "Somewhere a Voice Is Calling," "Don't Know Why," "Call It Madness" and "Concentratin' on You." Solo was enhanced by violin interpolations and by stunning lighting effects.

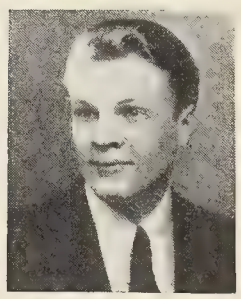
OVERTURES

MARK LEVANT (New York Astoria Triboro) and his orchestra recently presented an overture titled, "L'Italia," which met with the good approval of the patrons. Levant proved his knowledge of what constitutes audience appeal by incorporating into the overture five of the most popular and beautiful Italian melodies. The audiences of this neighborhood house, have learned to look forward to Mr. Levant's violin solos, knowing they will hear a master violinist. His own specialties never fail to get a great reception and it is he who is responsible for the popularity of this small but talented orchestra.

JACK SPRIGG (Cincinnati Albee) offers a special arrangement of Spanish tunes under the title of "Spanorama." The harmony is excellent in both the ensemble and the violin and saxophone numbers which are featured separately. Sprigg has shown marked improvement since taking charge of the pit a few weeks ago. The audience liked "Spanorama."

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox Concert Orchestra offer a decidedly pleasing overture for the third birthday anniversary with selections from musical numbers that have met with special favor in the past year. During part of the overture the O'Neill Sisters' talented kiddies, to the number of almost one hundred, fill the stage, presenting a dance and, finally, a patriotic flag drill on steps to the stirring music of the "Stars and Stripes Forever." Joaquin Garay offers as a timely vocal solo, "Lazy Days."

SAMUEL BENAVIE (Detroit Fisher) offers a novelty overture which presents sections of the orchestra in duets. A slide trombone duet presents "When the Blue of the Night Meets the Gold of the Day." "The Indian Love Call" seems a perfect choice for muted trumpets. The feature of the overture is a one-man saxophone duet of "Twelfth Street Rag."



HERSCHEL LEIB (Detroit Fox) dips into the elegant measures with an overture of "Hits from Grand Opera." He opens with a brief excerpt from the beginning of the third act of "Lohengrin," followed by the ringing notes of the "Anvil Chorus." For a violin solo Leib takes the spotlight with the intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana." The program sweeps to a satisfying finish with a ballet from "Carmen," a waltz from "Faust" and the strains of the Faust finale.

Tobis, Germany, To Handle Radio and Pathe Product

Radio Pathe product will be distributed in Germany by Tobis, according to a deal completed by Ambrose J. Dowling, export manager for RKO, who has returned to New York after four months abroad. The company will retain its London office. Mr. Dowling also closed deals for distribution in other countries.

Italian Firm in New Offices

Angelo De Vito, president of Cinema Productions, Inc., has moved the New York executive offices of the concern to larger quarters at 1457 Broadway, while maintaining its exchange in the Film Center building. The company is now working on "Love's Tragedy," second of a series of Italian-American talking pictures, in which Rosina De Stephano is to be starred under direction of Harold Godsoe.

Six for Warner in August

Warner will place six features in production during the month of August, with the first, "I'm a Fugitive," starring Paul Muni, probably starting the last week in July. The others are "20,000 Years in Sing Sing," "Central Park," "Lawyer Man," "Some Call It Love," a Barbara Stanwyck film.

To Extend Exploitation

South American exhibitors will gain the benefit of exploitation on the Mickey Mouse cartoons, distributed by United Artists, since Walt Disney, producer, has granted 25 manufacturers of Mickey Mouse articles permission to extend their territory to include South America.

Producers Name Clarke

The Producers Association on the Coast has named Victor H. Clarke, for many years identified with Paramount as general manager of production, in charge of labor matters. He succeeds John H. Gain, who has joined the Fox studio staff.

WHEN first announced, Eastman Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative was used chiefly with incandescent lighting. It was found, however, to be equally valuable under arcs. And now cameramen are finding it ideally suited to daylight shots, particularly when it is provided with the non-halation gray backing. Expert in every branch of cinematography, Eastman Super-sensitive "Pan" is an all-purpose negative, the advantages of which are felt all the way from the lot to the screen. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. STRANGE INTERLUDE

A ROBERT Z. LEONARD Production
Based on Eugene O'Neill's Play

WHEN THE OPENING NIGHT of a motion picture becomes a news-story of world importance, the industry may well sit up and take notice!

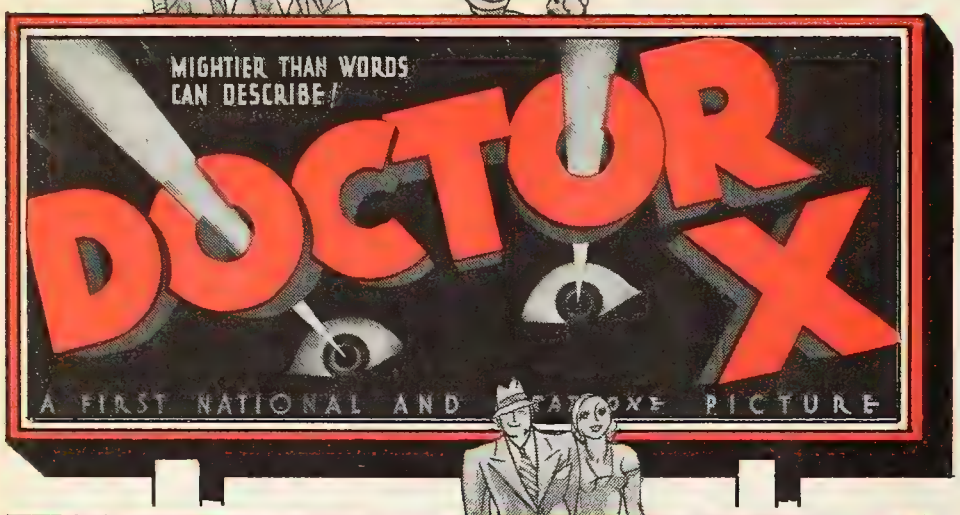
ACTIVITY VIRTUALLY CEASED on the night of July 15th in Hollywood when M-G-M's "Strange Interlude" opened a road show engagement at Grauman's Chinese Theatre.

HUNDREDS OF POLICE battled in vain with the crowds. It was early morning before the mobs dispersed and traffic untangled itself.

IT WAS AN EVENT heard 'round the world. An event that will be duplicated throughout America as the producers of "Grand Hotel" present another triumph worthy of M-G-M's undisputed screen leadership.

WATCH FOR THE ANNOUNCEMENT of "Strange Interlude" at the $2 Astor Theatre, New York.

LONESOME



for Warner Bros.

Don't let anyone tell you people don't have money for pictures! Warner Bros. have proved that THE DOUGH IS THERE IF YOU'VE GOT THE SHOWS! Ask "Winner Take All" and "Dark Horse" bookers . . . They'll tell you you can keep the crowds coming any time—in any weather—if you on Warner Bros. Pictures!

KEEP POSTED

AND "FILM DAILY" TELLS YOU WHY!

"Warner Brothers are just about setting the pace . . . and have been for some time back . . . on pictures with an ultra-modern touch that get away from the tiresome sophisticated angle, depending solely on dynamic and sensational drama. They are Modern stories, designed to jolt folks out of their depression-complex and make their visit to the theatre an Experience." —Film Daily, July 6th

HE ISN'T FOOLING ANYBODY BUT HIMSELF! (He poses as the Napoleon of picture business, but—)

Unsupported claims of "Leadership" by motion picture advertisers impress nobody but the ad writer's boss. Individually and collectively, the exhibitors of this country have gone on record with the statement that Warner Bros. are making more money for them than any other company! Trust real showmen to see through ballyhoo to the FACTS every time!

And here's THE LOEW-DOWN ON 1932-33!

Dave Loew grabs entire Warner-First National new-season product, including Westerns, Vitaphone shorts and trailers, for famous Loew Metropolitan circuit! Don't you envy any exhibitor who's set for the rest of the year with actual, tangible product like this—90% completed and definitely scheduled to Jan. 1st?!

Ties Up Town On "Keep Kool" Campaign

CAPITALIZING on the summer "Keep Kool" campaign, Palace theater, Jamestown, Pa., fostered a "Keep Kool" exhibit in the lobby and a full page co-operative ad on the current picture and the exhibit. Book stores and national distributors cooperated with the theater advertising refrigerators, summer furniture, men's summer clothing, camping outfits, sports clothing and equipment, auto accessories, air cooling units, electrical appliances, summer shoes and millinery, ice, bottled drinks, milk and ladies' summer wear. The merchants represented in the ad also donated their advertised products for the lobby exhibit, giving the theater a two-way plug on its "Keep Kool" features.—Palace, Jamestown, Pa.

Novelty In Wooden Footprints

DAVE CANTOR, manager Aberdeen, Aberdeen, Washington, pressed the largest local lumber mill into service as an aid in his campaign to exploit Joe E. Brown's latest picture, "The Tenderfoot." Cantor received a special novelty, consisting of a ten-inch wooden foot print in the outline of which was imprinted copy of the picture and play date. The lumber mill made the feet of thin pine wood, sawing them to foot shape and delivering them to the printer for finishing.—Aberdeen, Aberdeen, Wash.

A FILM FACT A DAY

The largest theatrical wardrobe in the world is claimed by Paramount, which has 40,000 costumes at its Coast studios.

ALONG THE RIALTO

● ● ● NOT LONG ago Sidney R. Kent stated that pictures had to get away from the artificial and the sophisticated .....and back to realism and the simple things in life..... and as far as Fox was concerned.....he was going to see that the public got what they wanted.....in "Congorilla," the epic of African adventure.....Mister Kent has more than kept his promise.....

* * * *

● ● ● HERE IS a picture whose realism and simplicity is so graphically presented.....transporting you back to the primitive things of life.....that it holds you spellbound .....going to Nature herself for drama, suspense, thrills..... it is Adventure in its purest and highest form.....not one bit of Artificiality in the entire footage.....it is life in the raw.....and so it got us.....and will get every man, woman and child that sees it.....for it reawakens the slumbering Primitive in all of us.....and stirs you with vague longings, desires, imaginings .....Pure Entertainment .....devoid of all the bunk and hokus of Hollywood artificialities.....

* * * *

● ● ● YOU CAN put it down in your little book..... that Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson have produced The Great screen saga of wild Africa.....we doubt that it will ever be equalled..... it calls lustily to that spirit of danger, mystery and adventure lying dormant to most of us.....lifts you right out of the commonplaces of everyday life..... you feel you are right there in the jungle with the Johnsons .....sharing with them every shock, surprise and tingling pulse-heat.....and we defy any fictional screen thriller to match it.....for its sheer quality of Satisfying Entertainment.....

* * * *

● ● ● IT HAS all the glamour of a fiction classic of high adventure told by a master writer .....with the added zest and punch of a tale that Really Happened.....for there is not a faked shot in the entire footage .....what makes it so gripping is its naturalness.....it unfolds without any effort or straining at effects.....

* * * *

● ● ● THE TRUTH of the matter is that Martin Johnson shot enough film to make a dozen features .....and Truman Talley, the editor.....cunningly built from this rich material a perfect Adventure.....a jungle drama that zips .....springs surprises every few minutes.....keeps building suspense.....one of the finest jobs of editing we have ever lamped.....

* * * *

● ● ● SUCH INTIMATE studies of wild animals we have never before seen.....and what suspense!.....when the gigantic rhino is about to charge Mrs. Johnson standing with leveled rifle a few yards away.....such natural beauty..... in gorgeous camera work of the jungle and veldt.....the gorilla sequence is a classic.....and also the Little People of the forest.....and their unconscious comedy antics..... bring more genuine mirth from the audience than from any alleged comedy we have seen in months.....and Martin Johnson's running comments are just right.....not a single wisecrack.....just describing each fascinating scene with simple naturalness.....the whole production is so darned Natural.....that's its Unusual Charm!.....

TIMELY TOPICS

A Digest of Current Opinions

How Does the Film Industry Stand?

EVERY one knows that film theater patronage is at its lowest ebb right now. At one time the country had some 20,000 theaters in full swing. Today something less than 6,000 are closed. At one time more than 100,000,000 people went to pictures weekly. Right now considerably less than 46,000,000 go to pictures weekly. Right there is a cut in revenue which makes the film budget so difficult to balance that all efforts to do it have come to nothing. Right there is the reason why so many old line companies are so close to bankruptcy that it takes more than sleeping powders to bring rest to aching heads. Right there is one reason why New York bankers wish to heaven they had never attempted to get into this crazy business. I know one case where something like $120,000,000 has been lent by a banking firm to one film company and I hear it rumored that if you were to walk into that banking house, plank down a mere $20,000,000, the institution would swallow its $100,000,000 and give you its film company with smiles! There are abroad more bad luck rumors concerning the industry as a whole than I can print here. They state that certain big companies are to combine to save their respective skins.—W. Ward Marsh, Cleveland Plaindealer.

Vol. 108, No. 5 July 30, 1932

FROZEN TIME

A PROVOCATIVE forecast was made by Mr. John Golden, celebrated Broadway producer, in a recent public address when he said that television and the radio would do to the motion picture what the screen has done to the drama, taking its stars, authors and audiences. The bright and shining Mr. Golden is obviously considerably more of a dramatist than a teleologist. The motion picture will do to television what it has already done to the radio, which is to say it will absorb and take unto itself any portion of any technical system which can improve or extend its scope. Again and again we must repeat that what we call the motion picture industry is in fact the amusement business using the motion picture mechanism, and all that pertains to it.

Now because the motion picture is an instrument of record and expression, freed of the limitations of time and place, for the re-creation of events, it is the perfect instrument of the amusement industry which is engaged in purveying re-creations of events so that the emotions of pleasure and excitement attendant on observing these events can be enjoyed and re-enjoyed, for a price, by audiences. In that the motion picture has the capacity to preserve and re-create, it is in effect a process of "freezing" time. Television and the radio have not this capacity and they can only eventually serve, as accessories, the motion picture with its capacity for an infinite number of re-creations and independent of time meridians. Radio transmission and television may perhaps one day serve in the distribution of the motion picture in their capacity to deal with distance, but still they will be accessories.

Television as an independent art, even in a state of perfection giving screen images equal to those from the film, could be about as much an invader of the drama and the amusement screen as the radio is an invader of daily journalism. One can get a considerable part of the news of the world, politics and the market by sitting up nights with the radio. But it chances that we have other things to do a deal of the time and largely we take the news in the morning paper at the breakfast table. Certain hours are given to amusement and theatre, too. Going to the theatre has at times been, and can be made again, quite a habit in these United States.

The motion picture theatre is important as some-place-to-go. The audience is always a part of the entertainment, unconsciously and automatically. The gregarious impulse involved is illustrated in the recent experience of a certain wealthy resident of Cleveland, who had just launched an imposing yacht. He suggested to a daughter who was being graduated in June that he would make her a commencement present of a trip to Europe on the yacht, with a select little party of friends. "Yes, Dad, that's fine," she responded, "but let's take them over on one of the big ships where there's lots of people."

X-RAYING ILLUSION

"THE Chicago 1933 World's Fair—A Century of Progress" is beginning to percolate publicity on a projected Hollywood exhibit, and at last accounts a representative of the concessionaires was on the Coast negotiating for co-operation, talent and materials. The publicity stories promise specimen sets and a daily demonstration of photographic and recording processes on stage, and the like. As we have somewhere said before, the motion picture has no important use for much more publicity as a machine. It could do with more publicity as an entertainment. Also an exhibit, in Chicago or elsewhere, which tends to take the public backstage is to be viewed as destructive. The motion picture sells illusion. Behind-the-scenes expositions of the screen belong in the same category as X-ray pictures of one's sweetheart.

A WASH-UP, NOW AND THEN

JUST before he set forth on his summer vacation, Mr. Walter Lippmann, able special writer and commentator for the New York Herald Tribune, under the title of "Crisis and Renewal," wrote:

> In this large sense depression and crisis are not the collapse of our system, but a furious purge. Conceivably a system can be devised which would be stable without accumulating an insupportable burden of vested interests. But until such a system comes into being there is in every society as we know it a fatal tendency to accumulate too many obligations, to let arrangements become rigid, to let those who have retired from active life acquire too large claims, to let the grip of the place holders become too strong, to let seniority and privilege block the advance of youth and enterprise. So there must come inevitably a time of liquidation.

While Mr. Lippmann is here considering the broad face of our social, political and economic civilization, not a little of what he remarks can be read in direct application to the world of the motion picture and its contemporary manifestations. It is, after all, another phrasing of some of the observations which Mr. Adolph Zukor made in Boston the other day.

THE exciting yearbook of Cinema Crafts, the organ of The International Photographers of the Motion Picture Industries, Local 666, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., brings to our desk basis for an impression that the motion picture cameraman has evolved into a real technician, as opposed to the rule o' thumb crank turners of yesteryear. Mr. Eugene Cour, the diligent editor, has seen fit to fill the pages of this crisp little manual with a compact array of technological data on sensitometry, light filters and acoustics in terms which would merely have alarmed camera crews in the pre-sound era.

My Job—What It Means

After all, usherette or executive, the basic qualities of service are identical. Responsible acts in the interests of any motion picture organization call for discretion, patience, good humor, and a keen study of patrons and their likings. Miss McCall studied practical sources, "kept her job alive," and produced a philosophy of life that is indispensable to the performance of a good job, whatever the field and whatever the goal of the purposed achievement. She recognized the trivial items of the day as all having an important bearing upon efficiency in the task as an entity.

MISS DORIS McCALL found that the lowly place as usherette was a high position of trust. But 18 years of age, a graduate of Santa Monica high school in June, 1931, she joined the usher staff at the Criterion theatre of Fox West Coast in August. When Carl F. Narath, manager, asked the girls to write their versions of the meanings of service, Miss McCall presented an article that could well serve as a creed to many a manager. She evidenced such a desire to be more than helpful that Mr. Narath made her assistant cashier, and she has more than merited that trust.

A JOB is only a job, and not a very good one, when it means simply the mechanical routine of doing what you're paid to do, and nothing more. Without interest, enthusiasm and cooperation with the fellow employees, an employee is no better than a mere machine. But an employee must be something more than a machine to be of value, no matter how mechanical certain of the duties may be.

One only receives from what one does according to what one gives. In my own job, which places me in constant, and sometimes trying, contact with the public, I try to offer something to patrons by my cordiality and willingness to please. In doing this, I remember my responsibility as a representative of the company I work for. The patrons judge the theatre by my actions. I must be discreet. I must be patient. I must keep my good humor, no matter how troublesome or inconsiderate the patrons are. Serious difficulties I can refer to the management, but I must remember that each trival problem consumes the management's time, so that I use my own judgment in such cases.

Most important, I try to hold a lively interest in my work, make my job alive, and be enthusiastic about it. Consequently I inform myself as much as possible about pictures and personalities, obtain as much information as I can, so that I may prove of assistance to patrons in person or by telephone, and, in some cases, to other members of the staff. To do this requires outside reading and study, but a job that is confined by a time schedule, and is forgotten, is not worth holding.

Many items, seemingly trivial, have an important effect on my efficiency. For instance, my personal appearance is a significant factor in my public capacity. I must use discretion in dress and makeup; I must strive to be as attractive as possible, without being conspicuous.

With the competitive theatres bidding for business, the efficiency and appeal of the entire staff of management and employees are necessary for a particular theatre to make a superior inducement to patrons.

My own individual contribution, then, is vitally important for the success of the company I represent. I must be ready to adapt myself to changes in conditions, and to meet the unusual as well as the ordinary problems, and to judiciously refer these to the management when I consider them of assistance either as information or criticism.

In my contact with the public, I may learn of patrons' wishes, and their criticism, and in this way I may be in a good position to make constructive suggestions to the management. If I am really interested in my work, and in the success of my theatre, I will assist in every possible way for the improvement of myself, and, consequently, of the staff.

In conclusion, my job is not simply an individual occupation to earn a salary, but a responsible function in an organization, which is only as strong and successful as its many members, individually and as a group.

SCOOPS ARE OUT AS 5 NEWSREELS GET SET FOR OLYMPIAD ON COAST

Exclusive Rights Given American Companies; Most Plan Wide Coverage of Events, With Foreign Markets in Mind

The industry's five national newsreels this week completed the massing of augmented camera and production forces in Hollywood for the opening and subsequent coverage of the Tenth Olympiad, the first to be held in the United States. Through an agreement signed on the Coast on Monday between the Motion Picture Producers Association, represented by Fred Beetson, and the International Olympiad Committee, the five American newsreels are given exclusive camera rights to the 16-day sports events, which open Saturday.

Their joint participation will be marked by the total absence of "killing" competition in the distribution of prints, both here and abroad. There will be no "scoops," principally because of the costs and their relation to economic conditions. Wholesale airplane deliveries are out.

The newsreels will turn over to the Committee a complete pictorial record of the event for international sports archives. The agreement provides for a lapse of 90 days before the duly accredited newsreels may use the shots for other than newsreel purposes. They are not permitted to release specials and all material gathered must be screened within 24 hours for the hundreds of contestants in Olympic Village, for their study and inspection so that each athlete will be able to see his current performance screened on the morrow in time to try to overcome any athletic inefficiency.

Restricted to Official Cameramen

No photographers other than official cameramen and assistants of Paramount, Universal, Fox and Hearst Metrotone and Pathe newsreels will be permitted to photograph any of the numerous events, either for subsequent dramatic or personal use, or for news or any other purposes. The number of cameramen is limited at the preliminaries and only one sound truck will be allowed to shoot the finals. About a half-dozen silent cameras may be used in addition from the grandstands and various stadia to gather "atmosphere" and background shots. Hollywood studios which had planned to shoot a few miles of stock shots are ruled out.

The agreement between the International Olympiad and the newsreels was worked out on the Coast and agreed to in principle in New York, Mr. Beetson handling details in Hollywood.

While there exists a slight difference of opinion among the newsreel organizations regarding the actual news importance to theatres, most of the companies plan to cover the affair on an elaborate pictorial scale. The principal reason for this is the wide distribution offered in foreign countries because of the participation of athletes from the respective countries. The Fox Movietonews organization, which will also cover for Hearst Metrotone, dispatched a special crew to Hollywood last week from the home office in New York. Film editors went along, but cutters will be recruited from the studio. Universal refuses to take the affair seriously, while Pathe was "undetermined" as to what extent it would participate. Paramount is all set for heavy activities.

Because of the wide diversity of the 135 events scheduled, which include many phases of equestrian sports, track and field athletics, boxing, cycling, fencing, field hockey, gymnastics, modern pentathlon, shooting, swimming, diving, water polo, weightlifting, wrestling, and yachting, it will be highly impractical for any one company to cover everything. There are nine water courses, stadiums, fields and centers designated for simultaneous preliminary performances, although it is expected there will not be much difficulty in covering all of the finals, which will be staged consecutively.

Foreign Market in Mind

The newsreels had the foreign market in mind principally when they decided to concentrate on a complete pictorial presentation rather than on a spot news highlight coverage. They will play heavily to those foreign countries which take their Olympiads seriously and there will be plenty of time for each reel to reach New York with prints for simultaneous shipment to Europe because there are no fast express steamers scheduled to sail until several days following the finals in mid-August. It is planned to send bulk material abroad, with orders to branches in the principal countries to edit carefully for local appeal.

While the actual photographing of these many-sided competitions presents its complications, the editing and distribution of negative and duping prints for foreign countries represents one of the most perplexing problems ever to devolve on a newsreel staff.

Every foot of acceptable negative shot must subsequently be considered from over 40 different foreign editorial viewpoints. For instance, if Lord Burghley wins the 110 meter hurdles, the negative of this shot must be immediately duped for shipment as a special to every part of the British Empire, and then if the event is important enough, it must be considered for every national release, here and abroad, because of the competition of other reels. At the same time, if John Doe wins the weightlifting contest for Paraguay, obviously his victory means more there than anywhere else.

Costs of covering the 16-day sports affair to the individual newsreels vary. Fox says it will spend $50,000 on the combined Fox-Hearst efforts. On this basis, it should exceed $100,000 for the group. Early estimates indicate that a minimum of 1,000,000 feet of negative will be used by the five companies, costing $30,000. Print costs are in addition.

TICKET STUBS— AND AN ALIBI

Harry Palmer, manager of the Princess theatre, in Bloomington, Ind., in a unique manner saved a Cleveland resident from a serious charge of implication in what appeared to be a gangster murder. The suspect's car was found by the Cleveland police near the scene of the murder, but the suspect insisted he was at the Princess theatre during the time the murder was supposed to have taken place, and produced a ticket stub to prove it. A detective checked with Mr. Palmer, who consulted his records and was able to substantiate the story, providing the suspect with a perfect alibi.

Tax Measure Is Recalled by Indiana Legislative Group

The judiciary committee of the Indiana state legislature has recalled the Wilson bill, designed to place an admission levy of 10 per cent on theatre admissions. The chairman of the committee is quoted in the Indianapolis News as saying the bill was reported to the legislature by mistake.

It is believed that the committee desires to reconsider the measure in view of considerable opposition which developed throughout the state. The newspaper also quotes the chairman as saying the bill may be shelved until the legislature adjourns. The tax would have been retroactive to January 1, according to the measure.

California Theatres Faced With a 5% Admission Tax

Members of the Independent Theatre Owners of Northern California have received a bulletin urging them to cooperate in an effort to defeat a proposed measure imposing a five per cent admission tax on all theatres in the state.

The bill will be introduced in the state legislature next January. The bulletin said in part: "If such a bill were ever passed it would stay on permanently."

Central Call Bureau For Writers and Directors

Members of the Motion Picture Producers Association in Hollywood will inaugurate a central call bureau for writers and directors, in addition to the bureau now operated for players. This was decided at a meeting of all studio heads on the Coast Monday night.

The new bureau will collect data on writers and directors, give information as to dates when they are available. The service will demand that all directors and writers inform the bureau of their whereabouts at all times.

WILL the INDUSTRY SURVIVE?

by TERRY RAMSAYE

MR. SAMUEL LIONEL ROTHAFEL is such an excellent showman that it is always a joy to disagree with him. Just now he is in print conspicuously in many places as the leading publicity utility of the RCA-RKO-Radio-Rockefeller City project, and it is just possible that some current utterances are being made with a shade more of an eye for the printed page than for the industry.

Be that as it may, it appears that the esteemed Roxy went up to Columbia University the other day and made a considerable speech before the summer session students at the McMillin Academic Theatre. And, in the course of his challenging remarks, he remarked that the motion picture industry had under-estimated the intelligence of the masses, had shown a lack of creative genius, and had adopted an "ostrich psychology," predicting the while that unless the screen changed its views it was almost certain to become outmoded in our civilization. To survive, says Roxy, "the motion picture must give the public fine, wholesome, clean entertainment, beautifully done."

Now all that is very well, in a conservative sort of way, for Roxy to say, knowing so well what he does about the product and how it got that way. But this gifted super-exhibitor is assuming a considerable responsibility in his inference that the motion picture as the great mass entertainment, as the superseding art, can fail, that it can become "outmoded," that there is any possibility that it will not "survive."

Roxy really knows better than that. In his amazingly industrious career as a showman, he has seen at least two great dominant dynasties of picture chieftains rise and fall, without disaster to the motion picture as an institution. His charges concerning the product should be made against product and the makers and merchandisers of the product, rather than against the institution of the screen itself. The screen is so much more vital and persistently capable than his statements would make him appear to comprehend.

The question of today is not what the destiny of this industry is to be, but who and where are the men who will best serve the achievement of that destiny.

The motion picture is greater than any man or any group of men. Those who have variously endeavored at being the masters of the screen have continuously been proved to be but its servants, servants of varying degrees of success and skill.

Roxy is not alone in this restricted concept of the screen institution. It is all too commonly held by conspicuous figures in the industry that it is a business belonging to them, or possibly to their corporations or affiliates. Mr. Martin Quigley made forceful point of this aspect of the current situation in a recent expression concerning "the inner ring of Hollywood," which is just the most conspicuous survivor of a whole nest of rings.

The progress of the motion picture may now and then be temporarily retarded, special interests here and there may struggle against the tide of evolution, growth and development, but in the sum total the effect will be found to be transient and as unimportant as one dry season in the whole of the life cycle of a forest of Sequoias. One drought leaves its mark in one narrowed annual ring, something to interest the historical botanist, but a trivial element in the success story of the big trees.

In the presence, as factors in the industry, of the very interests with which Mr. Rothafel is identified is in itself charming proof that the motion picture, as a growing evolving organism and institution, knows no real masters. The Radio Corporation of America and its related enterprises, and other parallel interests, notably the Telephone group, are in the business of the motion picture by force of that fact. They have come into the motion picture to serve it with the radio valve, the photo-electric cell and the microphone because the screen required those devices to complete its capacity to "recreate events" to complete its utility as an instrument of drama. What was called the motion picture industry of pre-sound days did not invite these mechanisms or their makers and purveyors. In very truth every important figure in the industry, in any position of real power and authority in the status quo ante, was opposed to sound, foreseeing that it would come at great travail and price, which indeed it has. A few years before that the prior masters of the then existent status quo were violently opposed to the feature length drama, and only a few years before that the temporarily dominant bosses of the industry took steps calculated to keep color forever off the American screen.

No one can stop anything in the evolution of the motion picture. Delays and bickerings, important to special sectors of special interests, can operate for brief periods, but the screen sweeps on, working out its manifest destiny.

It is a manifest destiny only to those who will take the thought to consider and realize what the motion picture really is. The popular notion, even within the industry, is a pale concept that the motion picture is a thing unto itself, the result of an invention which sprang immaculate from the inventive mind of Thomas Alva Edison, with betterments by a sequence of supplementary inventors. And that is but the merest fraction of the fact.

The motion picture, sound, color and all, is precisely just the newest and most comprehensive instrument in the service of the art of record and expression. It is a direct lineal descendant of the primal forces which have given us all of the other arts, with all of which it has a kinship which has become increasingly manifest as the power and scope of the new instrument has increased.

This business is the amusement business, and the chief and dominant instrument of that business is the motion picture mechanism. No one can control or prevent its progressive career of service. Many may prosper by working with it, in the direction of its proper destiny and the purposes of the civilization that it serves.

The motion picture institution will acquire and assimilate, by forces as inevitable as gravity, all that can contribute to its logical growth, and, by various processes, such as bankruptcy, starvation and failure, it will reject and eliminate abnormal, non-constructive and extraneous movements and their agents with the completeness with which the carnivorous owl ejects pellets of indigestible fur and feathers.

Interesting evidences are immediately at hand for any one who will take his mind off the dollar woes of the moment to look at the product.

When sound, synchronously recorded on the film, fell upon the motion picture it was an impact upon a bastard art form resultant from the hybridization of the pantomime of the picture and the printed word as purveyed by the titles. The product was a great success, and because of the readiness with which the printed word component could be translated across linguistic barriers, it was world merchandise. No picture will ever again be perfect world merchandise if it dares to utter a word. The screen drama had to be founded and evolved all over again. The process is in progress, with tremendous improvements increasingly apparent. The talking picture is obviously, to all save the die-hards of silent orthodoxy, a vastly better medium, with powers all its own beyond the limitations of the stage, the printed word and the pantomime of pure picture. A lot of what in many industries would have been junked as laboratory experimental product has gone to the market, to the impairment, for the while, of the amusement business. In some industries the consumer pays for the research and experiment in the finally perfected product, but in the motion picture industry the public has to eat the spoiled biscuits while the cook learns.

Pointed evidence of the process is available in what is occurring in the newsreel field. The newsreels in the pre-sound days were vastly important components of the program and they prospered considerably. Sound well nigh destroyed the newsreels, took them from the fields of action into the halls of words, increased their costs and presently began to shorten their grosses. Sound, on a rage-wave, dominated the news screen. Now recorded sound, failing of favor with a public which cares neither to read from nor to listen to nameful persons full of words, is failing now of favor within the industry, too; so newsreel technique is evolving in such a manner as to subjugate sound's inane verities to the requirements of that sort of current record which contributes to entertainment.

Again, in the field of the expeditionary picture some curious phenomena of impact are to be observed. The microphone and cumbrous sound camion have gone to the jungle and there failed at stalking big game with six-ton equipment. In turn the jungle has been brought into the bamboo compound and the Hollywood studio and the adventurer has become a lecturer, a Burton Holmes-in-the-can. There is less realism and more entertainment in the product in its present state, but there is progress. Sound will in time be found to have endowed the picture of exploration and adventure with an importance that it never enjoyed in the silent days.

All of these processes are inherent in the nature of the medium and the evolutions are in the main less than conscious. No few of the better applications of sound have come from the expedients of concerns which could not afford to follow costly but erroneous precedent. Ever the picture outgrows and eludes those who would be its masters.

Possession of a technology is, most conspicuously in the case of the motion picture, never warrant for the assumption of the possession of a product. Consider how briefly Thomas A. Edison maintained control of the motion picture—not even until it got from the peep show to the screen—and how the Patents Company was defeated in a course of monopoly, not in the courts at all, as is so often contended, but by sheer force of the motion picture outgrowing its assumed masters.

Neither inventions, nor patents, nor real estate bedecked with steel and stone are of real avail in the multiple endeavors to anchor the motion picture with its treasure cargo in anybody's snug harbor. Piles on Broadway and circuits of costly theatres, in the face of today's figures, avail nothing. Over in Radio City new piles of imposing stone are being reared against the sky with a vast chatter of hammers—again a physical endeavor to build an anchorage for a custodianship of the art and commerce of the motion picture.

The commercial story of Radio City may or may not prove important. But that extraordinary structure may well prove an important contact point, a crucible of fusion between the arts. It may be that there in that mechanical Babylon there will be given added impetus to the processes now in progress by which the living growing screen is taking to itself all that matters from the dying stage, the dead opera, and the sleepwalking art of music.

The other older, ancestral and related arts of expression will in varying degrees survive, in terms determined by their sheer utility. Most of them, like painting and the opera, will linger in about the same relation to the mass public that the horse show has to metropolitan transportation, surviving in the field of sport and society sheerly by force of tradition.

Mr. Rothafel need have no alarms. The motion picture will survive.

Sees Too Many Theatres Open

The trouble with the theatre business today is not that fewer people are going to pictures, but that there are too many houses, according to H. M. Newman, general manager of Universal Theatres, in Portland, Ore.

"While attendance at the films has undoubtedly fallen off since 1929, the decrease has not been more than 20 per cent at the outside," declared Mr. Newman, whose headquarters are in New York.

"There have been statements recently in the newspapers, that the daily attendance has declined 4,000,000 a day in the theatres of the country. I do not believe this. People are still going to motion pictures, but they are more scattered, because of the tremendous increase in seating capacity of the houses in every town.

"Another thing which has aggravated the situation, particularly for the large theatre circuits, is the tendency toward building elaborate and luxurious theatres, the magnificence of which makes the ordinary working man hesitate to come in," said Mr. Newman.

"The Universal company is going out of the theatre business as rapidly as possible. They are selling and leasing their houses everywhere and eventually will confine their efforts entirely to the production and distribution of films," declared Mr. Newman.

Academy Directors Shift Voting Method for Awards

Directors of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, on the Coast, have decided upon several changes in the method of voting by members on the achievements of the year. Eight instead of three productions will be placed in nomination by producers. In addition, a company will be permitted to enter more than one, but not more than three persons for individual honors. The directors also instructed the awards committee to consider special awards for music, short subjects and foreign productions.

RKO Calls for Payment

Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation has called for payment on August 22 of a 75-cent installment on each $5 principal amount of debentures, payable on part-paid certificates as to registry on July 23. An interest payment from June 1 to August 22 of one cent for each $5 principal amount will be due at the same time. Transfer books are closed from July 23 to August 23.

Resolution Halts Service Cut Plea

Attempts of the national executive committee of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to confer with executives of Electrical Research Products on an MPTOA proposal for lower service charges on ERPI reproducers, hit a snag last Friday when Electrical Research officials refused to discuss a reduction because, they said, the MPTOA a few days earlier, had evidenced an antagonistic attitude towards ERPI.

At a conference in Atlantic City on July 18 and 19, the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, an MPTOA affiliate, adopted a platform with 11 planks, number ten of which reads, in part: "We urge the MPTOA and Allied States Association to cooperate in any legal action aimed to break down the monopolistic control of Western Electric and its subsidiary, ERPI."

It is because of this plank that ERPI refused to arrange a conference with the national committee. Executives at headquarters of the electric refused to say whether a further reduction to those already made is a possibility.

The committee also decided to promote public relations to combat "the growing danger" of local censorship.

DEFINITE SETTLEMENT DUE IN CLEVELAND SUIT

Hays Is Twice Recalled from Coast Trip Before Negotiations Terminate; To Reduce Local First-Run Protection

Official announcement is expected soon of the successful conclusion of negotiations pointing toward a settlement of the protection suit filed several months ago by Cleveland independent exhibitors against national distributors. Since last week negotiations for an adjustment of differences over zoning, protection, "two-for-one-sales," ticket concessions and admission prices in the Cleveland zone were called off again, and for at least the fifth time they were resumed.

Details of the settlement which is now being worked out will be made known to the industry within one week, according to Gabriel L. Hess, counsel for the MPPDA. From sources at Cleveland, it was reported that the agreement will reduce first run protection in that town from the present period of 42 days to 36 days, and will also permit subsequent run theatres to reduce admissions five cents without losing their protection classification, in the event the Loew houses also reduce their scale by the same amount.

Theatres in Cleveland playing double features and two-for-one admission policies will automatically lose their availability dates and go back to the 63rd day, it is understood, while interpretation of Cleveland protection in accordance with the agreement will be determined by arbitration between exhibitors there and distributors. This arbitration, it is reported, will not cover contracts, the agreement providing for a second arbitration plan covering contracts and general trade practice, it was said.

Mr. Ed Schiller, of Loew's, said on Wednesday that neither party has "won" anything, both merely adjusting differences and "evils" which existed on each side. He said that some of the stipulations set forth above are correct, and others were not, but he would not say which. Mr. Hess denied the whole of the Cleveland report.

Early last week Samuel Horwitz, Cleveland attorney, and counsel for the complaining 80-odd exhibitors, reached a tentative agreement with counsel for the distributors and the MPPDA. A contract was drawn setting forth the terms of the settlement and for a time it appeared as if the suit would be brought to an amicable out-of-court conclusion.

However, negotiations fell through overnight and on Thursday Mr. Horwitz made it plain that he would resume the taking of depositions early on Friday morning. It was understood that Will H. Hays, president of the MPPDA, would be one of the first witnesses.

Mr. Hays had made a special trip back to New York from conferences with producers in California in order to be on hand on Monday, July 18th, for the taking of depositions, but in view of what seemed like certain settlement, he again departed for the Coast on the following Wednesday. In the interim, negotiation were disrupted and a wire was sent to Mr. Hays en route to the Coast to return again to New York for testimony.

Mr. Horwitz, holding a Federal court order, began to take depositions on Friday, but these were interrupted when the defense refused to turn over certain books and records. Immediately the Cleveland attorney marched the entire line of defense into Judge Goddard's District Court, where the case rested pending the arrival of Mr. Hays.

On Saturday morning Mr. Hays and Mr. Horwitz were closeted in an ante room of the Bar Association on West 44th Street. Conferences lasted for many hours, during which negotiations for a settlement were resumed. Sunday, Monday and Tuesday were set aside to "brush up" details of the out-of-court adjustment, the text of which will officially be made known soon.

Originally begun early this year, the Cleveland monopoly suit made indifferent progress up to late April, at which time six independent Cleveland exhibitors withdrew from participation in the action, asserting that they had never authorized use of their names as parties to the suit. Immediately following these withdrawals, Samuel Horwitz, attorney for the complainants, who was to have commenced the taking of testimony by deposition in New York at the time, interrupted his activities and returned to Cleveland.

Reports of attempts to effect an out-of-court settlement of the complaint ensued thereafter, and some progress toward this end was made during succeeding weeks. Six weeks ago, however, Mr. Horwitz was credited with stating that negotiations to reach an amicable settlement "were definitely and finally off" and that he would resume the taking of depositions in New York at once. On four subsequent weeks, however, reports emanating from Cleveland, and giving Mr. Horwitz as their authority, held that new attempts to effect an out-of-court settlement would be made, each of which was closely followed by a new announcement that all such negotiations "were definitely and finally off."

Disaster Narrowly Averted On Universal Expedition

A message, by wireless from Umanek, Greenland, to Berlin, from where it was cabled to the Universal home office, records briefly a dramatic story of a plane crash, an exploding iceberg and heroic rescues amid the ice, where Universal's "S. O. S. Iceberg" is being filmed by an expedition under the direction of Dr. Arnold Fanck.

Ernst Udet, pilot, was flying low, according to the message, when his motor failed and the plane plunged into the sea. Eskimos rescued him, but the plane was lost. Later, Dr. Fanck and assistants were established with camera equipment on an iceberg, when the ice mass exploded, throwing the men and equipment into the water and so shaking the ship that several were thrown overboard. No lives were lost, but certain valuable camera equipment was destroyed.

Planned French Quota Disturbs U. S. Producers

American producers are seriously disturbed by the proposed French quota directed against American motion pictures, which appears likely of passage, though it is not yet law. The quota, as proposed, would limit the number of American pictures which may be imported into France to 200 a year, and would require that all "dubbing" of French dialogue he done on French territory, which fact is considered the most serious from the point of view of the American producer. The decree would be retroactive to July 1, and run through June 30, 1933. Certain estimates indicate that such a decree would seriously threaten 90 per cent of the American film business in France.

According to an official of the MPPDA in New York, the French producers' association is chiefly responsible for the threatened quota. The exhibitors of the country, he said, have consistently voted against a quota, but the producer group is the stronger in the country. The proposed decree, according to this official, was referred to the Cinema Control Commission, which in turn sent it to the Minister of Beaux Arts, who generally handles film matters. The measure then went to the Minister of Education, cabinet member, who returned it to the Minister of Beaux Arts, presumably for reconsideration. It is understood that that is the present state of the proposed legislation.

The MPPDA official pointed out that the French government and the United States ambassador to France concluded an agreement last spring, whereby France would not levy any quota against American goods without first consulting the American trade involved, and permitting an opportunity for discussion. No such opportunity had been given American film interests, the official said, and consequently the imposition of a quota against American films at the moment would in reality constitute a direct violation of the trade agreement entered into last spring. Up to July 1, the United States was not included in the French quota law, which applied only to those countries which had quota regulations against French products.

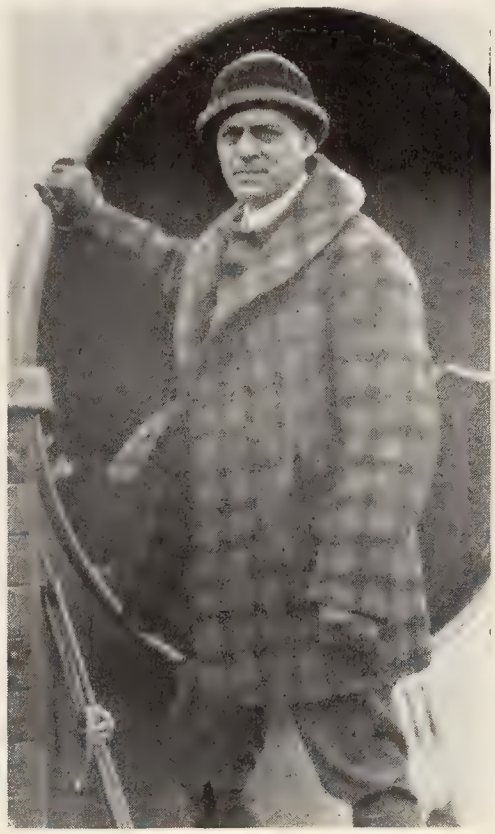
It is proposed to provide for a 1933 quota of not less than 7½ per cent British films and 50 per cent new reel films in the Cinematograph, or British films, bill to be introduced at the next session of the legislative council of the crown colony of Trinidad and Tobago.

Friedland Replaces Szekler

Max Friedland has been appointed Universal general manager in Europe, replacing Al Szekler, who will return to his former post as manager of the Brazil territory for the company. Friedland had been attached to the Berlin office.

Circuit Moves Headquarters



The general offices of the Dickinson circuit will be moved August 1 from Kansas City to the Dickinson Theatre, Lawrence, Kans., as an economy move.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

AT OPENING. The intrepid Martin Johnsons, husband and wife, at the New York Winter Garden for the opening of their latest adventure in the depths of Africa, "Congorilla," Fox release.

NORTHWARD, HO! On way to a cool country, but for work instead of a July vacation. W. S. Van Dyke will direct the MGM production of "Eskimo" in Alaska. He is shown aboard the Nanuk.

VISITS STUDIOLAND. Joe Weber, president of the American Federation of Musicians—friendly enemy of sound films—on the "Blondie of the Follies" set at MGM, with Marion Davies as hostess.

WELL MET. As Unka Merkel and Gean Hersholt, MGM featured players, arrived the other day in New York for a brief respite from the labors of the studio. And as they were met by Armida, also screen player, and Abe Lyman, well known orchestra leader.

SANS HORSES. Nevertheless, they are shown at a horse show, the recent Fairfield exposition at Westport, Conn. They are Mark A. Luescher, Radio City publicity executive; Mary Aileen Luescher, Mae Murray, Betty Luescher and Pat Powers, head of Powers Productions.

MICKEY PLAYS HOST. The most famous of the Mouse family receives a visitor to his new home, United Artists, as Mario Luporini arrives for conferences. Luporino is United Artists representative in Italy, and Mickey is a new star for his 1932-33 list.

MILESTONE. (Above) On the way to Eternity. George Stone, as Berg in World Wide's version of the stage play, "The Last Mile," prison story.

RE-SIGNED. (Left) Irene Dunne, who has been given a new contract by RKO Radio, following completion of her latest film, "Thirteen Women."

THE REAL THING. As it happens, a pose for a screen production. But after all, they are betrothed, are John Gilbert and Virginia Bruce. They appear together in Gilbert's new MGM starring vehicle, "Downstairs," which Monta Bell is directing.

NOTED VISITOR. A notable by right of inheritance, being the son of one of France's greatest historical figures. He is Michel Clemenceau, and is shown during a recent visit to Hollywood, with Peggy Shannon and Spencer Tracy at Fox, on the set for "After the Rain."

CONSIDER THE HEN, SAYS COL. LEVY

Industry, Too, Should Cackle, Declares Louisville Exhibitor and Merchandising Authority

by CHARLES S. AARONSON

"When the hen lays an egg, it cackles, to tell the world about it. When you have an egg, cackle about it. Let them know you have it."

With this homely barnyard figure of speech, Colonel Fred Levy, of Louisville, Kentucky, expressed his thought on the manner and method of merchandising the motion picture for maximum returns.

The Colonel may well be reckoned an authority on merchandising. In addition to long years in the exhibition field, in and about Louisville, and equally long years in the operation of exchanges, he is the owner of Louisville's largest men's clothing store, which, established by his father 72 years ago, has been operated by the Colonel, with considerable success, for the last 38 years.

That success, one is assured, has been based to a great extent on the manner in which its owner has "sold" his store to the public, and also its product.

"Tide," business publication which devotes its space to discussions of business acumen, for the most part based on advertising achievements, calls attention, in its current issue, to the method of advertising employed by Colonel Levy in Louisville. The magazine points particularly to an advertising conference resulting in a June campaign, a "white goods offering for men," which Colonel Levy notes himself as one of the most successful selling campaigns carried out by his organization in a long while. Other appeals were directed at the women of Louisville. They were told, in effect, that they could not afford to permit their menfolk to dress shabbily.

National attention of the clothing merchandising field was called to the achievement. The idea was novel, original, but, above all, it was splash advertising. It was showmanship applied to clothing.

This stroke becomes decidedly pertinent to motion pictures and their exhibition, when are considered Colonel Levy's remarks that "my mercantile business advertising is theatrical," and "it's a case of showmanship in both mercantile and motion picture selling."

Colonel Levy, in New York for a short but, one may expect, busy period, is conducting negotiations for establishment of a new circuit of theatres in his home territory. The number will depend on circumstances, he indicated, and the theatres will be in the general vicinity of Louisville. The Colonel does not plan a theatre in the city itself, but will maintain his circuit headquarters there. Though he has studiously retained his interest in the motion picture, and for the most part an active interest, he has not actually operated any theatres for the last two years, devoting the greater measure of his time to his clothing business.

He let it be understood that the current trip is a "motion picture" and not a "clothing" visit. Yet the conviction of the Colonel that merchandise is merchandise, whether it be from the Hollywood studio or the New York factory, is reflected in his temporary headquarters. The Colonel, genial, large and courteous, did his talking across a green felt-covered table in his very plain office in a definitely mercantile building on lower Fifth avenue. A space was cleared among groups of samples of cloth material, while buyers came in and out, and the telephone drew the Colonel's attention incessantly. The location is far south of New York's motion picture and theatrical "Forties." Amid the rush of appointments, however, time was taken for a visit to Colonel Levy's cousin, Adolph Ochs, publisher of the New York Times, ill in a New York hospital.

The chief motion picture interests which have continued to engage Colonel Levy's attention during the two years' interim are Principal Pictures Corporation, of which his friend Sol Lesser is the president; Big Feature Rights Corporation, in Louisville, and Educaitonal Film Exchange of Louisville.

"It's just a case of showmanship," said Colonel Levy. "Anyone can buy good product, whether it is merchandise of mercantile or motion picture variety, but showmanship is selling the product which will not sell itself. In the old days it was easy to make money with a big feature, but the exhibitor who can take a mediocre picture and make money with it—he's a showman."

"The industry in general and the exhibitor in particular are drifting away from the oldtime showmanship," said the Colonel. "This drift is due mainly to inferior merchandise. The exhibitor has not the product to sell. This industry will come back just as quickly as the exhibitor gets good pictures."

Colonel Levy returned to the "hen and egg" theme:

"Let's get back to where we began, with admission prices in keeping with the present time."

He explained that by "where we began," he meant the old manner and method of merchandising the motion picture product:

"Let us get back to the old tricks which made this business what it was—which made us what we are. Hit the public in the face with what you have. Hammer it into them. You have the egg. Cackle about it!"

Colonel Levy recognized the fact that at the moment the egg, on the average, is perhaps not all that it might be for cackling purposes, but he added, just as emphatically, that that is no reason to cease cackling.

Exhibition conditions today, according to the Colonel, are the direct result of inferior product and of disillusionment of the public as to many of their old stars and favorites. The Colonel implied at least something of exhibition value and strength in the star name, as, perhaps, the yolk of the egg.

He expressed a note of optimism concerning the product of the coming season, which, he thought, from preliminary survey, appears rather better than its predecessor. A note of somewhat grim humor crept into what was in a measure a qualification of the optimism, when he said: "It cannot rain always."

Colonel Levy indicated the remedy as a two-ply job. The producer must do his vital share in improving the quality of his pictures. The exhibitor must do his in improving the quality of his showmanship, his selling, with a return to methods perhaps old-fashioned but by no means outmoded.

A question was thrown at the Colonel: "How about the double feature policy?"

"Terrible," said the Colonel.

With reference to the double feature policy indirectly, but with particular thought, apparently, to the less powerful feature, the Colonel said: "Build up the program to make it palatable," and advocated the intelligent use of the good short subject as a program-builder.

The Colonel was asked regarding the types of pictures for the general run of audiences.

"Comedy-drama is the best," he said, "with comedy ranking a close second. Good, clean pictures are always the best. There is a world of material, without the necessity of over-sophistication, of salaciousness."

Of short subjects, Colonel Levy noted the greatest demand for shorts on travel and of an educational content.

The organ solo, said the Colonel, "is pleasant, and is enjoyed by the audience," as an addition to the motion picture program. The stage show, he added, is of doubtful value on the whole, chiefly from the economic standpoint, calling it for the most part too expensive.

MUSIC TEXTURE IN ROMANTIC DRAMA

O'Sullivan Traces Power of Melody to Transcend Optical Effect in Two German Films

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN
Author, Conductor and Composer

There is something alluring about the phrase "around the corner." It seems we are always just about to "turn the corner."

There are many interesting things just around the corner of that hyper-tungstened highway called Broadway, the Main Street of our Manhattan village which has recently become cacophonous with a synthetic jungle of roaring lions, laughing hyenas, vocalized wildcats and polar bears, in a maelstrom of Eskimo Igloos, South Sea Island huts, and other flora and fauna created by the Great God Wow.

However, there is a certain type of New Yorker whose nervous system cannot absorb the thrills afforded by the high-powered productions shown on the Main Street, who, perforce, is compelled to seek escape from the stark realities and grim tragedies of life in one or other of the little theatres "around the corner" where a more soothing divertisement is presented.

It is in these intime theatres just around the corner that some of the more meritorious foreign-made pictures, particularly those in which music has an important function, show to advantage. To that particular little theatre around the corner known as the Europa, in Fifty-fifth street, there has come a succession of European pictures that few would have the temerity to put into a big Broadway house, as they are not considered "box office" for the great American public. And yet many of these productions have had success in European capitals, some of them rivaling outstanding American successes in their relative box office draw in Berlin, Vienna, Paris and London. While few of these productions reveal anything startlingly novel in their manner of welding music, dialogue and picture, yet the majority display an intelligence, sincerity and sympathy in the handling of music that leads one to the conclusion that eventually these foreign craftsmen will produce something really notable in music-photoplays. Occasionally, as in the original version of "Congress Dances," they have done that very thing.

Of all Schubert's songs the Serenade is probably the most appealing. It is used as the principal theme in this delightful musical-photoplay built around the romance of the great composer and the Countess Maria Esterhazy.

The two most recent pictures to show at the Europa are deserving of particular attention from a musical viewpoint, one because it is built around a musical immortal, Franz Schubert, the other because of a particularly striking musical sequence.

The latter, "Brand in der Oper" ("Fire in the Opera"), now in its third week at the Europa, has at least one musical episode that is worth more than passing notice. This picture is a melodrama of German metropolitan life in which are introduced scenes from Wagner's "Tannhauser" and Offenbach's "Tales of Hoffmann." While the scenes from the operas are done with genuine German fidelity, and the vocalists enlisted for the roles of Olympia, Antonia, Nikolaus, Tannhauser, Wolfram, and so on, are excellent, the music up to a certain point in the story serves no more significant purpose than as a colorful and diverting background for the action. It is at the conclusion of the fire scene when the heroine (played by Alexa Engstroem) is carried unconscious from the burning opera house to the hospital, that a remarkable sequency of psycho-musical fantasy is introduced with startling effect. This is a tone-picture of the grotesque images evoked by the fevered brain of the girl, which conjures up images suggested by the tragedy of the fire and by the weird characters in Offenbach's opera which was being performed when the fire occurred. Double exposures in photography reveal in rapid sequence and distorted the sinister figure of "Dr. Miracle," the Mephisto-Svengali-like character in the "Tales of Hoffmann." The face of "Miracle" leers at her, then changes to that of a laughing demon, then to that of a violinist playing madly a tempestuous allegro, the figure dissolving into that of the girl herself as Antonia singing appassionato at the command of the hypnotist "Miracle," until she drops exhausted. Gradually the fantasms conjured up by her delirium disappear. The musical transcription of these apparitions, matching visual distortion with musical distortion, identification of thematic material with character, synchronization of rhythmical tonal sweep to visual action, is a tribute to the power of music to transcend purely optical effect and intensify psychic content.

The singers who contribute effectively to this production are: Jarwila Nowotna as Olympia, Irmgard Gross as Nikolaus, Hendrik Appels as Tannhauser, Paul Rehkopf as Landgraf von Thueringen, Gerhard Voege as Wolfram von Eschenbach, Warner Engels as Biterolf.

The story of Schubert's "Fruehlingstraum" ("Schubert's Dream of Spring"), which preceded "Brand in der Oper" at the Europa, deals with the romantic life of the composer of the Unfinished Symphony from that period when as a struggling young schoolmaster in a little Austrian town near Vienna, he falls hopelessly in love with the Countess Maria Esterhazy, who sponsors a concert in Vienna for Schubert, a performance which brings fame to the hitherto unknown composer. The Countess is only fooling, however, and the revelation of her heartlessness is just another stimulus for the outpouring of immortal Schubert lieder.

As the story of the great German melodist is unfolded sympathetically, the music of Schubert's most inspired compositions accompany the action and are woven into the texture of the romantic drama. The famous Serenade is used as the principal theme, while the Unfinished Symphony, the Ave Maria, Impatience, Marche Militaire and Hedge Roses are heard at intervals.

Karl Joeken, who enacts the title role, is the star tenor of the Berlin State Opera. His resonant voice and excellent musicianship, reinforced by a striking physical resemblance to the accepted portraits of Schubert, give verity to his characterization. Gretl Theimer, who scored in "Zwei Herzen," is the heartless Countess Esterhazy who sings the composer's songs and breaks the lover's heart.

There is a prophetic and ironic touch to the scene where Klebinder, the staunch friend and earnest drinking companion of Schubert, takes the composer's manuscript of "The Erl King" to the publisher, and asks fifty gulden for it. Refused, he insists on dramatizing the song in a rum voice. The publisher finally gives him five gulden for the masterpiece to get rid of the pest!

And "The Erl King" still survives. The "Unfinished Symphony" is still unfinished. A hundred years have passed, and poor Franz Schubert lives again in films. Five gulden in those days of yore represented about one dollar in U. S. money—approximately the price of two tickets to see the immortal Schubert redivivus on the screen!"

Offenbach's fantastic opera, "Tales of Hoffmann," furnishes the musical background for much of the action in "Brand in der Oper." It is while this opera is being performed that the spectacular fire scene occurs.

JOHNSONS' "CONGORILLA" IS GRAND

Winter Garden Offers Marvels of Africa With Laughs Galore

By IRENE THIRER.

"Congorilla," a Fox production, filmed by Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson and presented at the Winter Garden.

★ ★ ★ ★

All we can say is:

If you want an hour's worth of the most delightful entertainment, take yourself to the Winter Garden to see Mr. and Mrs. Johnson's "Congorilla." Take the wife, or the girl-friend, or the kiddies. Take everybody. It's a picture which will be loved by young and old alike, by ardent travelogue fans, and by those who don't usually go in for this sort of cinema.

"Congorilla" is a bolt of celluloid which simply can't miss. It opens with some grand animal shots; follows on with glorious scenic views, fascinating studies of African pygmies, photographed and recorded in sound; and climaxes with thrilling shots of gorilla families in their domestic life.

The early reels are devoted to excellent views of jungle beasts—emphasizing a gory scene in which a lion pounces upon a zebra, kills the beast and is joined in the feasting by a host of wild dogs and vultures. Mrs. Johnson shoots a roaring rhino and Mr. Johnson makes short work of another one. Then on to Ripon Falls to see herds of elephants and hear their natural snorts. To beautiful Lake Nakuru where hundreds of flamingos make a beautiful picture. The Victorian Nile offers hosts of crocodiles, twenty feet long, weighing upwards of 1,500 pounds apiece. And the hippos which graze and don't care much about meat, yawn through the day, while the cameras grind away.

To the Ituri forest—Pygmy land. Fifty thousand little savages live there. And are they funny! The reel devoted to them is the big laugh-spot of this thrilling, altogether scintillating picture. We see two pygmies trying to smoke cigars—a scream! A pygmy mamma croons a pygmy lullaby to her babe. A pygmy romance is followed by the camera—the "it" gal of the tribe acting coy, and the "he man" rolling his eyes and making merry. Mrs. Johnson turns on a phonograph. And how those brown midgets go into their dance. Even as you and I—on a highly polished dance floor. And, besides swaying to syncopated rhythm, they've their own special stick dance which is mighty interesting to watch.

The Johnsons distribute matches and soap. And to their amazement, the pygmies eat the soap. They give one little guy a rubber balloon. And is he surprised when it bursts after he blows it up too high! After witnessing a pygmy marriage ceremony we leave the Forest of Ituri and journey on to the gorilla country, which affords the smashing climax of the production. Gorillas are caught in natural sound—screaming like hysterical women.

The Johnsons trap a baby gorilla and a baby chimp, both of which are now in a California zob. At their journey's end they have eleven pets—most of whom cut up considerably in the most awful monkey-shines.

What a picture! We found it pleasurable to the four star degree every single second. See if you don't think so!

Give Truman Talley credit for an excellent editing job, and Richard Maeder honors along with Martin Johnson for fine camera work, while Lewis Tappan was responsible for the sound. Johnson's interesting voice, speaking intimately appealing monologue, is synchronized into the natural sound which was taken right in the Belgian Congo.

LET THE CRITICS TELL YOU WHY

Best product of Johnsons . . . this means plenty, for the Johnsons' product has rarely been topped. Anyway, it's grand entertainment and lots of fun.

Regina Crewe,
New York American.

The picture becomes highly exceptional. The scenes of the native dances and the tribal customs are among the most continuously interesting, fascinating and humorous I have ever seen.

Here is an exhibition out of darkest Africa which really speaks and which is well worth seeing.

Wm. Boehnel,
World-Telegram.

There is nothing in town more hilarious than the efforts of two of the pygmies to light the cigars that Mr. Johnson has given them. In their dances, their flirtations and, in fact, in their very friendliness these miniature tribesmen prove to be a highly humorous and likable people.

Richard Watts, Jr.
Herald-Tribune.

Congorilla effective. Instead of just seeing lions prowl and natives moving their lips you can at the same time hear the roar of the lion, the dialect and chants of the natives, the grunts of the hippo, the snort of the rhino, the swish of water churned by crocodiles, the beat of tom-toms, the screams of gorillas and the squawks of camels . . . .but most fascinating are episodes dealing with a tribe of pygmies who pull off a bit that would rate as excellent in any comedy studio.

Rose Pelswick,
Evening Journal.

I had a good time at Congorilla and the audience, judging from its audible reception of it, did also. It is truly good jungle entertainment.

John S. Cohen, Jr.

It forms a good model for the future for Mr. and Mrs. Johnson and all the rest of the camera and gun brigade . . . The photography is very fine and so —oh well, Congorilla as a whole is, too.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

THE passing of Florenz Ziegfeld reminded Mark Hellinger, one of the late producer's close friends and co-workers, of an incident which he says happened some time ago on the Coast and which Mr. Hellinger believes best illustrates the widely known Ziegfeld mode of living and love of luxury.

It seems that Mr. Ziegfeld found himself in Hollywood in need of ready cash. He owed one butcher $4,000 and varying sums to other tradesmen, according to Mark. So, one morning in New York Ed Wynn received a wire. It was a touching wire and came from Flo Ziegfeld. It told how he and Ed had been pals for years and, because he was in temporary difficulties, would Ed please send on $10,000.

Mr. Wynn dispatched the cash immediately and when the great glorifier received it, he used it to hire a private railroad car to take him back East!
